Had its foretaste of WAR on July 30. Screaming shell and shrapnel rained on the Lower City when a trainload of munitions on Black Tom Island was accidentally fired. Many lives lost and millions of property wiped out marked the released fury of the Genii of World Destruction discharging their tons of death.

IS THE GREAT COMPLETED PICTURE OF WHICH THE MUNITIONS EXPLOSION GIVES AN INKLING. IT FORETELLS WITH DEADLY ACCURACY THE CONSEQUENCES OF AN EUROPEAN INVASION OF AMERICA.

This is the biggest theme that the Exhibitor can present to his patrons. And it is unfolded with the rare dramatic skill and fascinating human interest that Thomas Dixon, who originated "The Birth of a Nation," alone knows how to impart. Victor Herbert's martial music forms a truly epical accompaniment.

"LITTLE EVE EDGARTON"
FEATURING
ELLA HALL and HERBERT RAWLINSON
FROM THE FAMOUS BOOK BY ELEANOR HALOWELL ABBOTT, AUTHOR OF "MOLLY MAKE-BELIEVE"

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS...[INC]

THE truly remarkable Photoplays released from week to week under the BLUEBIRD brand are produced according to a fundamental policy of "The Play's the Thing."

The first consideration necessarily, is a strong play. The second, a more than merely adequate cast. Stars, or rather actors to assume leading parts, are chosen for their ability and their fitness, not because of their salary, their press agent or their fictitious popularity.

This policy gives to BLUEBIRD plays what amounts (in good acting and enjoyable entertainment) to an all-star cast.

In the Saturday Evening Post every week ten millions of people are being told of the new and higher standard set by BLUEBIRD Photoplays, The interest aroused is reflected in increased attendance at theatres showing BLUEBIRD Photoplays and in the eagerness with which many other producers are watching this revolutionary movement.

PARAMOUNT PROGRAM

The Merger of Ideals

The combination of the Famous Players Film Company and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, and the formation of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation means much more than the coordination of the two greatest photoplay producing studios in the world.

Although the financial and property interests represented are enormous, there is much greater significance to the merger.

It is a merger of IDEALS—the principles that underlie the magic which years of success for the exhibitors have given to the trade-marks "Famous Players" and "Lasky."

The greatest of these ideals are PROGRESS and unswerving allegiance to the highest possible standard of photoplay production — a standard which "Famous Players" and "Lasky" created.

A Letter Which Hits The Nail on the Head

Addressed to the Editor of a Trade Paper

"Open Market—Always!"

"I HAD to take off Sunday A.M. to do this, but I feel that it is more than worth it, that is your stand on the Open Market thing. If there exists in the minds of anyone, that an exhibitor, particularly one not near an exchange, does not get buncoed about every so often, from film exchanges, I would like to relate some of my trials. From the best down to the worst ones the film business under its present policy is rotten at the core, and it will stay this way until we have open market.

"Every so often, I get tired of the kind of shows that are booked to us on regular schedule. I change them to the best advantage, and book in others that will give me a decent program for the week. Two times out of three I have made four times more money on the week by doing this, with an increased film rental of 30 per cent and with only five hundred seats. If they give us the goods we can play everything two days, and pay from $75 to $100 for the two days a whole lot easier than trying to pay $20 with a lot of inferior stuff."

SHIELDING SHADOW

Released Soon

WE HAVE DOUBLED PRICES

on

"The Shielding Shadow"

Pathe's Traditional Policy Is To Book Each Film For What It Is Worth

WE sent prints of the first few episodes of "The Shielding Shadow" to all our exchanges so exhibitors could see what they were booking.

WE knew how wonderful this serial was but the telegrams of congratulations from hundreds of exhibitors and from our exchange men were simply amazing even to those of us who had already seen this wonder serial.

ALL who have seen the first episodes agree that the fifteen greatest features on the market will not yield the business that this fifteen episode serial will yield. They say that it will increase by hundreds and thousands of dollars the profits of the exhibitor who secures it in each neighborhood.

IT isn't what a film costs, it is what it will earn in profits that counts. "The Shielding Shadow" is the most profitable film you can book—even at prices higher than we have charged for recent serials.

MAKE us prove it. Go into the projection room of the Pathé Exchange that serves you. Ask to see the pictures alone and in silence. See three, four, five or six episodes. Never book a serial until you have screened at least three episodes. Never book a poor serial. Only the good serial will pack your house in heat or cold, in wind or storm, in snow or sleet, as "The Iron Claw" and other Pathé serials have done. And remember, "The Shielding Shadow" is written by Geo. Seitz, the author of "The Iron Claw." He says "The Shielding Shadow" is by far the best of the two.

PATHE is America's greatest serial house. We have no competitors. We have never made a serial as good as "The Shielding Shadow."

WE spent far more money for the scenario, far more money for the production and we will use the two greatest newspapers in each city instead of one newspaper per city as formerly to advertise this serial. Therefore it will earn more money for exhibitors.

DON'T delay. The release date is September 3rd. All other things being equal, WE WILL AS USUAL GIVE FIRST PREFERENCE TO PATHE CUSTOMERS.

In this gripping two-reel "Mustang" drama, a girl of tender years captures the villainous mountain terror, and furnishes a climax to an intensely dramatic story. Jack Richardson, photodrama's most famous villain, has the title role, supported by a strong cast including Lizette Thorne, King Clark and others.

Directed by Murdock J. MacQuarrie Released August 18th

Ruth Ridley Returns

This is one of the most eloquent sermons against circumstantial evidence, presenting the case from a new and unique angle. It is a two-part "Flying A" drama, featuring Edward Coxen, Lizette Thorne and George Field in the important parts.

Directed by Alfred Hollingsworth Released August 14th

The Holly House

A three-reel "Flying A" drama, powerfully picturing a story of intense interest. Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh are seen in the principal parts.

Directed by Edward Sloman Released August 17th

Perkins' Mystic Manor

Orral Humphrey in the title role of this rousing "Beauty" comedy is positively inimitable. The manner in which mysticism is portrayed is ludicrous in the extreme—a riot of laughter-making comedy.

Directed by Orral Humphrey Released August 16th

Facts and Comments

THE price of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD sold on the newsstands will be fifteen cents per copy beginning on September 2d. The great increase in the price of paper and other added charges are responsible for this increase in price. There will be no increase in the rate of subscription. The reader who will send us his subscription not only will receive his copy earlier than the reader who depends on the news dealer, but he will save more than 100 per cent. in money.

IN last week's issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the reader will find a short summary of the "Annual Report of the British Board of Film Censors." The British Board of Film Censors, it is well known, is like our own Board of Review, an entirely voluntary institution and its orders and decrees are not enforceable at law. Because of its unofficial character and because of the cooperation of all the reputable producers and importers in Great Britain the Board has been able to accomplish a great deal of good. It is a Board of Censors in name only, for it advises the producer and consults with him in all matters touching his films. On the whole, the report reflects credit on the ethical standards of British producers, importers and exhibitors.

L. W. BROPHY, the well-known exhibitor of Oklahoma, suggests in a letter to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD that the government take steps to keep the motion picture theaters supplied with films in case a general strike of the railroads is called. He urges an appeal to the postal authorities and the Interstate Commerce Commission to allow films to be carried in the parcel post. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD will treat of this subject fully in its next issue.

THE recent Chicago Convention brought one thing into bold relief; the disgust of exhibitors at the fulsome and absolutely false praise which is so freely bestowed on poor pictures in a certain section of the motion picture press. It is thoroughly understood by the exhibitors and it is likewise thoroughly resented by them that these false and fulsome reviews of poor pictures are the tribute paid by the reviewer to the advertiser. Of course this is radically wrong. It simply ignores the rights of the reader who has paid his subscription on the understanding that he gets honest and competent criticism. Recently the amusing proposition was advanced that every picture, no matter how poor, ought to be tried out before the public, irrespective of the rights of the exhibitor who pays the freight. If the reviews in a certain section of the trade press were only fifty per cent. true the exhibitor would have his choice of masterpieces every day in the year. Bitter daily experience has taught the exhibitor different; that's why he resents the "puffing" of worthless pictures.

PUBLICITY minus circulation—it seems like a contradiction in terms. Just the same, there are men who look upon a page of "good publicity stuff" as a marvelous achievement, no matter where it is printed or by whom. The thinking men in the industry—producers, exhibitors and every other class—know how worthless this handbill publicity really is. At a meeting of exhibitors the other night a man sent a clipping from a certain paper to the secretary's desk asking to have it read. As soon as the name of the sheet was announced there were jeers and demands to "Cut it out." The paper in question was known to have next to no circulation. Nobody thought it worth while to pay any attention to it, although the article itself was all right and took up a good deal of the contents of the paper.

TO avoid all misunderstandings the MOVING PICTURE WORLD explains once more the conditions under which it will loan free of charge the reel "Better Babies," which the organized exhibitors have presented as a gift to the publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. The film, about a thousand feet in length, is to be loaned for use in connection with special programs run in connection with some civic enterprise of community welfare movement. It will be impossible to loan it out as a regular item on a regular program.

What Is a Play?

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THERE are no other authorities on this subject than the great critical writers, inclusive of successful playwrights themselves, and a study of those authorities is a broadening education, rather than a narrowing one. But if a scenario editor, or whoever is held responsible for play selection, is permitted to exercise untrammeled judgment in providing for screen production, he need not deeply concern himself with what constitutes a play. The trouble is that nearly all scenario editors are hampered by one or another restrictive policy, are not permitted to exercise the good critical judgment for which they are employed.

One of the foremost translators of foreign stage plays and critical writers, Barrett H. Clark, says that the play "may teach, it may demonstrate, it may antagonize," but it must "appeal to our imagination through the senses. 'Edipus the King' has been acted and read for over two thousand years, yet it deals with patricide and incest; 'Macbeth' is brutal and bloody, and yet it is played and read in every part of the world. Both plays please or they would not have survived. They are tragedies: they show great men struggling with forces which are greater than they and which finally dominate them. They appeal to the sympathies, to the imagination, and because of their literary form, to the esthetic sense.

"Both, as it happens, have lessons to teach, but that is because life has a lesson to teach; and a great artist in foreshortening and synthesizing his materials has brought that lesson of life into sharper relief and made it stand out in clearer terms than it does in the irrelevant and complex thing we call life. It is when the dramatist sees his lesson first and tries to shape a semblance of life to fit it that he fails."

That a play must please, that it must appeal to our imagination through the senses, that it must appeal to our sympathies, our feelings, our emotions, even that it should stimulate the esthetic sense, is required in advance of the lesson it may contain—such is the view of Mr. Clark. Clayton Hamilton agrees in a way, defining the play as "a struggle between individual human wills, motivated by emotion rather than by intellect," but his definition lacks breadth. It does not comprehend the struggle of human wills against political and social forces.

It is very often the author's fault that his story is turned down by one scenario editor after another. He may have a fine conception and clearly see how it could be worked out to interest almost any audience, but he has failed in structure and method to convey his idea to those who are called upon to decide favorably or unfavorably upon his work. That failure would probably be registered on the screen. So, in the bitterness of his heart, unhappy over the apparent uselessness of his hard labor, he becomes discouraged, even disgusted, before he has really tried out his native ability.

It is quite among the possibilities that he has had his "lesson" too much in mind, to the detriment of story interest. Then it may be too overwhelmingly a picture of struggle. Brander Mathews picks a flaw in the Hamilton definition. Admitting that the essence of drama is largely "a representation of the human will exerting itself against an opposing force," he continues: "The playwright has ever been seeking the means of presenting his conflict without admixture of anything else." He may only injure his story by the elimination of character study and all else not essentially dramatic.

Then, again, the author should realize that there are screen plays which depend largely upon treatment, although they may be among the most popular. Farce-comedy makes no pretense to merits essential in comedy—it may be a mere admixture of melodramatic incident and horse play, a fun maker without semblance of structure, a mere vehicle for some talented comedian. Or it may depend almost wholly upon the spectacular, the story a thin line of interest constantly broken up for the sake of large and impressive ensembles. Some spectacles have been very successful, though there is little doubt that they would have earned even more with intense story interest added.

Brander Matthews was even wiser than he knew, for he was not thinking of moving pictures when he said, "The dramatist will profit by his ability to reach the soul through the eye as well as through the ear." "In real life the action precedes the word, and it is sometimes so significant that the explanatory phrase which follows is not always needed." That favorite theatrical attitude assumed in pointing to the door is used in illustration, but Mr. Matthews has unwittingly indicated the greater subtlety of action replacing words in moving pictures.

That a playwright is one who can "project the truth he has observed in the form of his art" is the opinion of Thomas H. Dickinson, editor of "Chief Contemporary Dramatists," and his definition is certainly not lacking in breadth. The dramatist "must express in a human medium his observation of human things," according to Mr. Dickinson, "so he must be skilled as FEW ARE in human nature itself. Looking out over society, he finds floating abroad conceptions that are not formulated in text books, or outlined in social codes, but are diffused through society, and these things that he finds in society it is his business to translate into the formulas of his art, that through it there may be turned to society a reflection of itself."

Mr. Dickinson does not believe that the dramatist should actually reflect society to itself, but interpret it, present its meaning, solve its mysteries in one or another enchanting form suited to the medium through which he seeks expression. His idea, deep as it may seem at a glance, is shared by many strong novelists and dramatists of today who have said their say on this interesting subject, and can it be reasonably denied that a story lacks interest which solves any mystery of our existence?

It is almost impossible for any of us to get at the motives and causes behind what is operating for us or against us as individuals, why we are failing to attain our desires, why there is injustice, why there is wrong, even why we occasionally succeed, unless we are saturated with egotism. To reach the sympathies of an audience the dramatist must know something of what members of that audience have already enjoyed, suffered or thought about. It looks very much as though contemporary interest could only be roused by subjects and matter vital to the people.

While the arts of expression vary in form and method, there are certain general principles in them all so far as story substance is concerned. The screen story, like that of stage and print, is primarily designed to entertain and is largely social in its nature. It provides mental and emotional stimulus and refreshment of a varied character, and so easily wearied is an audience of repetition that the story should have behind it a measure of that rare and beautiful quality, creative genius.

Get the Public Confidence

By W. Stephen Bush.

NO BETTER motto has been devised than that of the Cleveland exhibitors: "Get the public confidence." No business and no industry needs more than we do the confidence of the plain people of the land. The motion picture belongs to the plain people. It is, we are happy to say, capable of marvelous artistic development, but nothing made by one man is too good for another man to see. The men who make or distribute or show motion pictures to the public must get close to the public and must be willing to take the public into their confidence. The impression still prevails in many quarters that the motion picture men are just a lot of "nickle-grabbers," as President Sawyer of Ohio is in the habit of saying. It is all right and it is indeed necessary to get the nickels and the dimes and the more elusive denominations. I am bound to say, however, that the business of the exhibitor does not end with the counting of the receipts. He must make an adequate return. He is just now much handicapped by circumstances I gladly admit; between the Scylla of the Program and the Charybdis of the Feature he has his task cut out to save his bark from going on the rocks. Nevertheless the responsibility is largely his. The public holds him responsible; the lawgivers hold him responsible; 90 per cent. of the criticisms launched at the motion picture is aimed at the exhibitor. It was and it is the public which has helped the exhibitor to realize both his power and his responsibility. He knows better than any other factor in the industry how absolutely dependent he is on the confidence of his public. I never go into a motion picture theater and watch the manager without feeling that consciously or unconsciously he is doing his level best to gain that confidence.

Now, it is all right to be courteous, for no success is possible without it; it is all right to have the place well ventilated, to have a fine lobby, to have attractive schemes of decoration, to have good music, to insist on good projection. All these things are needed in the plan to win public confidence, but the best and final place to win public confidence is on the screen. Exhibitors know that they win or lose with their pictures.

I am firmly persuaded that hereafter the exhibitors will have something to say about the pictures on which their livelihood depends. The convention at Chicago furnished some proof of that. I am very certain right now that if it depended on the vote of the exhibitors, the silly so-called vampire pictures would be voted out of existence. Producers in this business, I am sorry to say, are often deceived by surface indications. A heavily advertised vampire picture comes along and brings a temporary but ultimately fatal increase in the box office receipts of one or two exhibitors. A "vampire wave" follows; sometimes it's a little wave and sometimes a big one, but it subsides quickly in either event after doing a lot of harm to the reputation of the motion picture. No solid, permanent benefit or success is ever achieved with pictures of the vampire or other objectionable type.

Let us thoroughly understand this one fact: We cannot gain the confidence of the plain people with such pictures, but we can very quickly earn their disgust. This story was told to a member of the staff of the Moving Picture World by an exhibitor of experience and reputation: A regular patron of a suburban motion picture theater was seen walking up to his theater and suddenly coming to a stop. As he viewed the lobby display he was approached by the assistant manager, who hailed him familiarly and invited him to come in and see the show. The man shook his head.

"I didn't think I would ever see one of these vampire pictures in your theater," he said. "Why, I have seen a couple of these pictures down-town and if I see another I might begin to suspect my own wife."

We cannot gain the confidence of the public without pictures which will deserve such confidence. The exhibitor must have the co-operation of the producer. The most successful producer for the next five years will be the one who keeps his finger on the exhibitor's pulse, which generally repeats the beats of the public pulse.

Does Censorship "Protect" Us?

By W. Stephen Bush.

WE INVITE the attention of the advocates of censorship, Federal or otherwise, to the curious state of affairs that is developing in the interesting town of Seattle. A prominent film man in that section bought a picture which had been approved by the National Board of Review. Now they happen to have a little board of their own in Seattle, consisting of nine members. Two-thirds of this local board took a look at the picture and found it to be morally O. K. and artistically commendable. Now it seems to the humble intellect grinding out this piece of copy that if ever censorship was going to act as a "protection" this was its goldenest opportunity. Alack and alas!—on top of all this double-barreled commendation and this copper-fastened approbation there comes along a delegation of three women, overruling everything and everybody and declaring that the picture was perfectly horrid and ought to be stopped forthwith, vi et armis, as they say in an indictment. Sure enough, the distinguished Mayor of the city, coldly and firmly ignoring all previous decisions, sends forth the minions of the law and has the exhibitor who showed the picture apprehended, simultaneously threatening the aforesaid exhibitor with the municipal dungeon unless defendant consents to an immediate forfeiture of the tidy little sum of one hundred dollars. The legal machinery in Seattle works on principles that have made New Jersey famous for its justice. The judge before whom this matter is to be tried and decided is said to be none too favorable to the defendant. This, of course, is mere hearsay, for all we know to the contrary the judge may be an ornament of his rank.

However this may be, it seems to us that the exhibitor who has been arrested and threatened and who has now demanded a jury trial, ought to find himself surrounded by willing helpers from every part of the industry. He bravely and honorably has decided to fight the case to a finish, and he is entitled to the assistance, both moral and otherwise, of all the film men in that section, whether they are organized or not. We hope that every exhibitor and every exchange will rally around him in the prosecution of this fight.

It is gratifying to learn that the entire press of the City of Seattle is in hearty accord with the arrested exhibitor. What we want to point out in this case is the fact that censorship is not a "protection" against the exercise of the police power. Censorship does not anywhere, and, as far as we can see, it never will anywhere supersede the police powers of the state. The police power is inherent in every state and in every subdivision of the state and censorship cannot confine or circumscribe it in any way whatever. It is quite true that the exercise of the police power is subject to judicial review, but we all know that an awful lot of damage can be done before the courts get ready to interfere.

Of all the silly arguments in favor of censorship of motion pictures there is none worse than the claim that censorship "protects" the exhibitor against interference from other official quarters.

The Death of a Pioneer

THE passing of William T. Rock, one of the pillars of the old system, reminds many of us of the gigantic changes this industry has undergone since the early days. In the truest sense of the word Rock had been one of the pioneers of the motion picture. We know of none who antedate him in association with the screen and its works.

Rock possessed an almost intuitive sense of entertainment values—the one indispensable qualification for every practical and every successful showman. Time and again he manifested this rare and precious gift. He took pictures that had been given over for dead and breathed life into them. He proved in a most convincing way the importance of handling a picture and the value of real showmanship. His choice of a vocation in the world of amusements was in obedience to the talents Nature had endowed him with. He loved the work and therefore he became a master.

Having begun at the bottom, he rose to the pinnacle of his profession. No greater tribute can be paid to a man in the world of action, in which Rock loved to take a lively part and from which he has been removed much too soon. He was like most successful men, a relentless foe to those who chose to fight him, but as one of his friends put it, "an easy man to travel with." His integrity in business affairs was the result of sound principles.

In a field in which Fortune has always shown herself at her ficklest he retained what he had acquired. He never gave the changeable Goddess a chance to desert him.

William T. Rock was one of the great and notable figures in the industry and his premature death is deplored by a numerous host of friends and admirers.

Buyer from Australia Here

A. B. Hellmrich of the Co-operative Film Exchange of Melbourne Talks to World Representative.

H. B. HELLMRICH, the general manager of the Co-operative Film Exchange, Ltd., of Australia, whose head office is located at Melbourne, is now staying at the Hotel McAlpin, New York City, looking for a steady supply of good American features.

When seen by a reporter of the Moving Picture World Mr. Hellmrich told of a most delightful and interesting journey half around the globe. He came from Australia by way of New Zealand, Fiji Islands to Honolulu and thence to Canada.

"Australia," said Mr. Hellmrich, speaking of conditions in his native land, "imports 60,000 feet of film a week and all the big stuff comes directly from America. The small stuff is still bought in London. I am looking for a steady supply of first-class features and I will want about fifty-two a year.

Out of the 600 permanent motion picture theaters in Australia we supply about 200. Among the principal places supplied by us I will name Hoyt's, Lyric, Port Melbourne, Plais Cinema in Melbourne and the Australian, Kings, Dix and Baker, Alhambra and New York in Sydney. These houses and scores of others are of the highest type, as you can see by these photos." The photos exhibited fully bore out Mr. Hellmrich's statements, for they showed solid, attractive and thoroughly artistic showhouses.

Mr. Hellmrich said that the general run of programs in Australia consists of two features with two stars, one feature being about two or three and the main feature generally five reels in length. Australian exhibitors, he added, are generous and skilful advertisers. They use more space by far than the American exhibitor or his British brother. Exchanges featuring a particularly fine number will frequently buy a full page at rates comparable to those charged here. These "ads" contain the names and the locations of the theaters using the particular feature advertised.

"It is a common thing," said Mr. Hellmrich, "for people in Australia to read the big papers in Sydney and Melbourne just to see the ads of the great motion pictures." Mr. Hellmrich exhibited several pages to prove what he said. The ads were dressed up wonderfully in a typographical way and showed fine judgment on the part of the advertiser.

"I am going to stay here for some time, probably for a couple of months anyway, and during that time I shall make it a point to hunt up available material," Mr. Hellmrich concluded.

Max Linder Coming to America

Famous Old Pathe Comedian Has Been Engaged by George K. Spoor—Salary $260,000 per Year.

AN INTERESTING cablegram from Paris appeared in American daily papers last week to the effect that George K. Spoor of the Essanay Company, Chicago, had secured the services of Max Linder for a term of years at a salary of $400,000 per year and that the famous motion picture comedian was soon to come to this country to appear on the screen.

Inquiry at Essanay headquarters in Chicago elicited a confirmation of the news of Linder's coming, but it was stated that the salary would be $260,000, instead of $400,000 per year.

Max Linder.

It is a matter of indifference whether the price be greater or less than the figures named; the big thing is that Linder is coming and that he is to again appear to delight the millions of picture fans who have not yet forgotten his most laughable antics.

Linder sprung into prominence in 1907 and 1908 when he originated a style of motion picture comedy that was all his own and which has scarcely been equaled by any other picture comedian and never successfully imitated by any of them

For a long time Linder was the most popular motion picture actor in the world. Through the wonderful distribution afforded by the Pathe organization his pictures were shown in every civilized country and he literally made millions laugh daily.

After more than three years as a member of the regular Pathe stock company Linder organized a company of his own, releasing through Pathe, and enjoying a larger share in the profits, which accrued from his efforts. But while the popular player made more money by this transaction, not so many Linder comedies were released. Then came the war and he went to the front, so, for several years, there have been no Linder comedies shown in America.

Early in the great conflict now raging it was reported that Max Linder had been killed. Later it was learned that he had only been wounded and that in deference to the petitions of his many friends and admirers in France the Government prevented him from returning to the front and retained him for an indifinite period as an entertainer, sending him from hospital to hospital to cheer up the convalescent soldiers.

Just what plans the Essanay Company have for Linder is not known at this writing, but he is expected to arrive in this country before many weeks have passed and will probably work in the Chicago studio of that company.

Much credit is due Mr. Spoor for his enterprise in securing so distinguished an artist for the Essanay Company and, no doubt, the best use of his well-known ability will be made.

PIONEER'S FIRST PRODUCTION READY.

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, announces that his first production under the "Pioneer" brand is rapidly nearing completion. Em Gorman, the talented and versatile juvenile star, plays the leading role. William Plater, recently with the Famous Players Film Co., and John Dunn, well known through his part in the "Iron Claw," also have leading parts. There is surprise in store in a captivating new vampire.

McClure Pictures Well Under Way

First Subjects to Be Written, Produced and Exhibited Under the McClure Trade Mark Soon to Be Released.

FREDERICK L. COLLINS, president of the McClure Publications, Inc., now comes out with the announcement that the work of producing motion pictures under the trade mark of McClure is now under way. Mr. Collins points to this statement printed in the September number of McClure's Magazine as the first authoritative declaration of his company's plans:

> "Miss Ann Murdock, who is about to appear on Broadway in her latest success, 'Please Help Emily,' has been chosen to play the star part in the first motion picture written, produced and exhibited under the McClure trade mark. Miss Murdock is not new to pictures, having already starred on the Metro, V-L-S-E and Paramount programs."

Regarding this statement Mr. Collins says: "It is true that the McClure Pictures are now being produced under the McClure trade mark. Ann Murdock is doing the first picture and Holbrook Blinn the second. Five other stars, including one of the very biggest box office attractions in the picture business, are already under contract. The first feature will be released in the early fall, but no one picture will be shown until at least six have been completed and the nucleus of a high class service to exhibitors absolutely guaranteed. We are making these expensive productions ourselves with directors and stars controlled by us, instead of in co-operation with other manufacturers, as has been our custom, to make absolutely sure that the quality of the pictures will be up to the McClure standard.

"Our plan is to assemble into one group the stars of all the programs, and then to give to each picture released the same vast national publicity hitherto accorded only to the fifteen-part serials. This is the first time that five-reel features have been so advertised. We believe that McClure publicity, through the national magazines, newspaper and other channels controlled by us, placed behind a really high grade star in a big feature production, will drive people to the theater to see McClure Pictures, and will make these advertised features more profitable even than the ordinary moving picture serials, which we invented and which, I am willing to admit, have yielded many thousands of dollars in profit to our house.

"The stars now under contract to McClure's have formerly appeared on the Paramount, Metro, Fox, World and V-L-S-E programs. To their known box office value will be added at least a half million dollars worth of publicity and the moral backing of the McClure list of magazines and newspapers.

"I am firmly convinced, by five years' participation in the motion picture business, that the day of the ordinary five-reel feature is past. The extraordoinary or super-feature is the only thing that will make money for the exhibitors. The unusual thing, the extraordinary star, the timely subject, the tremendous force of publicity—one or all of these elements must be present to guarantee an exhibitor packed houses. The only absolutely sure element that never misses fire is the publicity. However, every McClure feature will be an advertised feature.

"Full details of our advertising campaign will be announced in the near future. For the present it is sufficient to say that we shall use a list of twenty national magazines and weeklies, totaling fifty million readers, and approximately one thousand newspapers, each geared up to aid the local exhibitor showing McClure features. Our magazine list will include every motion picture magazine of importance—and every trade paper that stands for the best things in pictures.

"This is not a sporadic advertising campaign, but is to be continued from month to month and year to year, reaching every community in which McClure Pictures are shown.

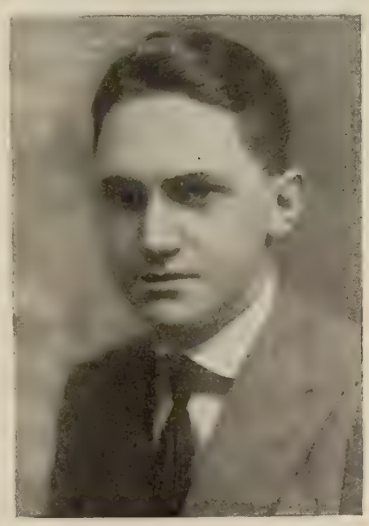
"It is too early to talk about distribution plans, but I am in a position to predict that McClure Pictures will be distributed by the most powerful distributing organization in the United States, controlling two and possibly three of the existing companies, abundantly financed by McClure interests, and managed by the recognized leaders in the distribution and sales business."

When asked regarding the action brought by this company against the Paramount to enforce an option of sale, said to involve about twelve million dollars, Mr. Collins said that while that suit would be pushed to trial as rapidly as possible, it would in no way affect the plans of the McClure Publications for the production and distribution of its pictures.

Universal Pays $1,200 for Synopsis.

Willard Bradley Takes Down the High Purse on an Eight-Page Picture Story.

THE Universal has broken another record. It has paid $1,200 to Willard Bradley for an eight-page synopsis under the title, "The Beloved Imp." The previous high record for a synopsis alone is $750, and was paid for a five-reel feature. In that case, however, a working script went with the synopsis. The Universal purchased only the synopsis with "The Beloved Imp." Offers of a thousand dollars have been made on various competitions, and under special arrangements, all of them having certain strings attached to them. The Universal paid $1,200 strictly on the merit of the story, and is in accordance with the new plan of the Universal for buying scenraios.



Willard Bradley.

Some time ago it became apparent that the "per reel" method of buying scenarios was equitable neither to the writer nor to the company purchasing them. Frequently a script purchased as a five-reeler has to be cut to two, and it frequently happens that a story intended as a two-reeler is worth five reels in the hands of a competent scenario staff. The Universal intends to depend upon its own scenario staff for guidance as to the value of stories in future, and will pay for the story itself, and not for the number of reels in which the story will be produced. If "The Beloved Imp" may be accepted as a criterion, this system is likely to work out very much to the benefit of scenario writers. This story in synopsis form alone so appealed to the Universal that it made the offer based upon the merit of $1,200 for the story. It is a story of Scotch domestic life, the scene of which is laid in the mountain regions of Northern Scotland.

Willard Bradley, the author, is one of the best known scenario writers in the moving picture field. He sold his first scenario to the Universal in July, 1912, and it was produced with Edwin August and Florence Barker under the title "His Madonna," as a Powers single reel, but before this he had written for the Biograph, Kalem and Vitagraph companies and has been a very prolific script writer ever since.

PORTLAND UNIVERSAL EXCHANGE IN NEW QUARTERS.

In order to give more space to the constantly growing business carried on by the Film Supply Company of Portland, Ore., G. A. Metzger, manager of the exchange, has seen fit to change quarters, and the exchange is now located in their new and elaborate offices at 405-407 Davis street. The Portland office is now the finest equipped exchange on the Pacific Coast. The space they are occupying is 50 x 100 feet, with basement.

Mr. Metzger has also been appointed by the Bluebird Photo Plays, Inc., to manage the Bluebird exchange of Portland, and for his own convenience he has seen fit to keep the two exchanges under the same roof. The Bluebird Exchange of Portland is therefore located at the same address.

Exhibitor Beats Light Monopoly

Gus Koenigswald Aided by Manhattan Local Forces Edison Electric Illuminating Co. to Terms

A MOST important decision materially affecting every motion picture exhibitor in the city and state of New York, has just been rendered by Public Service Commissioner Hayward of the First District.

The matter came on to be heard at a session of the Public Service Commission of the First District held on Thursday, August 3, at the offices of the commission, 120 Broadway, New York City, upon the complaint of Gus. Koenigswald, who is owner of the Sunset theater, 4705 Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, and who is the president of the Veaudeau Amusement Company.

Gus Koenigswald.

Mr. Koenigswald had preferred charges against the Edison Electric Illuminating Co., based "upon the wrong maximum demand and alleged refusal to give power rates for motor generators." Mr. Koenigswald had fought the Edison Electric Illuminating Co. ever since December, 1915, because as he claimed, it unjustly refused to allow power rates for power used in running a motor generator.

As is well known, the power rates are 50 per cent. lower than the lighting rates. Mr. Koenigswald contended that he had a perfect right to use the current supplied to him for any lawful purpose whatever, and that it was his privilege to use his power for a generator, with which to supply the light in his theater and for his arc.

On the other hand, the Edison Electric Illuminating Co. claimed that they had a right to charge lighting rates even for light which they supplied indirectly. There was no dispute as to the facts on either side and the whole issue resolved itself into a question of law.

After hearing both sides, Commissioner Hayward decided in favor of Mr. Koenigswald, and fully sustained all the contentions made by him and his counsel. He ruled that the Edison Electric Illuminating Co. was selling current and that it went altogether beyond its lawful power when it sought to regulate the use of such current, once it had been paid for. The Commissioner said he felt that his decision was in accordance with sound law and sound common sense, and that he didn't think that any court or jury could be found to decide otherwise.

The saving to the motion picture exhibitors by virtue of this ruling is estimated at about $600 a year, which is of course, confined to cases where generators are used. Where an exhibitor uses exhaust fans and has his organ and his machinery worked by electricity, the annual saving where a generator is used is even greater.

A representative of the Moving Picture World called upon Mr. Koenigswald shortly after the decision was rendered and found him in a very happy frame of mind.

"I bought a generator," said he, "because with alternating current which I was compelled to use, I could not get the best results in projection. At first the Edison Electric Illuminating Co. made no objection, but in the course of a few months, they refused to allow me power rates for my generator. I consulted with the attorney and with the officers of the Manhattan Local Organization, and decided that we would fight the matter first before the Public Service Commission and if that failed, in the courts. We have been at it ever since, with the gratifying results that I have just told you of."

"You see, there are a good many advantages in using a generator, which any practical exhibitor knows. The ruling, as I understand it, will have state-wide application and I hope it will result in benefiting every exhibitor in the state. Great credit is due to the counsel and the officials of the Manhattan Local Organization, who have co-operated with me from the beginning."

Fantomas Stories in Series.

Gaumont to Release Them Through Mutual in Five Separate Episodes of Three Reels Each.

THE Gaumont Company is to release a series of five "Fantomas" episodes through Mutual. Each is in three reels, making this the first three-reel series ever put out in America. Beginning September 7 one will be released each week. As the stories have already had wide publicity this summer through their publication in a number of leading Sunday newspapers, the Gaumont company has chosen the most profitable moment possible for their release.

The "Fantomas" series of thirty-two book-length novels is by far the most popular of all the great French detective stories. Already these are duplicating in America the great success they enjoy abroad. Those which have appeared this summer have been read by millions in such metropolitan newspapers as the New York World, Pittsburgh Press, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Cleveland Plain-Dealer, Seattle Post-Intelligencer and many others. "Fantomas" has also been a "best seller" in book form.

Fantomas, the phantom crook, is the creation of two masters of popular French fiction, Pierre Souvestre and Marcel Allain. In these photoplays the majesty of the law is represented by one of the greatest detectives ever imagined, Inspector Juve. The duels with every resource science can furnish and the many battles of wits form the most thrilling and exciting incidents and series of events that the screen has seen.

Some of the greatest artists of France have been called upon to interpret roles in this series. Since it has been some time since Gaumont has released any French film in America, exhibitors will welcome the return of such popular artists as Victor Navarre, James Breon, Louis Melchior, Madame Renee Carl, and the beautiful Mlle. Jeanne Faber from the Comedie Francaise. The pictures will be released in the following order: I—The Phantom Crook; II—The Man in Black; III—The Mysterious Fingerprints; IV—The Crook Detective; V—The False Magistrate.

Old Vitagraph Office to Close.

Famous Old Nassau Street Quarters to Be Vacated—E. G. Hedden Resigns and Will Join John B. Rock.

THE old offices of the Vitagraph Company at 116 Nassau Street, New York, known to almost every motion picture man in the world, and which were presided over for so many years by the late "Pop" Rock, are to be closed. The new Vitagraph corporation will probably have a city office elsewhere, but the business formerly transacted at 116 Nassau street will be done at the Flatbush Studios. E. George Hedden, who has been office manager at 116 Nassau street for some time past, has resigned his connection with the Vitagraph Company and will accept a position with John B. Rock, who succeeds to the management of his father's estate. Mr. Rock will open offices for the conduct of those interests which are of considerable magnitude.

In this connection it is proper to record the fact that the probate of the last will and testament of the late W. T. Rock has been accomplished without a hitch and that the family are in full accord with the wishes of the deceased as therein expressed. Statements made in the daily papers to the contrary were without foundation in any particular.

CONWAY TEARLE, LEAD FOR MISS YOUNG.

Conway Tearle, who is playing the role of the artist-hero, Kelly Neville, opposite Clara Kimball Young in the film version of Robert W. Chalmers' novel, "The Common Law," is known to the theatergoers of England and America as one of the most brilliant of the younger actors of the day. His career as a leading man for many prominent women stars in the biggest of the metropolitan productions has, in spite of his youth, covered a considerable number of years, during which he has never known what it is to be without an engagement, so great is the demand for his services.

Mr. Tearle, contrary to general belief, is an American and not an Englishman. He was born in New York City, but in his early youth was taken to England and educated there.

Larry Trimble Brings Turner Films

By Lynde Denig

After Three Years in England, Director Returns for Indefinite Stay--"British Open Market is Dead" he Declares

SOMETHING over a week ago Larry Trimble, director and part owner of Turner Films, Ltd.—the first American producer to fly the Stars and Stripes over a permanent Yankee studio on English soil—stole into New York as quietly as a German submarine. After three years of uninterrupted work abroad—three years spent in guiding his own company and in getting acquainted with the Englishman's filmland, this young director, who still calls the Maine woods his home, is back in America ready to father a new member of the Turner Films family. He may be here for weeks, or months, or years, just according to what happens.

Florence Turner.

Up to the moment, the plans of Mr. Trimble and his partners, Florence Turner and Harry Edwards, are definite to this extent. Pictures already produced, or now being made in England, will be released on the Mutual program. Under the title of Turner Films, Ltd., the company will be maintained abroad with Miss Turner as the star and Mr. Edwards as her director, whereas an American branch of the concern will be known as Turner Films, Inc. It is probable that Mr. Trimble will remain here as director in chief and that he will produce regularly with players secured in this country. Just now he wants the right kind of a star, or stars; not stage celebrities, however, for, speaking generally, as he was in outlining his plans, he thinks they are quite out of place in pictures.

When Mr. Trimble left the Vitagraph company in 1913 and sailed for England with Miss Turner, he was primarily a director with a director's viewpoint. Now he turns readily from discussing the art of making photoplays to a consideration of disposing of them at a profit, until one gathers that he is as much fascinated by the picture business as the picture art. Moreover, he reveals a tendency to exploit his company rather than himself. something far removed from the orthodox directorial spirit.

Harry Edwards.

"We located in England because three years ago the power of large combines in this country left slight opportunity for an independent producer with small capital," he remarked. "Miss Turner's popularity in Vitagraph pictures was our great asset in appealing directly to British exhibitors, who, as you know, were buying in the open market. But the extent of Miss Turner's fame on the other side none of us realized until the night of her first personal appearance in the London Pavilion. I never saw such a demonstration for any player. She was forced to remain on the stage six minutes beyond the allotted time, and even then the audience was not content.

"Naturally, such advertising was worth following up, and after the London appearance Miss Turner toured the British Isles. During one period she visited no less than 160 halls in six weeks. I made most of the trips with her and had an opportnity to study trade conditions at first hand. One thing was evident, even as far back as 1913, the so-called open market could not survive, and at that time I wrote a letter to The Moving Picture World prophesying a change. When the cinema proprietors asked me to address them I was regarded as visionary in forecasting a closer approach to American methods as a solution of some of their problems. I don't pose as a prophet, but this much, at least, has come true. The open market in England is virtually dead.

Larry Trimble.

"Producers simply cannot afford to make good pictures on a gambler's chance of selling them, and that's about what it amounts to when the supply is uncertain. As a sample of the haphazard arrangement unsatisfactory to both exhibitors and producers, one week would bring half a dozen dramas all about equally good and an insufficient number of comedies, whereas, as likely as not, there would be a shortage of dramas and an oversupply of comedies the following week. With a possible market for perhaps one half of the productions of a given type, the others, just as meritorious, would be passed by. The open market, as conducted in England, was doomed to failure because it lacked the system needed in a large and complex business."

Returning to more personal affairs, Mr. Trimble grew enthusiastic over his acquisition of Mr. Edwards as a stock holder in the concern, and director of the English company. "The beginning of our relationship was odd," he said. "I had heard of Mr. Edwards as a playwright and an actor at the head of his own company, and one day I watched him conduct a rehearsal. His handling of a number of mediocre players struck me as remarkable, and I asked him if he fancied seeing himself on the screen. He replied that the idea appealed to him, and a few weeks later he was spending his days in the studio.

"His quickness in grasping picture requirements was extraordinary. Almost from the beginning he helped in directing other players and it was not long before he had written, produced, titled and trimmed a picture without any assistance. What is more, when I saw the completed film I could not suggest any alterations. Mr. Edwards is just the type of man we want if the art is to advance. He is only thirty-three, thoroughly educated, a born writer as well as an actor, and vital to his finger tips."

When asked about the style of picture sought by Turner Films, Mr. Trimble referred to "My Old Dutch" as best typifying their aims, in that it contains what he terms a universal appeal, something striking deep in human nature, not dependent upon race or prejudice and comprehensible to both old and young. The theme in this instance is idyllic love, beautifully handled, according to all accounts. The popularity of the picture in England is so great that at many houses it is being rebooked for the second or third time. Mr. Trimble believes that spectacles have about reached their limit and looks for the development of a deeper note through suggestion that has a spiritual or intellectual significance.

International Announces Several Coming Productions.

A Serial Entitled "Beatrice Fairfax" Heads the List—"Jaffery" and Another Serial Featuring Irene Castle to Follow.

NOW that the International Film Service, Inc., has settled itself in its new quarters in the Godfrey Building, Seventh avenue and 49th street, New York City, announcements of forthcoming releases are beginning to apepar. It is said that a number of new productions will be made within the next few months by the International, noteworthy among which is to be a serial to be called "Beatrice Fairfax," founded upon interesting incidents contained in the hundreds of letters received daily by the writer of the column in the Evening Journal devoted to the love-lorn and signed "Beatrice Fairfax." This serial is said to be a pet idea of William Randolph Hearst, which means that it will receive his personal attention and will be given every possible lattitude. The stellar parts in this serial will be played by Miss Grace Darling, as "Beatrice Fairfax," and Harry Fox, the well known comedian, as "Jimmy Barton," a newspaper reporter. "Beatrice Fairfax," will be shown for the first time on August 7.

Grace Darling.

Following "Beatrice Fairfax," the International Film Service, Inc., will offer a six-reel production, "Jaffery," written by William J. Locke, from the celebrated novel of that title. (Reviewed on page 652 of July 22 issue.) The photoplay was produced for the International Film Service, Inc., by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, William L. Sherrill, president, and will be one of the International's "Golden Eagle Features," of which there will be a number, all of the highest quality. "Jaffery" has been characterized as "the type of picture that exhibitors want, but seldom find." It is a romance of wholesome charm and beauty. The production has been flawlessly staged and the cast includes ssuch famous actors as C. Aubrey Smith, Eleanor Woodruff, Eric Blind, Florence Deshou, Ben Hendricks and Paul Douchet.

After "Jaffery," will come a picture for which the public has long been waiting. It is a serial by Louis Joseph Vance, and will introduce Mrs. Irene Castle, the famous beauty as a film star. A remarkable cast has been provided to support Mrs. Castle. It includes Milton Sills, the romantic actor, who will be her leading man; Dorothy Green, whose vampire characterizations have made her one of the foremost screen actresses in the country, and Warner Oland, a remarkably fine heavy actor.

The International will also soon produce a screen play from one of Jack London's best known novels; one from the pen of H. Rider Haggard, the famous English author of "She," and other stories; and one by Robert Chambers.

On August 14, the International will show for the first time a remarkable fashion reel, "Beauty and the Beast." It is a picturization of the beautiful fairy story. The various characters are gowned in the latest modes, affording a new and striking manner for presenting fashion pictures. All of the scenes are laid in Georgian Court, the estate of George J. Gould, at Lakewood, N. J.

The Hearst International News Pictorial, released on Tuesday and Friday of each week is conceded to be the best news pictorial issued. In addition to these regular features the International also releases each week a split reel of comics, features, scenic and educational views.

CAPTAIN LANG TAKES VACATION.

A. J. Lang, who handles the publicity and several other things at the headquarters of the Nicholas Power Company, has gone to the Catskill Mountains for a two weeks' vacation. He says something about "camp and forgetting work" for sixteen days. Here's hoping he will have a good time.

Kalem Promises for Mid-August.

Comedy and Drama Well Balanced in Releases for Weeks ot August 14 and 21.

KALEM'S releases promised for the weeks of August 14 and 21 total ten reels, with the dramatic and comedy elements well balanced in the schedule. Leading the list, of course, is "The Girl from Frisco" series featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman. Two episodes of the big Western feature will be released in this period, August 16, bringing "The Turquoise Mine Conspiracy," the second episode and the following Wednesday, August 23, "The Oil Field Plot."

Scene from "With the Aid of the Wrecker" (Kalem).

Each of the "Girl from Frisco" episodes is in two reels, telling a complete story. In addition the demand for drama is met on the Kalem schedule for these two weeks by two single reel "Hazards of Helen." "With the Aid of the Wrecker," issued on Saturday, August 19, in addition to Helen Gibson's daring feats, has a strong climax in a scene showing a gigantic wreck-car crane swinging an automobile and its occupants through the air.

"At Danger's Call," released on August 26th, has a novel thrill showing Helen Gibson suspended from a bridge by means of a rope, lifting a boy from a runaway flat-car loaded with dynamite. A spectacular fire and daring motorcycle riding are included in this "Hazard."

Ham comes to bat on Tuesday, August 15, with "Ham's Strategy," a single reel comedy. Ham buys a donkey, and the succeeding action tells of his troubles with the docile beast, whom neither dynamite, fire nor speeding trains will move. The three-star combination of Ham, Bud and Ethel Teare is in the principal roles, with strong comedy support.

Ivy Close, the famous beauty, whose captivating personality has quickly brought her to popularity with American film fans, is represented on Kalem's mid-August schedule with two interesting subjects. "He Wrote Poetry," released on Friday, August 18, finds the comedienne in a comedy of rapid-fire action with Henry Murdoch as a misguided versifier. Elaborate trick effects are used on a large scale in "The Stolen Jail," the Ivy Close release of August 25, which has been pronounced by those privileged with an advance view one of the strongest comedy productions of recent months.

GOFF ON TOUR.

A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the V-L-S-E, left New York last week for a ten-day tour of the Big Four branch offices in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis. This tour is in line with the plan laid down by Mr. Goff soon after his ascension to the assistant general managership to keep in close personal touch with all branch offices, their managers and all their assistants.

MISS JEANNE EAGELS JOINS THANHOUSER.

Miss Jeanne Eagels, one of the best known of the younger actresses, has been signed by Edwin Thanhouser to be starred in a special feature production to be called "The World and the Woman."

The story was especially written for Miss Eagels by Philip Lonergan. Eugene Moore is directing the picture, which will be released through Pathe.

Pathe Releases for Week of August 27

Gold Rooster Comedy Drama, Some Strong Serial Installments and Good Features in the New Reel—New Series Announced.

WITH a five reel old Rooster comedy drama produced by Thanhouser—two reels embracing a "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?" problem; a thousand feet of Heinie comedy and a split reel educational containing two timely subjects besides the two reels of Pathe News, the Pathe program deals a hand to exhibitors all of which are trumps.

"The Shine Girl," a five-reel comedy-drama, featuring ladys Hulette, supported by a notable cast of Thanhouser players sets the pace in the real race for quality. A sweet story with a great human appeal which will be welcomed by the enthusiasts who have waited eagerly for another picture on the style of "Little Mary Sunshine." In the dingy depths of a shoe shining basement is five feet of cheerfulness—"The Shine Girl." While shining shoes with her hand she polishes up the grouchy and brooding souls of the customer with her cheerful words and sunny smile. A young judge of the Children's Court becomes interested in her and takes her to his mother's in the country. Eventually she plays a big part in his heart and destiny. A great temptation beckons to him, but through "The Shine Girl" he is saved on the brink of a great unhappiness for himself and others. "The Shine Girl" shows how happiness can spring from humbleness and this picture, every foot of which shows the hand of a master director, will warm the hearts of the coldest audience. It is the kind of a picture that will be approved by the severest woman's club or societies active for "movie reforms."

"The Butterflies," two "Grip of Evil" reels, wins out in second place. The story treats of the satanic cunning of a blackmailer who defends himself from violence from the man he is bleeding by depositing in a vault copies of the story which are to be given to all editors and to the man about to marry the woman in the case should he die. The blackmailer does meet death and the grim results follow. A study in a noble nature and how a real man rises to it against a crushing blow.

"Caught in a Jam" is the title of a slapstick Heinie comedy. Heinie's theft of a jar of jam prized by a fair damsel because her grandmother made it twenty years ago and the what seemed fatal results is a scream. They all thought Heinie had gone through a laundry mangle, but he had only gotten caught in a terrible jam "like grandma used to make."

Of the scenics "Weapons of War" is a highly interesting trip through Creusot, France, noted for its active manufacture of modern guns. Much that is not known of these death-dealing war monsters is revealed.

On the same reel is "Historic St. Augustine," a splendid scenic of the oldest historic city in the United States. The picturesque ruins of the early Spanish edifices—ancient monastary and the old fort with its many marks of conflict are highly interesting.

Wednesday, August 30, brings with it Pathe News No. 70 and Saturday, September 3, Pathe News No. 71.

Here Comes a New Pathe Serial.

House of Big Features Announces "The Shielding Shadow" to Be More Thrilling Than Its Former Productions.

CHARACTERIZED by a greater mystery than the mystery of the Laughing Mask in "The Iron Claw," a greater love interest than that of "The Red Circle" and greater thrills than those of "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine," Pathe's next achievement, a wonder serial in fifteen episodes called "The Shielding Shadow" will be released on September 3.

"The Shielding Shadow" features a trio of stars: Grace Darmond, a charming and appealing girl, an actress of beauty, experience and ability; Ralph Kellard, who has been seen in some of Pathe's Gold Rooster plays and has had a long and successful career on the stage playing in such hits as "Sweet Kitty Bellaire," "The Only Way," "The Crisis," "The Prisoner of Zenda," etc., and Leon Bary, known as one of the best "heavies" in pictures, whose work in "The Shielding Shadow" is so good that a long time contract has been signed with him for future productions.

"The Shielding Shadow" is the first serial to be produced by the Astra Film Corporation, a combination of experienced producers, of which Louis J. Gasnier, formerly vice-president and general manager of Pathe exchange, is president. The picture was made under the personal direction of Mr. Gasnier and Donald Mackenzie, who produced "The Perils of Pauline" and a number of Gold Rooster plays. The author of the scenarios is George B. Seitz, who wrote "The Iron Claw" and whose work on "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine" contributed to their great successes.

"The Shielding Shadow" is a thrilling story of flesh and blood people which will be read by millions. The advertising and selling campaign decided upon by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, and C. R. Seelye, business manager, will be vast in scope and a decided departure from the usual. In addition to advertising in big newspapers in all the important cities, billboards and painted signboards will also be used to further the wide publicity which "The Shielding Shadow" will receive.

The novelization of "The Shielding Shadow" is by Randall Parrish, one of the most popular writers in the United States.

Raymond B. West

RAYMOND B. WEST, co-director under Thomas B. Ince of "Civilization," has returned from Honolulu to Culver City, where he is now hard at work on Ince-Triangle features. Mr. West is Thomas Ince's star director. Recently he finished a forceful Triangle drama by C. Gardner Sullivan, entitled "The Wolf Woman," which served to introduce Miss Glaum for the first time in a vampire role. The Oriental settings chosen by Mr. West for the picture were of unusual beauty and were built by four Japanese artist-mechanics whom Mr. West engaged in Honolulu. One of the sets is a gorgeous spider's web constructed with Japanese ingenuity.

Raymond B. West and Mrs. West.

Mr. West also recently completed "Home," which contains some unique lighting effects. Bessie Barriscale and Charles Ray, the popular juvenile, are featured in this production by C. Gardner Sullivan. The play depicts the effect of suddenly acquired wealth upon a typical American household. Miss Barriscale has the part of a girl who attempts to save her nouveau riche parents and the serio-comic situations which ensue are illuminating. Louise Glaum co-stars in the role of a vampire, and included in the supporting cast are George Fisher, Agnes Herring, Thomas S. Guise, J. J. Dowling and others. G. Herriott was Mr. West's cameraman on the production.

Mr. West is now at work on an Ince comedy-drama by J. G. Hawks in which Charles Ray stars. He is supported by Margaret Thompson in the principal feminine role, Marjory Wilson, Howard Hickman, George Fisher, Charles K. French, Louise Brownell, Walt Whitman and Jerome Storm.

JANE KECKLEY WITH PALLAS PICTURES.

Jane Keckley, who has become known as one of the most talented portrayers of eccentric characters on the screen, is now affiliated with Pallas Pictures. Miss Keckley entered the motion picture field some seven years ago and has appeared under the management of many of the most prominent producers in both the East and West. One of her best characterizations on the screen was presented in "The Circular Staircase," in which she appeared as "Miss Watson."

Sidney Drew on True Comedy

By Epes Winthrop Sargent

Famous Light Comedian Gives His Ideas of What Real Comedy Should Be

SIDNEY DREW makes one reel comedies for two reasons. He makes comedies because he is a born comedian. He makes them in one reel because he has the crazy idea that audiences prefer variety to their programs and do not care for an hour or more of the single idea. The well-known C. Columbus had a somewhat similar brainstorm when he foolishly argued that there must be land on both sides of the Atlantic ocean. In other ways Mr. Drew is an uprooter of tradition. When he went to Metro he was due, by all the rules and past performances, to get the bighead and "go bad." Realizing his importance—as gauged by his salary—he should have done all the things he wanted to do instead of doing what he should do. Instead he made better comedies and worked all the harder, and in these days of knockabout the Metro-Drew comedies stand for the best of real comedy; the sort of comedy that made Mr. Drew's mother, Mrs. John Drew, beloved by a nation that still holds her in affectionate remembrance.

Sidney Drew.

About the time that the pictures were headlining vaudeville bills, vaudeville managers turned to the dramatic stars for new attractions and Mr. Drew was the second or third to make the venture. Hundreds of dramatic stars were coaxed by fancy salaries to make the vaudeville plunge during the next couple of years, but most of these were "name acts." People went to see them, not to be entertained, but to see them in their new surroundings. Very few succeeded in entertaining their audiences and still fewer were asked to make the second trip over the circuits that meant real success. But Mr. Drew so skillfully adapted his offerings to the fancy of his audiences that he made not alone the second trip, but for ten years or more he was one of the standard headliners. He might be there yet but he again made friends with the "syndicate" and went back to the dramatic stage.

The same adaptability that served him then serves him still. He knows what audiences want. He knows how to give it to them. "Drew comedies" is as much a definition as a distinction. It stands for a type—the highest type—of comedy production, and his views on the art are interesting, for he is both director and star, sharing his labors in both departments with his clever wife.

"It must be understood, of course," he said the other afternoon, in his dressing room, "that a comedy must be humorous to be a comedy. After that the first great essential is plot. It must possess plot if it would have excuse. No matter how interesting comedy incident may seem to be at the moment, nor in what proportions it is assembled, there MUST be plot back of the incident if it is to have excuse. The author invents scenes—to tell the plot. I invent business—to tell the plot. It is plot that gains and holds the interest of the spectator, and this plot alone can do. I may be radical to the point of iconoclasm, but plot and nothing but plot can make a story good.

"But almost as important is naturalness. There must be no crude violation of probability if there is to be real comedy—and note that I say 'comedy.' I do not make a sweeping assertion to cover all humorous forms. True comedy is natural, convincing, human. The closer it lies to the everyday life of the multitude the stronger is its appeal. Few authors write real comedy. They write much farce and more knockabout, some comedy drama and very little comedy, for real comedy is not stressed. It is human. It tells of the things that not only can happen, but probably have happened to you and me and all the rest. I aim to get stories that find a responsive impulse in the breasts of a majority of our clientele. They are not always brilliant episodes, but always I try to make them human—which is more nearly the secret of lasting success. Farce may be more dashing and knockabout—slapstick—more vivid for the moment, but the comedy of the right sort sticks. You remember it long after you have forgotten the unrealities and the tumbling and you are more apt to want more.

"Apart from the story it seems to me that there are three great comedy factors: Repose, pause and inference. Comedy is not, save in its usual moments, a thing of vivid action. This backs up what I have already said about the need for plot. Comedy gains its chief charm from the story rather than from the action in which the story is told. This does not, in the least, argue against the need for comedy action of the most carefully planned sort, but in its first analysis comedy is seldom violent.

"Pause is a factor that too many ignore. I was fortunate in that I had such rich opportunities to study the elder Jefferson, who was a master of the true pause. Pause, in comedy, is a moment of inaction in which the spectator is permitted to grasp the meaning of an action. It gives him time in which to appreciate the meaning of that action before the next thought is presented. No one who has ever seen Joseph Jefferson can fail to understand my meaning. He made each comedy point tell before he went on to the next line or action. He waited for his audience. This pause was not forced or unreal. He merely did not make his points in such rapid succession that nothing struck home. This is something that too many producers overlook, though it holds good even in slapstick. They imagine that the more rapid the action the stronger the humor. They do not take into consideration the mental indigestion that must inevitably follow the consumption of so much undigested fact.

"Inference merely means crediting the spectator with possessing an average intelligence. It supposes that he can see a point without, to borrow an expression, having his nose rubbed into it. Sometimes a gesture or a look will convey more than can a series of elaborate actions. Sometimes the gesture will anticipate the result and bring the laugh before the action is played. Often a wink or a nod is better than a ten-foot scene.

"I do not believe that it is possible to write comedy to be played precisely in accordance with the written action, no matter how elaborately the action may be described. The clever author invents the idea and then the situations in which the events are unfolded, but the player must invent the business just as on the stage the actor gives his own reading of the lines.

"And when I say that the player should invent his business, I mean the player and not the director. I do not favor the long rehearsal and the substitution of the director's personality for that of the player. When I run through a scene I explain what the scene is and what it means. We run through it to get the camera lines and a general idea of how the scenes will play and then we turn the camera. I do not rehearse in the usual meaning of the term. As a matter of fact, I would rather have a man go through a scene awkwardly, but in his own way, than rehearse a dozen times to gain a mechanical grace at the cost of spontaniety. What if the man IS a little awkward. Most men are in real life—and we purport to reproduce life. I try to cast my plays with people who will give me the results I want, not because I wish to save time and trouble rehearsing, but because I get better results.

"I believe in casting the play to suit the parts, and not getting parts to suit certain players. Sometimes good actors are best in the roles and in other instances inexperienced people are best. But note that I emphasize the 'good' actor, for there is nothing quite so poor as the bad actor. The motive and the artist are alike natural. In between lies the man who feels that he must act, who must strut and pose and mouth his speeches.

"And here, again, I depart from tradition. If you will notice you will observe that we seldom talk much. I recently read a plea for written parts in photoplay. I do not agree. Nothing is more unconvincing than dialogue that cannot be heard. By-play and facial expression should be place speech, for this is plotoplay and not drama. This may be anarchistic, but I leave it to audiences and the screen. Too much apparent conversation leads to a distraction from the idea in the endeavor to catch speeches and improvising lines is disturbing to the player.

"And another departure is to avoid direction while the camera is turning. A man knows he is to enter a scene, pick up a newspaper and exits. If he knows enough to do these things, let him do so without a constant flow of direction and he will be more natural—and to be natural and human is to be entertaining, which is the true art of comedy."

Horsley Releases for Week of August 12

Mutual Program Will Carry a Crane Wilbur Drama and a George Ovey Comedy in Week of August 12

A BATTLE of wits between a society gambler and a criminal investigator with a woman's reputation at stake supplies the theme for the Centaur feature, "For Her Good Name," a David Horsley production which will be the main release of these studios for the week of August 12 on the Mutual program.

The story is from the pen of Crane Wilbur, who is likewise the star of the play. It is an intensely dramatic offering dealing with adventure, love and mystery, gripping from the start and working up to an unexpected and most unusual ending. The action is true to life and the players have treated the subject in a convincing and impressive manner.

Mr. Wilbur will be seen as the society gambler. Mentally and physically, he is a power among men, shrewd and smooth. On the other hand, ever honorable when dealing with the opposite sex; he watches the maneuvers of a society adventurer toward a wealthy woman whose weakness is secret visits to the "House of the Mask," an exclusive gambling resort. At the addition of a threat and an insult by the adventurer to the woman, the gambler interferes, and in the struggle which follows the tormentor comes to his end accidentally. Complications follow; a famous criminal investigator undertakes the task of solving the mystery of the death and the gambler, ever loyal to the woman, because of his nature and his love for her sister, is the big obstacle in the way of the detective. From this point to the end of the drama a peculiar chain of events transpire with the unexpected sacrifice at the end.

Charming Mae Gaston enacts the role of the woman. Her work is delightful and the character one which should attract sympathy. Harrish Ingraham shoulders the difficult part of the investigator and his support of the star is all that could be desired. Frederick Montague, as the ignorant husband of his wife's wrong doing; Allaire Smith, in the character of the social adventurer, and Corinne Bradford, as the woman's sister, complete the cast. The picture was produced under the direction of Robert B. Broadwell.

"Jerry's Celebration" will be served up as the offering of the Cub Comedy Company, released on the Mutual program August 11. George Ovey is the star and he celebrated the Fourth of July as a patriotic and loyal citizen. His ideas of a "safe and sane" day do not entirely agree with those of the police department and that is where the fun starts and runs for a thousand feet. The story was written and directed by Milton H. Fahrney.

A big company of Horsley funmakers support Mr. Ovey in this comedy of quick action and lots doing. Claire Alexander, the diminutive ingenue, is the leading feminine support, and George George, Louis FitzRoy, Jefferson Osborne and Gordon MacGregor share generously with the star. Others in the cast are Joseph Von Meter, Ray Lincoln, Janet Sully, Harry Jackson, Bob Kenyon and Arthur Mund.

Miss Louise Murray

LOUISE MURRAY was the winner of the Moving Picture Exposition Prize Contest held during the sixth national convention and exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The exposition's queen of beauty was chosen by the executive board from photographs left with the members during exposition week, the ribbon going to Louise Murray, a sixteen-year-old girl with dimples and smiles and real curls, who lives at 620 Roscoe street, Chicago.

Louise Murray.

The prize was the opportunity to play heroine in a moving picture which was taken on the last evening of the exposition in the Coliseum Annex studio, with Miss Murray leading, under the direction of Miss Rose Tapley, of the Vitagraph Company.

Miss Murray won first prize and was selected from over two hundred contestants. She is better known among her friends as the "Dimple Girl," and no doubt this sobriquet will follow her in filmland as she is owner of one of the most roguish little dimples on her left cheek that kind fate has ever bestowed on her favored ones.

Joseph Roach, of Essanay, has been selected to write a photoplay around the "Dimple Girl." When it is ready, she will enact the stellar role, and later it will be shown throughout the country. If successful in this picture, Miss Murray will be attached to the acting force of a well-known producing company.

On learning that she had won the prize, Miss Murray sent the news of her success to her mother, who was very ill in the hospital, in the hope that it would aid in her speedy recovery.

Miss Murray was induced to enter the contest by H. A. Spanuth, general manager of the Central Film Company, a corporation owned and controlled by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, and Nathan Ascher, of Ascher Bros.

NEW ADDITION TO MOROSCO ROSTER.

Closely following its enlargement in studio capacity, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company announces an increase in its roster in the persons of L. V. Jefferson, who has been made associate scenario editor, and Kathleen Kirkham and Lucille Ward, both photoplay artists of prominence.

SMALLEYS START NEW FEATURE PLAY.

"Idle Wives," a story by James Oppenheim, is to be made by the Smalleys, the leads being played by Mary MacLaren and Phillips Smalley, under the direction of Lois Weber, who prepared the screen version of the story. The film play will be made in five reels.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

The Saturday Evening Post Flails Censorship.

THE people of the United States are being gradually enlightened on the danger to their liberties by the censorship of moving pictures. The great dailies and weeklies of the country have aided largely in showing that such censorship is an unwarranted encroachment on the plain rights of citizens of this country, and it is hoped that they will continue until the people generally will take up the censorship question as a personal matter and decide it by their votes.

In a recent issue the Saturday Evening Post contributed the following editorial, under the head "Stupid Censorship," to the great aggregation of intelligent opinions already printed against censorship:

Congress apears to be seriously considering the bill to set up a censorship of moving pictures. Censorship and stupidity are practically synonymous and interchangeable terms. It is only the dull, dim mind that itches to impose its personal tastes by force of law upon its neighbors..

We read somewhere not long ago that a sapient board of censors had forbidden the exhibition of a film with Mexico because Villa appeared in it; and Villa is a murderer. We presume it is true, because that would be exactly typical of censorship.

There is as much reason for establishing a censorship of the spoken drama as of moving pictures; as much reason for censoring newspapers, magazines, books, music, painting, sculpture—and conversation.

By any of those means evil may be communicated quite as readily as on the screen. Concerning any of them there will be wide differences of opinion as to what is and what is not evil. Under a censorship the stupidest opinion would prevail. That is inevitable.

Free speech, under the established penalties of the criminal law, is of the inner spirit of this government. It seems odd to lay an official hand upon a mode of speech—by pictures—because it happens to have been newly invented. If we are going to start on that road there is no good reason why we should not go the whole way back to the Spanish inquisition.

E. H. Montagu Tells of the Great Difficulties Surrounding the Film Business in Europe.

It was a hark back to old times to receive a letter from my old friend E. H. Montagu, Selig's European representative in London, bearing the date of June 27.

Accompanying the letter was a page of the supplement to The Cinema, which contained some interesting news concerning Mr. Montagu's extra duties during war time. An illustration showing him in inspector's uniform of the Special Constabulary C. Division, is given, and the readng matter conveys the information that Mr. Montagu "joined up" immediately after a call was made for special constables.

In adition to heavy work at the Selig offices in Wardour street, Mr. Montagu can be found on special duty three mornings every week, from 6 o'clock until 10 o'clock, and sometimes, in addition, he is called on to do special duty during evenings. These duties may be considered his play hours, when he is not attending to Red Seals, Blue Diamond features and the open market product of the Selig Polyscope Company.

The following excerpt from Mr. Montagu's letter, which I trust he will pardon me for making public, shows the enormous difficulties surrounding the film business in Europe at the present time:

"The war drags on here, and nobody, not living on this side, can appreciate in any way what it means. I do not think there is any doubt that it will alter the mode of living of everyone over here eventually. It is a question whether, when the war is finally settled, if many will have any means at all. Those who have to carry on business here are worried more than you can possibly imagine.

"Every man from 18 to 41, in good health, is serving his country, and if you carefully think over what that would mean with some of your offices and shops in America, you would wonder how it is possible to carry on business at all. Then everything big and small has increased enormously in price, and some things are unobtainable.

"Finally, we are restricted by all sorts of regulations, duties and prohibitions. The duties we have to pay on films you know well; but you do not appreciate in America that we cannot screen films in bond, as over there, and, therefore, have to take them just as they are.

"We cannot export a film without a license from the Government, and this is not a matter of a day, but of a week or ten days—and sometimes months. If you want to send a film to Holland, before you can apply for your license from the British Government, your customer in Holland must go to the Dutch Government and obtain from the Netherlands Overseas Trust a guarantee that the film is not going to be re-exported; and in order to protect that guarantee the customer has to put up with the Netherlands Overseas Trust, a deposit equal to the value of the film which is coming into the country.

"Can you imagine what difficulties this means in the way of doing business?"

Chicago Film Brevities.

It can be anonunced positively that George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co., has secured the exclusive services of Max Linder, the great French photo-comedy player, who has been placed under contract for one year. Harry A. Spoor, Essanay's European representative, concluded arrangements with Mr. Linder in Paris, early in the week of Monday, July 31. The figure at which Mr. Linder has been engaged is 1,300,000 francs ($260,000). Mr. Linder is expected to leave for Chicago sometime in October.

O. B. Herrington, 723 N. Waller avenue, Chicago, would like to know the present address of D. W. McReynolds, who resigned from the acting staff of the Kalem Co. in the spring of 1914, and afterward became associated with the Memphis Kinograph Co., which he left in September, 1914. A business offer is the object of Mr. Herrington's quest.

By invivation of John F. Bowman, manager of the Chicago office of the International Film Service, exhibitors and representatives of the Chicago press attended an exhibition of the company's latest feature subject "The Missing Watchman," on Friday morning, August 4, at Cohan's Grand Opera House. This is the first of the Beatrice Fairfax series, written from her experiences, and produced by Wharton, Inc. Grace Darling takes the part of Beatrice Fairfax, and Harry Fox plays opposite her as Jimmy Barton, a newspaper reporter. The subject will be released through the International offices Monday, Aug. 7. The theater was filled to capacity.

H. H. Buckwalter, manager of George Kleine's branch offices in Denver and Salt Lake City, is issuing catchy, live advertising on the first series of the "Mishaps of Musty Suffer." Manager Jenner of the Chicago office states that bookings of the first series continue unabated. Fifty theaters in Milwaukee are now running the comedies and about 125 theaters in Chicago, and so on throughout the country.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer and Nathan Ascher, who control the rights to the Clara Kimball Young productions for the states of Illinois, Indiana, the western half of Kentucky and the southern half of Wisconsin, have secured the rights for the same territory to "War Brides," with Mme. Nazimova, and to "Thais," which features Mary Garden, both pictures produced by Herbert Brenon, who is in partnership with Lewis J. Selznick. These productions will be released through the Central Film Co. This company also controls the rights to "Where Are My Children?" for the state of Illinois, and to "How Britain Prepared," for Illinois and Indiana.

E. B. Lockwood, representative of The Selig Tribune Weeklies, has transferred his headquarters from Seattle, Wash., to Denver.

Simeon B. Greiver, who is directing the activities of the Balaban-Hershberg Film Attractions and the General Feature Film Co., of this city, informs this office that he has perfected his sales organization by engaging a number of high-class traveling salesmen. Among these are Carl Harthill, who has had considerable experience with the Standard and the Union Film Companies, of Chicago; also James Salter, Wm. Weinschaker, John Balaban and Harry Charness. Each salesman has been allotted special teritory, and "The Yellow Menace" and Ivan releases are being booked solid.

The next Selig Red Seal Play to be released through V. L. S. E. will be "The Country God Forgot." This is a thrilling western photodrama, written and directed by Marshall Neilan. The release date will be Monday, Aug. 21. Tom Santschi will be supported by a strong company, which includes Marshall Neilan, George Fawcett and Mary Charleson. One of the largest interior sets ever put up on the Selig stages was used by Director Neilan in this photoplay.

Wm. N. Selig returned Saturday, July 29, from Los Angeles, where he completed plans for the production of "The Garden of Allah." While on the coast Mr. Selig engaged E. A. Martin, a successful director of features. Mr. Martin will immediately begin work on the production of "The Light of Western Stars," Zane Gray's story of the west. An all-star cast for this feature will include Kathlyn Williams and Tom Mix.

According to Wm. N. Selig the present agitation over the "scarcity of motion picture play plots" as voiced in the daily press, may be due to the hot weather. Speaking for his own company, he says that plot material is abundant, as the Selig Polyscope Co. owns the film rights to numerous short stories and modern novels. In fact, the Selig Company is so well supplied with plot material of the best kind that it has withdrawn from the general scenario market.

Henry B. Walthall, famous Essanay star, has accepted an invitation to deliver a lecture before the students of the Indiana State Normal School, at Terre Haute, some time in the fall. Professor E. E. Clippinger, of the school, has arranged for a series of lectures by representative men (throughout the country) in each profession. Mr. Walthall was chosen to represent the acting profession. Each speaker will, of course, talk of his own profession, so that the series will be very valuable to the 1,500 students of the school.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne arrived in Chicago Saturday, July 29, and prolonged their visit until Monday noon, July 31, when they returned to the Rolfe studios, New York, to resume work for the Metro Company. Miss Bayne, while here, regretted very much that the finishing work on "Romeo and Juliet" prevented her and Mr. Bushman from attending the exposition.

The "Civilization" films now being used at Cohan's Grand Opera House, together with the company of singers and mechanicians required for the production, were taken to Detroit on a special car Thursday night, Aug. 3, after the presentation at the Grand had concluded. It appears that Henry Ford desired to see the great spectacular peace picture, and since he could not come to Chicago to see it, the film had to go to Detroit. A presentation was given for the sole benefit of Mr. Ford and several select friends Friday morning, Aug. 4, at 9.30 o'clock, at the Washington Theater. The films and the company returned to Chicago in time for the regular presentation Friday night.

La Salle—Second week of "Where Are My Children?" (Universal). Very good business is reported.

Two Florida Features Ready

New Producing Organization Has Studio in Miami, Florida—"The Human Orchid" and "The Toll of Justice" First on List of Releases.

WITH a new glass covered studio at Miami, Fla., in which to work, and experienced actors on the roster of players, Florida Feature Films, organized by C. C. Field, a well-known automobile man, has entered the ranks of producing organizations. The first two releases, "The Human Orchid" and "The Toll of Justice" have been completed and work is progressing on the third picture. Mr. Field is president of the new concern and prominent among his associates are Thomas J. Peters, a factor in the commercial world, and H. G. Ralston, owner of valuable Florida real estate. Offices will be opened in New York for the disposal of the pictures on the state rights basis.

Walter Miller, long connected with the Biograph company and later with Famous Players; Charles Graham, remembered for his performance in "Alias Jimmy Valentine" and Irma Ross have been engaged by Mr. Field to carry important roles in coming productions. It is reported that the men interested in the company have ample capital to carry out ambitious plans.

Sam Spedon Leaves Vitagraph

SAM SPEDON, for the past seven years head of the publicity department of the Vitagraph Company, closes with that company this week and is open for another engagement. Mr. Spedon has the distinction of being the first publicity manager of the Vitagraph and during his term as director of that department he has handled reams of copy and thousands of cuts and posters used to popularize Vitagraph pictures and players. As a mixer and disseminator of news of his company few men have circulated more and made a greater number of acquaintances than has Sam, indeed, it would be difficult to find the exhibitor in all this wide land who does not know him. On the job early and late at exhibitors' conventions and balls he has carried the banner of the Vitagraph Company bravely all these years.

Sam Spedon.

But times are changing and with the passing of the old players who have made Vitagraph popular with picture fans, comes the passing of the old publicity man whose efforts greatly promoted that popularity. New ownership and new methods will probably keep the Vitagraph name and fame in the ascendancy, but good old Sam will not be there. Yet men possessing his knowledge of the motion picture business are not so plentiful that the trade can afford to pass him up, so it is confidently expected that Sam Spedon will soon be heard from crying the name and fame of some other firm from the housetops.

The Moving Picture World wishes him the best of good fortune and hopes soon to see the results of his efforts in the way of "copy."

Motion Picture Business Is Largest Industry in the City and Employs Close to 40,000 People, According to Latest Booster.

STATISTICS of the film producing business in Los Angeles have been prepared by one of the daily papers and gives the following figures, which though exaggerated are not without interest for the gullible.

"It is conservatively estimated, although it is almost impossible to obtain the exact figures," says our daily contemporary, "that the motion picture companies now in and around Los Angeles are spending here more than $30,000,000 a year. And every line of business is helped thereby. The actors for the most part are permanently located in the city; most of them in fact own their home, so that practically all the money paid out by the film concerns is left in Los Angeles. Probably 40,000 people are employed by these companies. Their payrolls are tremendous."

Universal, the biggest film company in the world, has a weekly payroll of more than $50,000, while the overhead expenses will reach about $40,000 more.

Ince studios pay out regularly about $30,000 in salaries every week and the overhead expense amounts to about $30,000 more.

Lasky's weekly payroll ranges about $25,000, with overhead expenses of about $20,000.

Keystone has a weekly payroll of about $30,000, with overhead expenses of at least $30,000.

Fine Arts pays out at least $45,000 a week in salaries and about $30,000 as general expenses.

Selig has now a payroll of about $25,000 and overhead expenses of $45,000.

Balboa has a payroll of about $10,000 and about $10,000 overhead expenses.

Kalem with two studios has a payroll of about $5,000 and $10,000 expenses.

Vitagraph has a payroll of about $3,000 and expenses of about $3,000.

Fox with two studios has a payroll of about $20,000 and overhead expenses of at least $35,000.

Horsley's payroll reaches about $5,000, with $5,000 expenses.

Clune has a payroll of about $5,000 and expenses reaching $5,000.

Morosco has a payroll of about $20,000 and $10,000 overhead cost.

Signal has a payroll of about $4,000 and $10,000 overhead expenses.

L-Ko spend about $5,000 a week equally divided as to payroll and overhead expenses.

Christie has a payroll of about $2,000 and overhead expenses of about $1,000

Vogue has a payroll of about $2,000 and overhead expenses about $3,000.

Rolin has a payroll of about $2,000 and expenses are about $2,000.

Metro has a payroll of about $3,000 and about $2,000 overhead expenses.

Continental has a payroll of about $3,000 and about $4,000 overhead expenses.

Monrovia Feature Film Company has a payroll of about $2,000, with overhead expenses of about $2,000.

Norbig has a payroll of about $1,000, with about $1,000 as overhead expenses.

The Lone Star Company, employing Charlie Chaplin, has a small salary list aside from Chaplin's $10,000 a week. The overhead expenses will reach about $2,000..

Mabel Normand Film Company, $1,000 a week, with $1,000 overhead expenses.

The E & R Jungle Film Company has a small payroll because of the fact that this company employs animals for leads.

These companies own and operate about 1,000 automobiles and nearly all the stars own cars.

It is also estimated that more than 40,000 miles of film is turned out of Los Angeles every year.

AUSTRALIAN PICTURE PRODUCER VISITS LOS ANGELES.

Rudolph Buchner, director-general of the Langly Motion Picture Company of Sydney, Australia, is in the city on a business trip. Mr. Buchner has the picture rights to the stories of Henry Lawson of Australia, and may procure a studio for their production. In an interview to a representative of the press Mr. Buchner stated that there are but four motion picture companies in all Australia, though climatic and scenic conditions are ideal for the production of pictures. Australian capital is, however, shy of investment in films and American pictures are almost the only ones shown.

"There are many features of Australian country and city life which are absolutely peculiar to the country," said Mr. Buchner, "and the settings which the picture producers could find in Northern Australia, the Blue Mountains and in other portions of the continent are not to be surpassed anywhere in the world. Life in aboriginal communities, the peculiar vegetation and animal life of this country would prove a novel background for the making of unusual photoplays."

BIG DOINGS AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

With thirty-eight full companies at work and more in view, the western plant of the Laemmle organization is about the busiest place in the country.

E. G. Patterson, who has been the right hand man of H. O. Davis, General Manager, yesterday was placed temporarily in charge of Universal City during the absence of Charles Rankin. The news was received "on the lot" by the 1,500 employes with much rejoicing as Mr. Patterson has been unusually popular among the Universalites.

In the telegram to Mr. Patterson, General Manager Davis informed him that the presence of Charles Rankin, manager of productions, who had been called to New York last Monday, would be required in the east indefinitely on account of new sales plans, and that he was to "assume entire management of the plant, carrying out plans agreed upon to put the plant on a permanent forty-reel basis."

Mr. Patterson was associated with Mr. Davis during the time the latter was building the exposition at San Diego and also while Mr. Davis served in the capacity of director-general of the exposition. When Mr. Davis entered the film world last year he took Mr. Patterson with him, and the latter's efforts have very materially contributed to the success of Mr. Davis' administration of the affairs of the big institution.

It is a peculiar coincidence that just as Director Stuart Paton is busily engaged upon the twelve-reel spectacular production, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," that a German merchant submarine should successfully cross the Atlantic to Baltimore.

"GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE WOMAN" CONTINUES.

Manager H. D. Naugle, of the V-L-S-E, in this city; Rolin S. Sturgeon, producer for the Vitagraph, and other attaches of the local office got together and changed the eight-reel feature which is now running in its fourth week at the Superba theater on Broadway. They merely slipped the second reel out completely and substituted the fifth reel, placing the second in fifth place, thus transferring the mystery to a continuous open story, which materially aided the production. The idea was a good one and consequently the picture, a like print which was made for other northern cities, is doing a big business.

Manager Collier of the Superba theater, which has held a consistent run of three weeks on the film, has been overjoyed at his success. He has had waiting lines at every show, and even the early morning exhibition drew crowds out to the curbings.

Manager Frank Stineman and D. H. Wagar of the La Petite theater in Ocean Park did a remarkable business with the film at the beach. They advertised in a novel manner. Securing a team of real dogs, those used in the picture, together with one of the women who acted a small part in the production, and a lot of rugs, skins, sleighs and every kind of prop, they advertised all they could, and consequently a great crowd gathered to see the picture.

The dog team was driven about the streets and everywhere it went it attracted great attention. They advised all showmen who intend running the picture to at least decorate with animal skins and any other articles that might have been used in the picture.

Manager Naugle of the exchange says that his shelves are all empty, and that bookings are all filled, and the prospects are excellent for the coming season. He just returned from a trip to the Imperial Valley, where he says business is rather slack on account of the war situation. Los Angeles is now all open market with Tally's, Clune's, Garrick, College and Alhambra all vieing with one another for the biggest and best films.

VITAGRAPH LESSENS PRODUCTION.

Owing to certain reasons from a producing standpoint, with the completion of R. S. Sturgeon's big features, the local Vitagraph studio has been cut down considerably. Sturgeon is to go to New York, where he will look for material for forthcoming big productions, stars and so on, and may possibly do some pictures there. The company will maintain the plant, and a single company, under the direction of Billy Wolbert.

Doris M. Schroeder, who for several years has been with the Vitagraph as western scenario editor and publicity writer, leaves and will go on a vacation before accepting a position with another concern on the coast. She has had several offers, but has declined, because she has worked for two years straight at the coast studios and needs a rest.

William Duncan, George Holt, Mary Anderson and several others will be retained to work in the remaining company.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Harry Lustig, local Metro exchange manager, handed out the news this week that Henry Otto, Harold Lockwood and May Allison, making Metro features, with Fred Balshofer, had returned from a trip up country where they made a big picture. They are now comfortably located in the Gordon street studio in Hollywood, where they will continue activities. He also introduced us to Edward Mozart, one of the prominent exhibitors of the coast, who has a string of seven houses all running the big pictures. Mr. Mozart reported the opening of his new Grand theater in Anaheim, which was a great success. On the opening night, Sunday of last week, there were 139 automobiles parked in front, and this is but a small town, so it was quite auspicious. The house has 680 seats and is modern and up to the minute in every detail. Mr. Mozart formerly was an eastern exhibitor with a string of twenty-two houses, calling it the Mozart Circuit. He has booked "Ramona," "The Ne'er Do Well" and other big features for early exhibitions.

At the local Pathe exchange, where B. E. Loper reigns supreme, business is decidedly on the jump and the manager has booked Lina Cavalieri in "The Shadow of Her Past" to Tally's theater here, and Hick's Plaza theater in San Diego, besides other numerous outside houses.

B. E. Loper, Jr., son of the manager, has returned from an automobile-film tour of the northern part of the state. He has taken charge of the cinema department of the Pathe News and is out all the time shooting events.

While coming in by automobile from San Diego the two Lopers were caught in a speed trap, and the genial cop said, when hearing the manager's name, that he surely was a loper, saying: "You were loping along at thirty-two miles an hour, so you'll have to come along to court Monday morning."

L. E. Kennedy, who is Pathe's road man, has returned from a "daring" trip to Arizona and the border, where he found business fair, outside of the war scares.

The Pals Club of the coast has issued notice that the meetings will be discontinued during the summer as so many of its members, actors and professionals were away on vacations. Notices will be sent this fall when activities return.

Director William E. Wing, of the Superior Films Company, is almost through with "The Faucet," the big feature drama being made at the new studio in the heart of the city. He hopes to give us a pre-view soon and then we can tell something about what the production is. The new concern is very busy and the outlook is for a vigorous season of film making and taking.

If you do not believe that the Universal Company is on the go, just listen to this. Thursday morning we called up M. G. Jonas, manager of publicity, to get a last minute news report. He said there was nothing, only "We have today thirty-seven companies working on Universal Productions." Later in the day we saw his assistant, A. F. Statter, at the beach, and he said: "Well, there's nothing very great going on, but the Universal has thirty-eight companies at work." How's that for increase? One company added during a single day. And the place certainly looks like an apartment house for bees, beavers and ants, it's so busy.

Pretty brown-eyed Vola Smith, who recently joined Robert Leonard's Universal Company, is appearing in a big feature, "The Eagle's Wings," and in this she goes on record as a type entirely new and distinct. She was intrusted with a big part in the Leonard picture and surprised even her director with the unique interpretation she has given the role, in face of the fact that the film world is made up of a wide variety of types.

Business Manager Norman Manning, of the Balboa Company, had business in San Diego. The railroad trains didn't run conveniently and Norman couldn't find an aeroplane so he decided to make the run in his racing car. As he approached the Exposition City, a sign board, bearing this legend, stared him in the face:

DANGER!—Slow Down to 99 Miles.

"Just my luck," growled Norman.

Roberta Wilson is the newest Bluebird star at Universal City. She is to be featured in "Life's Destinies," under the direction of Burton George. She is an Alabama girl, and

The Lubin studio at Coronado may be reopened in about sixty days, according to reports just received by Eugene D. Park, in charge. The plant was closed down several months ago while Captain Wilbert Melville, manager, went east for a business conference.

Captain Melville is at the Van Nuy's Hotel, Los Angeles, for a few days, and is to go on a recreation trip at once. Park has taken charge of the property until further notice and says he believes the place will be reopened when the captain returns.

The fourth episode of "Liberty, A Daughter of the U. S. A.," featuring Marie Walcamp, is under production by Director Jacques Jaccard and is full of thrills, depicting the raid of Mexican bandits upon Columbus, New Mexico, and faithfully showing the border town as it stood at the time of assault. The first three episodes have been completed. Jacques Jaccard is not only directing but has written each episode of this serial. The supporting cast includes Jack Holt, Eddie Polo, G. Ramond Nye, Bertram Grassby, Neal Hart and Maude Emory.

Director Reginald Barker is using a rather unusual setting in a current Ince play being filmed this week at Culver City. It depicts the interior of an Italian restaurant in the Latin quarter of New York City. This set was built under supervision of Art Director Robert Brunton and occupies about 200 square feet of floor space on one of the glass inclosed stages. The set is serving for many of the important scenes in this Triangle Italian drama, written by C. Gardner Sullivan and in which Miss Clara Williams will soon be presented for the first time as a star.

Scenic effects all done in black and white is the novelty introduced in the Triangle Comedy, "Puppets," featuring De Wolf Hopper, and directed by Tod Browning. The production is being made somewhat along the lines of a French pantomime. Hopper wears a black and white striped suit, as do the other members of the cast. The background or the majority of the settings are also finished in black and white. "Puppets" promises to be one of the most unique pictures released on the Triangle program.

Sir Herbert Tree, working in a Fine Arts-Triangle drama, entitled "Old Folks at Home," from the well-known story by Rupert Hughes, is directing the production. Included in the cast are: Josephine Crowell, Elmer Clifton, Mildred Harris, W. E. Lawrence and Lucille Younge.

Considerable excitement was caused among the populace at Venice-By-The-Sea when De Wolf Hopper, playing the villain in a Fine Arts play, "Puppets," threw a dummy baby in the canal.

The camera was concealed on the bank. Hopper grabbed a dummy baby, weighted it down with rocks and hurled it into the canal. A crowd gathered on the canal bank and stood aghast as they watched a supposedly infant murder. After the murder, Hopper and Director Tod Browning in a boat started to drag the canal for the baby, as it had to be secured for other scenes. A squad of police officers came rushing up with intentions to arrest the entire bunch when matters were explained. Two hours were required to locate the dummy baby and haul it back into the boat.

Directress Lule Warrenton spent last week with the Universal Juvenile company at Balboa, where they produced a one-reel fairy picture called "Sea Foam." Miss Jonas has attained considerable success in the way of fiction and script writing.

In view of the approaching trip away from the Los Angeles studios of the Signal Film Corporation, Director-General J. P. McGowan and Helen Holmes (Mrs. McGowan) held a farewell party at their home on Pasadena avenue last Saturday night. Nearly one hundred guests were present and among them were numbered many of the best known members of the Los Angeles photoplay colony.

A five-piece orchestra furnished the music for dancing, which lasted until the "wee-wee" hours. At midnight an elaborate buffet luncheon was served and later prizes were given to the guests for the character and detail of their make-up.

The entire company of Signal players will leave Los Angeles during the ensuing week for Eureka for a stay of six or eight weeks to make exterior scenes in the production of several forthcoming Signal-Mutual releases, titles for which have not been yet announced.

Ince players made a trip to Catalina Islands last Monday as the guests of E. A. Featherstone, well-known motor accessory dealer and clubman, on board his luxurious cruiser, [illegible]. The trip, which has gone down in the history of the plant as one of the most joyous vacations ever enjoyed by the Ince folks, was called "The Million Dollar Outing," from the fact that the aggregate annual income of the participants approximates one million dollars. Those who were Mr. Featherstone's guests were Louise Glaum, Enid Markey, Clara Williams, Dorothy Dalton, Margery Wilson, Margaret Thompson, William S. Hart, William Desmond, Charles Ray, Directors Reginald Barker, Walter Edwards, Raymond B. West, Business Manager E. H. Allen, Superintendent of Production David M. Hartford, Publicity Manager Kenneth A. O'Hara and Camermen J. D. Jennings and Fred Betz.

Included in the party were: Lenore Ulrich, Colin Chase, James Van Trees, Miles Burns, Lynton W. Brent, Charles Yorba and Dick Winkler. More than seventy Sioux Indians were also in the party. They lived over the lives of their ancestors in this picturesque country and provided a wonderful spectacle as well as atmosphere for the artists. "Standing Bear," one of the chiefs from the Pine Ridge agency, had his red brethren in charge.

Margaret Shelby, a sister of Mary Miles Minter, is appearing at the Morosco theater this week in a new play by Grace Livingstone Furness. Two Pathes

Five-Part Gold Rooster Play Featuring Gladys Hulette, and the Story of a Woman's Unfortunate Career, by Popular Plays and Players.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"The Shine Girl."

ONE of the interesting points about this production from the Thanhouser studios is that its scenario was written by Agnes C. Johnson, who is not only one of the youngest, but one of the few scenario writers exhibiting the spark of genius. Miss Johnson is but eighteen years old, and first attracted the notice of the writer through an artistic three-reel production entitled "The Window of Dreams." While "The Shine Girl" could not be termed a powerful play, it represents an idea of great beauty. The character of the "shine" girl is of the positive, individual sort that is sometimes met with in the most unexpected places. Although this little girl's vocation was that of a bootblack, she was not content with the mere shining of shoes. She was of a philosophic turn of mind, and believed among other things that sorrow had the same effect on people that shoe blacking had on shoes, it made them dark at first, but they polished up brighter after it had been rubbed on. She was also the very embodiment of the spirit of love as learned by her only pal Sally; and Sally, by the way, was a poor, sickly geranium who consented to live only because the little "shine" girl carried her out of her dark corner into the sunshine whenever she ventured forth herself, and considered it a privilege to clamber up fire escapes that Sally might drink in larger draughts of the life-giving element.

Scene from "The Shine Girl" (Pathe).

This is an index to the nature of the "shine" girl, and early in life she found opportunities to shine human hearts as well as shoes. She also found her way, along with Sally, into the country where she believed the sun always shone, through the kind heart of the Judge of the Children's Court, whom she afterward rescues from committing a folly, and later marries.

Gladys Hulette has given a beautiful portrayal of the character of the "shine" girl, with A. Wayne playing opposite her as the Judge. There are a few points at which the picture might be brushed into more professional shape, but there is no denying that the central idea has been clearly defined. Some off-shoots of the theme might have been strengthened in detail, and there may be a feeling that the character of the Judge is not a well-balanced one and has been somewhat victimized in bringing about a dramatic climax. Nevertheless the production is distinctly human, clean and beautiful.

"A Woman's Fight."

IN A five-part melodrama, directed by Herbert Blache, the story of how a woman, through the contaminating influence of others becomes a prostitute and a thief, and is later rescued and reformed by a young clergyman, is told in a fairly interesting manner. The opening scenes of the picture, showing the young woman fighting for the honor of a weaker sister, are well staged. In fact, the fist fight between her and one of the unscrupulous minded women of the factory, is one of the most realistic scenes of the kind that we have seen screened. The latter portion of the picture is not, however, as effective in action as the opening, owing to a slight tendency on the part of some of the players to over act, and a rather unnatural quality in the character of the minister, who eventually marries the girl. Neither is the character of the woman an altogether well balanced one. From the spirit and strength of purpose evidenced by her in the period of her factory career, her weak-spined conduct in the latter portion of the picture is hardly consistent.

Geraldine O'Brien and Thurlow Bergen are the stars of the production. Miss O'Brien must be commended for her handling of those scenes in prison where in a half-crazed condition she makes her fight for liberty, and eventually accomplishes her purpose by strategy. In these she does some masterly work; while at other moments of the picture her ability to cope with the situation is less marked.

"The Stronger Love"

Story of Mountaineers Introduces Vivian Martin as Star in Morosco-Paramount Photoplay.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

FOR her first appearance as a Morosco star, Vivian Martin was given a most congenial role. Lithe, graceful and prettily girlish, running barefoot through the underbrush and scaling perilous rocks with never a slip, she is just about everything that one need expect in a child of the mountains. Miss Martin has many rivals, but few superiors in the mountain-maid school of actresses. She can appear altogether sweet with nothing more than a gingham frock for adornment and her acting reveals a natural vivacity which is the chief requisite in portraying a character such as that of Nell Serviss.

When it is stated that a family feud is at the basis of the plot in "The Stronger Love," and that the younger generation of the opposing clans is more concerned with contemporaneous affections than past murders, the general nature of the story may be surmised. But there is a surprise at the close—a real surprise. Ignoring all precedents laid down by scenario writers, Nell does not wed the son of the rival house. To be sure, she announces her intention of doing so, but it is only a friendly declaration made to save Rutherford's life when he is threatened by irate mountaineers. It develops that although Nell has treated the young scion of the hated clan with almost more than friendly kindness through four and one-half reels, her stronger love is for the ever faithful Jim, an unspoiled product of the wild like herself. The main advantage of this conclusion is in its being different.

Director Frank Lloyd and James Van Trees, the cameraman, added materially to the unpretentious story by delighting the eye with flawless photography including some ingenious double exposures and finely judged lighting in securing night scenes. The titling of the film also merits comment. Then, too, the picture is not without its thrills in the fall of a man over a precipice and the mountaineers' assault on the cabin defended by Nell and Rolt. Performances of even merit are given by Director Lloyd, Edward Peil and Jack Livingston.

"The Alibi."

Splendid Five-Part Adaptation of the Novel by George Allen England Features James Morrison in Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN ADAPTING the novel of George Allen England to the screen Paul Scardon has displayed a keen understanding of his subject and has not for a moment lost sight of its dramatic significance. "The Alibi" is remarkably clean cut in style, and has not that flimsy transparency of plot that characterizes so many of the screen melodramas. In other words, the production is unusually well produced and is of tense dramatic interest. The cast chosen for the portrayal of the story are all distinct types that fit admirably the roles allotted them. Among the players whose work is particularly praiseworthy are Betty Howe, James Morrison, Paul Scardon, whose impersonation of Walter Slayten, the "heavy" of the play, is so fine that one marvels in consideration of the fact that he has also directed the picture, Robert Whitworth, Edward Elkas and Robert Gaillard.

The plot of the story, which has been woven with clever intricacy, deals with the case of a young man, Arthur Mansfield, who becomes the victim of one of his fellow employees in a bank, and is sent to prison on a false charge of murder in the second degree and theft. As time goes by the guilty man is overcome by a fear that the prisoner may escape and reveal his dreadful secret. And when the realization of his nightmare comes true he shoots himself. This brings about a peculiar situation, for Mansfield on his escape from prison, making straight for the home of the man who wronged him, arrives on the scene almost the instant at which the tragedy happens. He is about to be arrested on the second charge of murder when the dead man's written confession is discovered. James Morrison does an excellent piece of work in the role of Arthur Mansfield, meeting his heavy requirements in a masterly manner.

"The Sting of Victory"

Henry B. Walthall Takes Two of the Leading Roles in a Southern Story of Civil War Days With Strong Support—Directed by J. Charles Haydon.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IN "THE STING OF VICTORY," a photodrama of Civil War days, set amid southern scenes, by Essanay, the many admirers of Henry B. Walthall will be overjoyed to welcome him back after his wanderings in a strange field that netted him scant artistic profit, but considerable bitterness of soul.

The story, by Charles Mortimer Peck, is quite different from the Civil War stories of several years ago, and its able visualization by Director J. Charles Haydon confines the war scenes to 1,000 feet. These scenes were taken at Camp Logan, in Illinois, and national guardsmen of the state took part in them. It was a strange co-incidence that while some of these scenes were being taken by the camera man orders were issued for the immediate report of all members of the national guard at their respective armories, to prepare for entrainment to Springfield and thence to the Mexican border. Some of the scenes intended for the photodrama were omitted altogether owing to the thinning of the ranks by this summons, but those that remain are fully equal to the purpose of the director and the story.

There is a charming southern atmosphere in the visualization of "The Sting of Victory." It will appeal to every one of nice discernment who observes closely the fine interiors in the Whiting home and in the exterior view of that colonial mansion, also in the costumes of the men and women and in the courtly bearing of the "quality" folks. A quick eye will also detect the difference between the salute given an officer in the early 60's and that now in vogue, in military circles.

The commendable attention to minute details is due to the artistic supervision of Director Haydon, who was born and reared in the south, and who has succeeded admirably in giving us a faithful reflection of southern atmosphere in the days of the story.

Another feat performed by Mr. Haydon is his use of only thirty-three subtitles in the entire five reels, an average of a little over six to every 1,000 feet, quite a triumph for the moving picture in a story that has a number of involved situations.

Mr. Walthall appears as Colonel David Whiting, U. S. A., and Walker Whiting, a younger brother, who is a Confederate officer. His impersonations of these two very dissimilar individualities, often changing one role for the other with lightning swiftness, is a remarkable display of versatility—indeed not only that, but a record in the art of artistic makeup.

The scenes in the Whiting mansion, in which David uncompromisingly stands for the old flag and the blue uniform, while Walker vehemently denounces him as a traitor to his people and enthusiastically espouses secession, are of great strength and photographic beauty. The venerable father and mother and the sister Edith, who loves a northern officer, and Ruth Tyler, the only daughter of an old family whose estate adjoins the Whitings, and who is loved by David, appear with the two brothers in several group views that are worthy of the brush of a great painter.

The spectator will be puzzled often to see Mr. Walthall as David confronting himself as Walker Whiting, and even crossing the median line that bounds double exposure—but it is not for me to solve the riddle just now. There are tricks in moving picture making, as in every other business.

Mr. Walthall is seen at his best when David Whiting (as provost marshal) forces the negro boy Rufus (Bond Turner) to confess that he, and not Walker Whiting, murdered the man Spicer. The tremendous relief of mind and the high exaltation of spirit shown by David at the discovery of his brother Walker's innocence could not be more real.

Thomas Commerford and Laura Frankenfield could not have been better cast at any time than in the fine character parts of the Hon. David Whiting and Mrs. Whiting. Antoinette Walker and Anne Leigh, though they do not photograph to advantage at close-ups and at certain angles, are to be complimented for praiseworthy acting in the respective roles of Ruth Tyler and Edith Whiting. John Lorenz as Jack Spencer, a northern officer, fits the part well. Richardson Cotton hides his individuality cleverly in no less than three roles—George Spicer, a Confederate general and the orator at the secession meeting near the Whiting home in Alabama.

Bond Turner's Rufus is one of the prominent characterizations in the cast. Just watch that nigger dance and show his joy in grimace, eye, and in every part of his anatomy! He has just been given his freedom by David Whiting. Then, too, look at the vindictive face of that same negro when he catches sight of the man who resold him into slavery. Watch him when David Whiting, by superior will power, is forcing him to confess the murder of the man who had wronged him. Surely here we have realistic acting and not mere simulation.

"The Yellow Menace"

First Three Episodes of a Melodramatic Serial to Be Released Labor Day by the Unity Sales Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE authors of "The Yellow Menace" have hit upon a strong theme for the serial in sixteen two-reel episodes, which the Unity Sales Corporation will release Labor Day. As the title indicates, the story deals with the possibility of a fight for supremacy between the Yellow Races and the people of the United States. The treatment of the theme is frankly melodramatic, and every stage device in the way of trap doors, mysterious walls that open at the touch of a finger, the regulation machinery of the popular-price "thriller" that was wont to delight the audiences of a past decade,—has been utilized in this screen play. The first three episodes are called "The Higher Power," "The Mutilated Hand" and "The Poisonous Tarantula." During the action of the six reels no attempt is made to lift the drama above the purely theatric, but every means of keeping the interest at fever heat has been employed. The production is adequate, for the most part, and a capable cast, headed by Edwin Stevens, works earnestly and intelligently during the first three numbers.

"The Higher Power."

The story opens in a city of the East. Ali Singh, a Mongolian leader of great intellectual force, who hates the white races, is at the head of a band of fanatics whose malevolence is aimed principally at the United States. One Embassy is attacked by a mob, but Ali Singh drives the men off, realizing that the time is not ripe for such an act. Errol Manning, a diplomatic agent of Uncle Sam's, is connected with this portion of the drama. "The Higher Power," as Ali is called, determines to sail for America, and the United States Government forbids him to land. He succeeds by a trick and sets up his headquarters in an opium den in New York. J. D. Bronson, a wealthy banker, who is backing an anti-alien law, is the object of Ali Singh's immediate attention, Hong Kong Harry and the Princess Najla (the niece of Singh, and a graduate of Vassar) being his chief assistants. The parties to the love interest are Errol Manning and Margaret Bronson, other bits of potential romance cast shadows in the direction of the princess, young Willard Bronson and May Manning, Errol's sister.

"The Mutilated Hand."

The second episode brings the feminine element into the story. As one means of showing Bronson that he is a dangerous enemy, Ali Singh has Margaret Bronson abducted and made prisoner in the opium den. Here she meets the Princess Najla, who was her fellow student at Vassar. The princess is kindly disposed toward Margaret, but cannot aid her, the wonderful hypnotic power that Ali Singh has over his niece preventing the attempt. Two detectives who try to find the girl, are captured by Ali's men, mutilated and thrown into the river. Errol Manning and young Bronson then rescue Margaret, and Ali makes his escape from the opium den by the aid of a trick chair that is vastly superior to the one invented by Hermann the Great.

"The Poisonous Tarantula."

A new thrill is to be found in the third episode. Senator Johnson is a supporter in the Senate of the anti-alien bill, and Ali puts him out of the running in novel fashion. He first imparts an odor to a letter which is delivered to the intended victim. The odor will attract the tarantula to it and, once on the victim's hand, the spider quickly gets in its deadly work. The Senator is dispatched and Errol Manning is scheduled for the same treatment, but the plot miscarries. The tarantula does not make a miscue, but Najla manages to throw off her uncle's influence long enough to warn her friends.

To the spectator who is satisfied to accept "The Yellow Menace" for just what it is—middle-class melodrama—and has no desire to inquire too closely into its motives and incidents, the serial will prove a source of much entertainment. Edwin Stevens plays Ali Singh with the right amount of exaggerated dramatic expression, and Eric Mayne, Armand Cortes, David Wall, Gerald Griffith, Florence Malone, Marie Treador and Tina Marshall are competent. Margaret Gal as Margaret Bronson is miscast.

"Enoch Arden" Reissued

Biograph's Production of Tennyson's Poem Scheduled for Early September—A Mary Pickford Single Reel.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

PRODUCED by Griffith before the day of two-part releases, "Enoch Arden" was first issued on the General Film program in two installments. It was considered an extremely artistic picture at that time and no doubt will be favorably received even now, for in point of detail and the niceties of direction it will more than bear comparison with the average contemporaneous program production. That the story has a strong sympathetic appeal and one that may be realized through the medium of the screen, is, of course, well recognized, and supplementing the natural charm of the poem is the attraction of really able acting, such as characterized the work of the early Biograph companies.

Wilfred Lucas is quite at his best in presenting Enoch Arden, as the young lover; then stranded through hopeless years on a desert island, and finally returning home to make the supreme sacrifice when he learns that his wife, believing him to be dead, had remarried. Other telling performances are given by Linda Arvidson and Alfred Paget, whereas in minor roles we see a number of old favorites, including Bobby Harron and Florence LaBadie. Needless to say, he picture was appropriately staged and clearly photographed.

Recognizing a revival of the demand for virile western subjects, the Biograph company is selecting for reissue the best of its early productions of this nature. "Iola's Promise" should be particularly acceptable to exhibitors, because, in addition to presenting an Indian story of the best caliber, it shows Mary Pickford in the leading character, that of an Indian maiden who is befriended by a white miner and in gratitude promises to assist him in finding gold. When settlers are attacked by members of Iola's tribe she has an opportunity to prove her loyalty, and does so even at the expense of her own life. Miss Pickford is supported by Alfred Paget and Dorothy Bernard.

Triangle Program

"Hell-to-Pay Austin" Five-Reel Fine Arts, and "Lieut. Danby, U.S.A.," Five-Reel Ince—Two Interesting Stories.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"HELL-TO-PAY-AUSTIN," finely handled and of notable interpretation, can not be ranked quite so high in the matter of original material, though that material is worked out in occasional new form. The story of guardian and ward falling quietly in love with each other through an intimacy of relation that brings about mutual dependence, understanding and trust, is a sweet old story, and nearly always a popular one (witness the long run on the stage of "Daddy Longlegs"), but it must be done well to compare with other versions. It is done well in this case, so well that many of the subtitles will get the big laughs, particularly those used when a lot of hard-drinking lumbermen sit down in a bar and decide by a game of stud poker to which finishing school the little orphan "Nettles" shall be sent.

"Nettles" has been placed in the care of "Hell-To-Pay" Austin, foreman of the lumber camp, a hard hitter, and in reality a man of superior quality hiding under the impression that he killed a man who still lives. His character is clearly set forth by Wilfred Lucas, but interest centers on "Nettles," and here is where the notable interpretation comes in. Miss Bessie Love has been a patient little "supporter" of men who spread all over the screen, giving her only one little corner of it. Of course, we do not object to effervescent Douglas Fairbanks when he uncorks his enthusiasm, but many of us have noticed that little Bessie was doing some fine acting in her tiny parts, and I have more than once suggested that she be given larger opportunity.

In the character of "Nettles" she has a role that suits her size, her personality and her talent, but that is only a small part of it—she has demonstrated beyond the possibility of doubt that she is an accomplished actress. She has the intelligence necessary to reveal her supposed mental condition under varied influences and the ability to communicate her thoughts and feelings without painful artificiality. She has blazed out, a brilliant star in one performance, and it is to be hoped that she is not a comet. She can only become a fixed star by pursuing the same patient and plucky course she has followed in the past. On its general merits, the story should be a decided winner.

"LIEUT. DANNY, U. S. A." is vital—it has a live theme—and it is handled in a romantic way sure to interest. William Desmond plays the title role with manly vigor and Enid Markey never did better than in the role of a Mexican belle, Senorita Ventura. She and her mother barely escape a raid by a former servant, now leading some murderous bandits, Pedro Lopez, "The Butcher." He is in pursuit of the senorita and her mother near the border when they are rescued by Lieutenant Danny and his troopers. He falls in love and she promises an answer to his proposal if he will visit her at her hacienda. The young officer crosses the border later on alone and gets his answer, but just as the bandit is making a second raid.

Lieutenant Danny is shot down in a summary execution of those who defend the hacienda, and the mother is paralyzed during the attack. "The Butcher" has a clear field to persecute the aristocratic senorita and does so with characteristic brutality. These pictures of action are sharply suggestive of what is now going on in the benighted sister republic across the Rio Grande, and they are fascinatingly realistic. The young officer escapes death through the interposition of a souvenir given him by the senorita and returns to the rescue at an acute moment, killing the bandit and escaping across the border with the girl he loves, though her home is destroyed and her mother killed during the action. The play is spirited, the characters well taken, all the leads being strong in their roles, and the vital issues involved should bring decided success to the release.

"Big Game Hunting in a Drop of Water"

One-Reel Argus Film Produced by the Leggett-Gruen Corporation Which Reveals New Possibilities in the Microcinematograph.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE title of this film is well chosen. It shows the collector at the pond-side dipping up a small jar of water for examination, then shows how he captures the minute animalculae from the jar by means of a small glass tube and a magnifying glass, placing it on a slide and under the objective of the microscope. First the Green Hydra is shown; then the Cyclops, and all its internal circulation and organic movements can be plainly seen. Two species of Entomostraca follow, in the first of which attention is called to the breathing feet, and the second, a tiny bivalve, shows his skill in removing obstacles from his path. Two varieties of Water Mite, a beautiful Rhizopod and two Rotiffera complete this interesting and highly instructive reel.

"Big Game Hunting in a Drop of Water" is the first of a series of microcinematographic and other nature studies being made by Prof. Edgar J. Wright and H. D. Ashton, and has been accomplished by means of an apparatus devised by these two patient workers whereby the objects to be picturized can be watched on the film while being photographed. Heretofore the greatest difficulty has been that, owing to the ultra-rapid movements of the small objects, they dart out of the field of the microscope before they can be photographed. The question of light has also been a serious one. Under former conditions the heat from a ray of light sufficiently brilliant for photographing was so great that exposure to it for even a few moments meant death to the delicate germ or animalcule. This problem they have also solved.

A vast field has been opened to workers along these lines, and another world of unimaginable plants and animals of wonderful form and beauty awaits the camera.

"Little Eve Edgarton"

The Novel of Eleanor H. Abbott Well Suited to Screen Adaptation—Five-Part Version on Program of Bluebird Photoplay, Inc.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

TO ROBERT LEONARD belong the laurels for narrating effectively on the screen the story of "Little Eve Edgarton." The character of the story as conceived by Eleanor H. Abbott makes it especially well adapted to the narrative form. Its screen presentation will be found to be a remarkable character study, in which Ella Hall, Dorris Pawn, Gretchen Lederer, Thomas Jefferson, Herbert Rawlinson, and Marc Fenton are exhorted to their best efforts. Ella Hall, as the daughter of the botanist who has lived her life roaming about with her father, studying and arranging his collections, never knowing any real home, is to be commended. Her handling of the character of this studious, spectacled young woman, outwardly stolid, inwardly afire, is further proof of her versatility. The director has kept constantly in mind the contrast between the life mapped out for Eve by her father, and the other life of homes and people of which she longs to be a part, by short flashes introducing the characters which are later to have a part in the molding of her path. Thomas Jefferson is delightful as Paul R. Edgarton, professor of botany, and Herbert Rawlinson as the flirt, who finally falls a prey to the transformed edition of Eve, is what one would expect in the jolly young idler who loves wine, golf and the girls. Marc Fenton as John Elbertson, a friend of Eve s father, who she consented to marry because she had had no association with any other also holds the individuality of the character well.

The production will be much enjoyed, contains some excellent comedy situations, and has the charm of originality in addition to many other attractive qualities.

"The House With the Golden Windows"

A Lasky Production in Which Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid Take the Principal Parts.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS is a dream-picture. The greater part of the feature deals with a dream. Dreams on and off the screen are exempt from the ordinary rules of dramatic construction and consistency. Only by pleading this exemption can the producer put himself beyond the reach of criticism. The play begins with a prologue part fable and part allegory. At a rather unexpected moment and before the audience has time to adjust itself to the sudden change, the whole thing merges into a dream.

Some of the good points of the Lasky school are pleasingly in evidence; there is the usual choice of rich and realistic settings; there is the atmosphere and there is good acting. The photographic excellence is maintained throughout, but when all this has been said all the matter for just praise has been exhausted, and the rest is a dream. Dreams are illogical, take no cognizance of dramatic values or rational plot and rational development.

The great scenic beauties of the film, its numerous artistic and idyllic scenes, its undeniable pastoral charm cannot blind us to the fact that the story is far from plausible and almost wholly without any dramatic merit. It seems a pity to see so much artistic skill, so much poetry in motion, so much clever acting wasted on a story that is not worth telling.

"THE WOMAN IN THE CASE."

A Famous Players Feature in Which Pauline Frederick Takes the Leading Part.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

IN the "literature" accompanying this film play it is described as "an impressive picturization of Clyde Fitch's greatest dramatic triumph" and as "a photo adaptation of the celebrated stage success." The facts in the case justify the latter rather than the former description. Nor can it be said that the "photoadaptation" is anything like an unqualified success. Whatever there is of dramatic action, popularly spoken of as the "punch," does not develop until well toward the end and at about the moment when the interest of the audience begins to wane. For four reels or thereabouts the action travels at a snail's pace, but in the last reel it makes amends.

While Pauline Frederick is featured as the star and gives her usual honest and conscientious performance, the work of Marie Chambers in the part of Claire Forster calls for special commendation. Her acting impressed me as that of a talented and exceedingly clever and brainy woman. In most of the big scenes she carried off the honors by holding the interest of the audience.

Settings, atmosphere and photography are fully up to the usual high standard the public has learned to associate with the trade-mark of Famous Players.

Barbara gets wind of the affair and, knowing that her father has not fully recovered his strength, prevails upon him to go home and leave matters in her hands. The syndicate hatch up a neat plot to injure the property and get possession of it, but Barbara proves one too many for them. The story is strongly dramatic and is well put together, its value being enhanced by the realistic way in which the scenes are reproduced. The location is a genuine oil field, and an interesting disclosure of the method by which the fluid is handled is one of the best features of the picture. Marin Sais continues her spirited and finished acting of the heroine, and True Boardman, Frank Jonasson, Ronald Bradbury, Edward Glisbee and Hart Hoxie are of service in maintaining the excellence of the production.

"Hurled Through the Drawbridge."

The title of the third episode of the "Hazards of Helen" does not overstate what takes piace during the action of this one-reel thriller. The Lone Point operator plunges through an open draw while racing along on a handcar. She also rides a motorcycle over a trestle while endeavoring to warn a special train that a party of crooked sporting men are trying to wreck. The result of an auto race depends upon preventing a celebrated French driver from entering the contest. This race is shown at the finish of the picture. Helen Gibson never loses her smile during the hazards, and is assisted in the acting by P. S. Pembroke, G. A. Williams, Clen Gano, Jack Messick and George Routh.

"The Folly of Desire"

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

STARTING with a quite elaborate prologue, showing how a king in ancient times desired a maiden who preferred another, this five-part melodrama goes on to present a somewhat similar case in modern life—the king becoming a South African cattleman and the slave girl the daughter of poor peasants. The argument that a brutal man is always brutal, despite changes in creeds or customs, is, of course, perfectly sound; also it is easy to admit that it is foolish to allow desire full sway. Almost everybody in this picture is miserably unhappy because of a general mismating.

The story adapted and produced by George L. Tucker is melodramatic in the extreme and bears little resemblance to reality; yet at times possesses a crude force. Norman McKinnel's characterization of the rugged South African, whose favorite diversions are reading the Bible and beating his young wife, is a strong bit of work. The girl, to whom life is an almost unbroken series of unpleasant happenings, is adequately presented, whereas no fault need be found with other figures in the picture.

But it is doubtful if an audience will take some of the most intense scenes seriously, so thickly are the horrors piled on, and from an American standpoint, the studio sets used in place of exteriors, will seem quite out of place. Almost the entire picture was photographed in a studio, although much of the action is supposed to transpire in the open. Director Tucker did all in his power to surround his production with a thick gloom, getting thicker at the approach of a climax, such as that in which the cattleman drags his wife from the house and ties her to a stake, preparatory to a summary execution. A thunderstorm is the accompaniment for this little pleasantry. "The Folly of Desire" may be characterized as melodrama of the old school.

"The House of Mirrors."

A SOMEWHAT theatrical rendering of one of the "fifteen-years-after" type of story, showing first the separation of man and wife through his unjust suspicion, he taking the little son and his wife the little daughter. Neither husband nor wife changes materially during the fifteen years' lapse, yet the children do not know the parents they have not seen in this time, the mother does not recognize her son, nor does the father recognize his own daughter. Of course the brother and sister can not be expected to know of the relation and they are almost on the verge of an engagement, the son asking his mother's consent for his sister's hand in marriage without revealing his true name, and she is on the verge of consent without knowing anything about the young man, when she sees a ring on his finger that she gave his father. She has become the proprietor of a gambling establishment in order to bring the daughter up "suit bly," that is with a mother engaged in a disreputable occupation, and the son has become a frequenter of the resort.

Here we have a man brutally cold to his wife, after sending her out in the company with another man because he "forgot the engagement," heedless of the effect of divorce on the children, willing to send his innocent little girl into a career of disadvantage, a man lacking in compassion and sense of duty, a wife who gets drunk the evening she goes to an entertainment with the mutual friend, forgetting that she is the mother of two lovely children; a son grown up to be a drunkard and gambler, and a mutual friend undeserving of trust. With the exception of the latter, this nice group is brought into a happy relation at the end with an expectation that the audience will really care what becomes of them. Happily there is the sweet and innocent little daughter and the son of the mutual friend to help out, but their roles are minor ones, the object being apparently to show that the cruel husband did not appreciate that the wife who became intoxicated with the mutual friend and subsequently ran a gambling place to educate her daughter was really a good woman.

"The Strength of Donald McKenzie."

This is a long drawn out attempt to make a story out of scant materials. Nearly every scene is stretched to the breaking point. With them all in, the story could be told in three reels, and a large number of them are mere amplifications of the unnecessary and the uninteresting. For instance, in order to register that Donald is an orphan, a fact of no particular moment—nothing among subsequent events calls for even a brief explanation to that effect—nearly an entire reel is used, depicting the accidental death of his father by sitting under a tree about to fall, and the slow death of his mother. We are given a view of their graves and have to sit wondering where this dark alley is leading to, "a blind alley" is where the amateur wanders without knowing exactly where he is going to land. Donald's greatest strength is in writing a book of poems which saves the father of the girl he loves, a publisher able to keep up city and country establisments, while a poet would fall dead with joy if either he or the publisher made a thousand dollars in jig time on one book of poems. So with the entire release—it is so dull as to be without reason for existence.

"Her Father's Son" Next Vivian Martin Subject.

Immediately following the release of "The Stronger Love," Vivian Martin's initial production, under the Morosco banner on the Paramount program, the west coast producers announce that work has been commenced on Miss Martin's new subject entitled "Her Father's Son."

The second vehicle for the winsome little star offers a drama of heart interest together with quaint situations, by Anna Fielder Brand, and deals with the period in the South just prior to the Civil War. The versatility of the new Morosco actress is afforded particular opportunity to assert itself in the chief role of this photoplay which will present her in a character quite different from her usual line of work. In accordance with the story Miss Martin disguises herself as a boy and as a result encounters many difficulties which are straightened out only when the climax of the play is reached.

William D. Taylor, director of "Pasquale," "The American Beauty," "Davy Crockett," and many other Paramount successes, is staging the new Martin subject. It is promised that in addition to Mr. Taylor's usual delicate touches which will be evidenced in "Her Father's Son," various spectacular scenes of unusual realism are to be included in the production. Arrangements for a series of big battle scenes are under way and one of the largest interior sets ever erected at the Morosco studios is now being built. This set will represent a massive ballroom and it is expected will establish a new record for elaborate beauty and excellence even exceeding anything that Morosco has yet offered in this regard.

Supporting Miss Martin is another typical Morosco cast, including such sterling players as Herbert Standing, Alfred Vosburgh, Helen Jerome Eddy, Joe Massey, Jack Lawton, Lucille Ward and Tom Bates. Homer Scott is supervising the camera work.

Universal Special Features.

The Victor-Universal release for August 10, "The Marriage Broker," in which Ben Wilson is starred, and Dorothy Phillips and Joe Girard are featured, is a two-reel human-interest story adapted from one of Bruno Lessing's famous Ghetto stories.

"The Highway of Fate," a two-reel Imp drama, is the feature for August 11. This is a story of gypsy life and gypsy love, and will hold the intense interest of any audience fortunte enough to see it. The featured players are Sydell Dowling, Joseph Stanley, Sidney Bracy and Paul Panzer. The story was produced by Robert F. Hill.

The Bison feature for August 12, Cleo Madison, in "The Guilty One," is also an exceptional feature in every way. It is a two-reel western drama written by R. F. Bradbury, scenarioized by Harvey Gates and produced by Cleo Madison and William V. Mong. It was formerly advertised under the title "Along the Malibou." The strong cast includes Bertram Grassby and Charles Gunn and a troupe of fearless riders.

"The Speed King," a two-reel drama of the automobile race course, released under the Imp brand on August 13, brings back recollections of the sensational race in which Bob Burman lost his life. This two-reeler is dedicated to Burman. The story was written by Walter Woods and produced by Richard Stanton, who takes the lead with Marcia Moore playing opposite. It contains some wonderful race stuff and works up very cleverly to a gripping climax.

Billy Mason's "Midsummer Madness."

"Smiling" Billy Mason and his director, John Steppling, are filming a one-reel comedy entitled "Midsummer Madness," featuring Mason.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Booming Yourself.

ABOUT the most remarkable phase of the exhibition business, to an old theatrical man, is the amount of money spent by Exhibitors in advertising others than themselves. This was brought home the other day while looking over several offers from manufacturers. One house had some trademarks to sell. They were offered at fifteen cents each in mat. This was reasonable enough—if the Exhibitor wanted them, but he was urged to buy a lot of them and use them in all his advertising. A frame for his newspaper work was also offered. This cost according to size. It was a solid frame and since it was offered in matrix, it meant not only that the Exhibitor must pay the cost of casting, but also the cost of mortising the center before he could use it. The trademark of the company dropped down into the rectangular space from the top, and thrust itself up from the bottom, necessitating either some fancy routing or else the loss of perhaps twenty lines in a double column cut; lines that could have been used to advantage in advertising the house. Most concerns deal with the Exhibitor in precisely the same way. They not only urge him to advertise his brand above his house, but they expect him to pay for the material with which he does it. That is the strange part of the whole affair. The maker spends some money with the Saturday Evening Post. Then he expects the Exhibitor to spend more, to profit by this national advertising. For a moment it sounds logical, but is it? Several breakfast foods are generously advertised. But is the grocer urged to pay a dollar or so for cuts and several dollars for space with which to advertise a certain brand of food, in order to "profit" by the insertion of the national advertising? Not a bit of it. If he wants cuts they will probably be supplied him free. Men are sent to dress his windows free, or he is supplied with the material without cost. He is given free matter for distribution and thanked for sending it out. He does not spend money to supplement the national advertising. He leaves it to the manufacturer to get out the national advertising and create the demand. If there is a demand, he sells the goods and lets it go at that. He does not thankfully pay fifty cents for a cut of the breakfast food package to put into his own newspaper or circular advertising. He is more apt to demand free circulars. Some houses are so firmly connected with a certain line of film that they cannot make a change without a serious loss of patronage for a time. There are some few houses, mostly run by old time theatrical men, where the house is headlined and the films announced as the daily attraction and not the brand as the permanent appeal. They are very few, but the manager who spends money to rivet himself to any single releasing connection is forging fetters hard to break.

It is all right to use trademark cuts if they are supplied free, but if the house will spend several dollars an agate line to get these cuts into the Post, why should they not give the cuts to the Exhibitor who will use them? They do not charge the Post for the cut material and they do pay the advertising bills. It is about time that the Exhibitors began to waken to the fact that in some respects they are short sighted. Make it a tradition that there is always a good program at your house, without committing yourself to any one brand, and there is more likely always to be that good program. The excessive use of brand cuts prevents this.

Branching Out.

Since William Lord Wright joined the Selig advertising staff he has run a column in the Selig clip sheet that has been liberally used by Exhibitors for pragram filler and by photoplay page editors to give a spice of humor. Now the best of material will be picked each month and taken over to a book form issue intended for news stand distribution. It speaks for itself that the Selig press material is good enough to command ten cents on a news stand sale, but as we have before remarked, this column is good newspaper stuff and not press work in the general sense, and it looks as good in book form. It has been used from Alaska to South Africa because it is bright and snappy. We would not give it all this space here, though, were there not a moral. The moral is that of the large package of manufacturers' bulletins that come to the managerial desk, the Paste Pot and Shears is apt to be dug up because there is some good reading as well as advertising. It is Mr. Wright's way of paying you for reading the Selig advertising. Do you pay your own readers for reading YOUR house advertising? If you do not, you overlook a bet. You can see how it works, so make your own house program brighter if it needs it.

A Calendar.

C. W. Goodwin, of the Larkin, San Francisco, sends in a calendar that differs from most of those that come in. In the first place it is printed on paper instead of a card, a sheet of heavy 8½ by 11 paper, the usual letter size, and the paper is not too heavy to be folded and opened up again, so that it can be sent through the mails in the regulation letter envelope without damage, where most calendars of halfway decent size must be provided with a special envelope and generally arrive badly crushed. In the second place the entire program is not crowded into the small box. This takes only the star and the title of the feature. The regular schedule is shown in brief below. It probably will not show in the reduction, but each mention of the house name is made in Comstock type and this holds good of all printing, including the house letter head and envelopes. It is made a sort of trademark, and though a standard face, it is sufficiently marked to serve as such. The sample sent is on gray paper with a smooth finish, but showing a sprinkle of threads of a darker tint and it is printed in a deep green that stands out well and yet is not obtrusive.

Zipping Right Along.

Just because it took us a couple of weeks or so to get around to mentioning the Empress Theater Weekly, of Flagstaff, Arizona, J. J. Costigan cuts us off the list, but when he read the item, he put us back again, but he did not send the back numbers. Some of his present editorials are pretty strong, but we'll bet any part of two weeks' salary that they are being read. He is running old jokes tied to the leading citizens for filler and this probably makes for local interest, but some of his editorial are more suggestive of Brann's Iconoclast than the Arizona Kicker to which we first likened the sheet. No one will ever call the sheet dull, but it might be toned down a bit as to editorials for a house organ.

Good, But When.

The McKinley Square, in the Bronx, sends in a couple of throwaways. One of these offers a good idea but the framing of the matter is too vague. It offers to give the special reels, but nowhere on the sheet does it say when they will be given and so the matter loses its effect.

If this was a special night the date should have been given. If they offer seven old reels each night that fact should be made known. The essential text is a long list of names of players with this introduction:

YOUR FAVORITE STAR IN THEIR FAVORITE PICTURE
Below is a list of famous Stars. We want you to pick out
SEVEN Favorites and we will show their favorite picture
IN ADDITION TO OUR REGULAR FEATURE
7 single Reel Pictures and a 5 Reel Feature the same day.
Put a cross [X] after the name of your seven favorites, fill out below with name and address, leave in SUGGESTION BOX in the lobby and we will inform you of the date of this
BIG SPECIAL 12 REEL SHOW

It is to be presumed that the reels were booked as convenient and announced as the selected seven. Where these choices are not given too often the stunt can be worked without trouble, and it works as well with new material, a list of available stuff being given and the stuff actually booked being announced as the choice. It is better still when the choice of the patrons can be actually catered to. A second throw-away suggests that each night is an "allstar program," but if they are giving twelve reels every night they are using up their patrons too fast and will lose them presently. Twelve reel shows are far too long to command constant attendance.

Stunts.

F. H. Franke, of the California, Chicago, sends in some stunts. One relates to "Damaged Goods," and another to Chaplin. He explains them:

Some time ago we showed "DAMAGED GOODS" and to advertise same different from the usual routine way, I took an old dilapidated kitchen table, bought about a dozen plaster paris statues about twenty ins. high, some already damaged and the others in good condition, but the latter we damaged ourselves, that is, knocked off some heads, arms, and broke some right in two and put them on the aforementioned table, and in front of same we placed a big card reading "DAMAGED GOODS," the date of showing, etc., and broke all records.

The next stunt was to advertise "Chaplin's Carmen." I went and bought a thirty in. high Chaplin doll built an "A" sign out of two one sheet frames and in front of frame placed a large card 28 x 44, put the Chaplin doll in center of the card and on each side reading matter as shown on enclosed photograph. This stunt also created an extraordinary amount of curiosity and business. If you think it worth while, pass it along.

The Chaplin stunt is shown in the accompanying reproduction, but the lettering was done in blue and red, both vivid on the sign, but the blue takes white and is completely faded in the photograph—which is one reason why we cannot reproduce some programs we would like to. The text in full reads:

My face is my fortune, the pretty lady said to Charles Chaplin. He said, My fortune are my feet, worth $670,000 a year.

Another reading for the same sign is:

I may be crazy, but I am no fool. $670,000 makes me act that way.

For a lantern slide pair he used.

The Average pictures are like 10 Chinamen.
They all look alike.
It would take a clever detective with a Bertillon chart
To tell the difference.
Please read the next slide.

And then

But you will recognize That the California
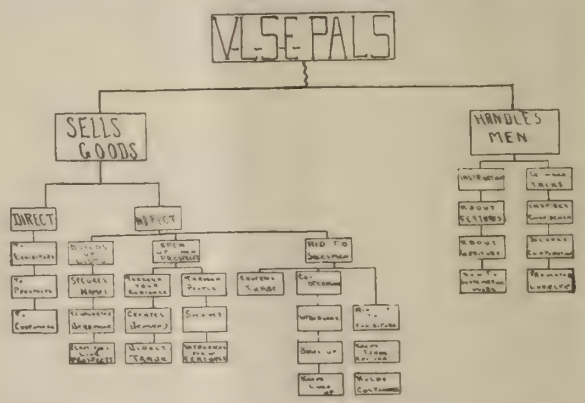
Distinctly different
Cost you no more than the other kind.

Mr. Franke suggests that ten negroes or sheep will do as well for a simile. Perhaps you can get hold of a stock slide showing a flock of sheep or a line of darkies, making the slide a triple. It has been some time since anyone has sent in copy for series slides. Is Mr. Franke the only one using them?

Took a Hint.

Lately in speaking of some suggestions sent in by L. J. Scott, we lamented that other exchange publicity men did not pass along the ideas that came to them. And in about the time it required for the paper to get to Seattle and a letter to come back, we get word from Tom North that he can take a hint. To prove it he sends in some stuff of his own and stuff sent him by his clients, a nifty bunch. His first exhibit is a graphic showing of the value of an exchange organ. It is a splendid argument for the maintenance of such a publication. The chart may not show well in the sketch, but it will give the idea. To recapitulate, the V-L-S-E Pals both sells goods and handles men.



It sells goods directly through its appeal to to the exhibitors, to prospects and to customers; though we think that "To Exhibitors" covers the other two. Indirectly it sells goods through building up a mailing list which secures the names of prospects, eliminates deadwood and classifies the prospects. It aids the salesmen by providing them with argument, co-operating with them in their sales and through keeping the trade advised as to the goods the exchange offers while it handles men through instruction as to territory, the features, and a series of ginger talks.

The Exhibits.

Most of the exhibits are house organs. One is the Lariat, gotten out by C. G. Matlock of the Pastime, Pendleton, Oregon, home of the roundup, which probably suggested the title. In its earlier days Mr. North suggested that the Lariat was Pal Matlock's idea of roping them in, but he ropes them, apparently, and does not rely upon the house organ alone, for V-L-S-E Pals often tells of other of his stunts. It is a four page sheet with a title cut in which the noose of the lariat forms the frame for the house announcement while the rest of the rope forms the title. Three cuts are run on the front page and the program itself runs on page three, where it properly belongs. The days are dated and the program is unusual in that it runs from Thursday to Thursday instead of starting with the Sunday or Monday bill. The second page is given to chat and announcement, preferably to chat that runs into announcement and the back features a coming release. It is nicely printed and is a good looking sheet save that the matter on page two is in a type too large for the space. A six point would look better, or a seven-on-eight point.

The Rose theater, Regina, Canada, has a well printed post card giving a picture of the house and medalion cuts of the house staff. These are given to the patrons for use as postcards. Nothing is said as to the method of distribution, but the best way is to have a writing desk in the foyer or retiring room with plenty of cards in a rack.

The Rosebud, Portland, offers something new in the matter of getting the advertising read. The essentials are shown in the portion reproduced:

MERCHANTS' NIGHT.

Your community merchants whose advertisements appear below invite you to attend the Rosebud every Monday night as their guest. A Rosebud ticket with each 25c purchase.

BE SURE TO ASK FOR YOUR TICKET.
PRIZE CONTEST.

The management of this theater has selected a slogan consisting of two words composed of a total of ten letters. One letter each week will appear in some merchant's advertisement below. This particular letter each week will be in some word of some advertisement in an inverted position or upside-down.

At any time after the ninth week's program is issued the first three persons to submit the complete slogan together with the nine programs of the series of 10, will receive, in the following order:

1st Prize.....$10.00
2nd Prize.....Pass for 3 months
3rd Prize.....Pass for 1 month

This makes for interest, but remember in selecting your slogan, if you follow the plan, that an "O" looks the same in reverse and not many will catch a reverse "s" or may mistake a turned "c" for an "o." In the program to hand an address reads "Burnsipe" for "Burnside" street. In the sample the inverted letter appears about a third of the way down the page. The space is five inches, two columns wide. Some merchants might object that the reader will stop once tbe reverse letter has been found. To overcome this it will be better to announce that from three to five letters will be inverted, one of which is to be used. Then use three or four letters and the entire block of advertisements must be read. Probably the house is sold to the tradesmen for Monday and a small profit shown on a poor night. Perhaps, also, the advertisements are thrown in free in return for this arrangement.

Playing Safe.

Another interesting stunt is a book of coupon tickets, thirty coupons for three dollars. These are put out by H. Fowler of the Gem, Cleary, Wash. If a specified number of books have been sold, the house opens for the month. If not the house will not open, or at least that is the plan. In a word, the management collects in advance and plays safe; a scheme that may appeal to others in small towns of doubtful support and no opposition. Each book is good only for a certain month, but it is not restricted as to the user. This seems to be a new scheme. Coupon books are old ideas, but the rest is novel indeed.

In spite of Shakespeare, sometimes the good that men do also lives after them. Hopkins and Hallberg, of the Dream, Port Angeles, Wash., use the So-U-Ma-No monthly program invented by Ralph Ruffner, when he was in Butte. They work it on a red card six by six handled as a four page folder. It is punched so that it may be hung up for reference.

The Orpheum, Snohomish, Wash., uses a four page folder with a straight makeup for the inside program. It is simple and effective enough and not costly. I. L. Williams is the manager who edits them.

The Society, Seattle, George Ring, manager, uses a four page nine by twelve. It is a little too white. Possibly to save composition costs, the type is leaded out and it does not suggest a newspaper. Another fault is the use of too much clip stuff. The layout of the program might be improved by talking to the printer. The copy is all right, but it does not look imposing because carelessly set.

The Noble, Marshfield, Ore., managed by Robert Marsden, is represented by a throwaway for the "Rosary." This is a slip six by seventeen inches and the type is unusually well selected, the name being prominent and the lesser sections being well played up. This was the first of the V-L-S-E releases to be shown and was given with an elaborate musical program. It follows the best rules of composition in display and is by no means small town stuff.

The Lyric, Coeur d'Alene, used a six page folder for "The Battle Cry of Peace," but the press work is poor. Evidently the printer used poor inks and both the red and blue fail to work well in the mass. Even at that, it makes a showy herald and is worded to carry a pull.

And of course there is always Pals to fall back upon for ideas. Here are a couple:

The Dream theater, Kent, Ore., had to face a municipal celebration July Fourth. Instead of shutting down Exhibitor Atkinson hired two features and ran "The Cave Man" in the afternoon and "Green Stockings" at night, getting two chances at the same clientele the same day.

The Tivoli, Portland, in launching a serial, ran a coupon that was good for three admissions if accompanied by ten cents. The line ran "Bring your friends. This will admit three for a dime." The scheme is good only for serials.

Volume Two.

Stage and Screen, the house organ of the Opera House, Columbia, and Dreamland, Bath, Maine, has come to its second volume. In the six months the sheet has been running it has picked up wonderfully. It made a good start, but the editor has caught the little tricks that make for knowingness of appearance and it looks more like a regular paper than a house organ. It is almost ready to go to eight pages.

As She's Wrote.

George E. Stone, of Berkeley, California, sends in a much traveled throwaway of the Teatro Arrasty which he picked up on the street at Port Limon, Costa Rica. The top half is in Spanish and the lower half in English. The attraction is "In Memory of Another" and the best the compositor could do was this:

> In tis beautiful drama there is not a single detail that is not of delicacy artistic. The scenenes of nature are fine. The glorious applauses of vanity of an original and artistic woman who enchants the soul and intelligence of a young writer: the love wlnik et inspires under the shades of a summer garden; the Jealonsey of a lover, the victime who, in luccerity and travels in search of means to heil his wounder heart; the gold which labishingly he give away in eychange of disemblance wick at the end is victorious: the passion of the soul inchimed tocvards the attracted being of its affection, the faility uhich causes pains & sufferings to the young man, the snblime whoman uho consagrates her attentions to her lover during his illeess and in conclusion to final suffering and pains consequent of a pure love.

It must be fine to see the sufferings consequent of a pure love after the deluge of sex stuff we have had. Let's all move down. The bill is about 10 by 13½, rough print paper and set mostly in seven point. The title in Spanish is a six line letter with a five line letter for the house name and a 48 point title for the American section. The two synopses form a break, the Spanish section running about double the words of the American version.

L. J. Scott, of the Kansas City V-L-S-E, starts something when, in the Clansman, he asks the readers to split 50-50 with him. The idea is that you profit from reading what others say in the Clansman and you are not turning in your percentage unless you write in your own successful schemes. That goes for this department, too. If you've been helped then help others. Don't imagine that you cannot. If you can keep a house open you can tell some things that will help others to keep open. Pay up your percentage.

And a new idea that Mr. Scott has been working is to have the merchants work in with the small house on "The Battle Cry of Peace." As exhibit A he reproduces seven trade advertisements from the Fairbury (Neb.) Journal, offering special bargains for "Battle Cry" days. Five of these refer to the film. The others merely make special prices on certain articles for those days, but all take notice of the occasion and all help to advertise, without charge, the attraction at the Majestic. This seems to be a new angle on publicity, but it is based on well founded fact. The big films bring the country people in and while they are in they visit the stores. Mr. Scott argues that the merchants can be made to help on bringing the feature to town. It can, of course, be worked with other subjects than the "Battle Cry."

Not a Veteran.

J. H. Shaw, of the Electric, Alba, Mo., sends in a letter with a frank confession. He says:

> I am enclosing a screamer issued soon after assuming the Electric, which I hope you will criticize. Its references, in almost every case, are to conditions or impressions existent. I am willing to admit that I don't know a ——— thing. What about the editorial "we" in theater advertising?

We think it will help Mr. Shaw to get a copy of Picture Theater Advertising. It does not merely deal with newspaper and printed advertising generally, but it tells how a house should be run to advertise itself—which is the more important matter.

The throwaway is 6 by 18 inches; rather too long to be handled conveniently, but he felt he had a lot to say. The first bank announces that the house will continue to be run. The second section points out that sometimes a theater thrives on a change and suggests an amendment to the belief that only one man can run the Electric; presumably his predecessor. This may be bad if the former owner was popular. It may be accepted as a covert attack upon him. It would have been better to have admitted the cleverness of the former incumbent and to have expressed a determination to be inspired by his example to try to do even better. The third bank tells of a determination to make the show go big. This is better. The fourth says that the sounds of hammering in the theater do not indicate the demolition of the auditorium, but the building of a stage that vaudeville may be given if the patrons desire it. This, we believe, is an error. Vaudeville seldom builds up a house. It is generally better to run the extra money into better music. Men who have tried both know that music is a better card than the sort of vaudeville that can be afforded. The next instalment announces the feature for the night of distribution. This is all right except that the composition is unusually bad. The printer should be given a hard look, a very hard look. The last division uses the happy line

> Had you thought of it?
> The Romance of the World
> Brought before you for > FIVE CENTS AN HOUR

This last is good, but unless we do not see the proper situation in the town, we think that the majority of the text is aggressive in the wrong way. It challenges comparison and may rouse enmity where this is not intended. For example, Mr. Shaw says:

> "'Til death do us part" does not apply to the theater and its owner. A theater thrives under a change.

Translated this might be taken to mean: "You suppose John Smith is the only man who can make a go of the Electric. He isn't in it with me. You watch me." Instead of this perhaps another line may have taken, as > "A new broom sweeps clean," and I'm going to try to make a clean sweep. It is going to be my ambition to make the > even better than it was before, bringing to it new ideas and fresh enthusiasm. And I want you to help me by telling me the sort of theater you like.

This would be more likely to make friends. It does not throw a rock at the departing manager. It does make an appeal for friendship.

As to the singular and plural pronouns opinion may be divided. As a rule the "We" is better because it supposes the entire staff and not merely the manager. The singular is better where the manager intends to make his personality the chief attraction of the house

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Please Note.

PHOTOPLAYWRIGHTS who wish to order a copy of the new edition and who live some distance from New York will save considerable delay if they will address their orders to The Moving Picture World at the Chicago office, Schiller Building, or the Haas Building, Los Angeles, according to their location. Arrangements have been made to ship books from these branch offices the same day the order is received, and the delays incident to the parcels post will be avoided on the shorter haul, while there is also some gain in the time of travel of the order itself.

Blackman's Billiards.

Herman A. Blackman has been too busy writing stories to contribute much to this department, but always when he does say something, it is to the point. This time he takes billiards for his theme and he writes:

> Have you noticed how many, many stories forecast their whole general outline in the first twenty or thirty scenes. There is always the same formal process used in building the plot? It reminds me of a nice little carom shot in billiards. You see the three balls right in a line. Mr. Dub takes his cue and figures his angles with his eye. He strikes the red ball just right and his ball rebounds to the side cushion. It rebounds from the side cushion at precisely the angle that it approached it, strikes the end cushion, rebounds at exactly the angle it approached that cushion, cuts across to the side cushion and still again rebounds at the angle of approach. Then it strikes. The moment you saw the ball carom from the red ball, you knew exactly what it was going to do all the way around.
> Then, perhaps, a real billiardist takes up his cue to make the shot. He doesn't shoot at the red ball at all! He aims straight for the side cushion and you think that the ball will certainly rebound right back to his cue. But it doesn't. It twists away across the table and does not rebound at the angle of approach! It gently kisses the red ball and makes for the side cushion. You feel sorry for him because it is plain that the ball is going to strike the cushion so as to rebound and miss the other ball. But, again, it does not rebound as you thought it would. It is headed almost for the other ball, twisting and writhing its way along. Its "legs" are about gone and now—you can scarcely believe your eyes—it is not rolling in a straight line. Impossible as it seemed at the start, it "makes" and you have been the victim of so many freakish things and surprises that you involuntarily breathe a sigh of relief.
> Now, of course, you know what made the ball do the freakish things. It was English, and English is what puts zest into a story. I do not mean freakish stuff that is absolutely opposed to all the generalities of life. The billiard ball with the English on it, obeyed every law of physics. Our stories should do the same in that it should obey every law of life. But there should be enough novel undercurrent of force in the story to give it the odd turns and make them convincing. It takes real genius to put real charm into a story, but it takes nothing but imaginative ingenuity to put English into them and surely, a story that costs as much as a five-reel feature to produce, ought to have this extra thought put into its story. But they seldom do it. They go ahead with the obvious story that the first few scenes fully forecasted and then they have the sand to advertise the finished product as a work of real art.

Just one hint might be added. The balls are on the table all the time. The billiardist does not suddenly drop a fresh ball in the path of the cue ball. The ball is there all the time, but you do not think it is the one he is aiming at. In other words, you must prepare for the event, but not in such a manner as to disclose the exact trend of the plot.

Try Chickens.

Alice C. Brown suggests that chickens are better speculations than scripts since the unsold product can be turned into food, anyway, and adds: Speaking of poultry, I have a hen that can point a moral; she has her first brood of ten chicks, and she thinks that because she is a hen, she knows all about raising them; when I give them food and drink, the first thing she does is to scratch that pan and bowl six ways for Sunday, before those chicks can get a bite; then she has to go to work and scratch it out again for them; if she would just quietly accept the good stuff I give her, and use it as it is, she wouldn't have to work half so hard, and the stuff would be in much better and cleaner shape. Does this little allegory suggest the methods of producers to your mind? If they would take the good stuff that is offered, and use it "as is" seems to me they'd have a much easier time.

Books.

"Why don't you write a book on how to sell photoplays?" demands a correspondent. "It seems to me that a book like that would sell better than anything else. We know how to write plays. We want to know how they can be sold."

We have written such a book and its title is "Technique of the Photoplay," for the only way to sell plays is to write plays so good that they will find a market even against the studio stuff. That is the only way to sell, and it always will be the only way to sell.

The trouble is that most writers do not want to study, they merely want to sell, they do not realize that study must precede sales, for only the good material can find a market. After he left the Lubin Company Daniel Ellis started a bureau of criticism. He very shortly stopped it. "I could get ten to twenty-five dollars from an author on a promise to sell his story," he remarked, "but I could not get even a thank you for advice and constructive criticism that would lead to sales."

Real authors do not spend all of their time worrying about checks. They want checks, but they know that they must first have material worth buying.

Narrative.

Many writers seem to have gained an incorrect impression from a recent article in which we pointed out that a motion picture play was a story told in action; a narrative and not a drama. From the fact that we said it should be told as such, many writers have sought to argue that the script should be in narrative form, though it was very distinctly said that a photoplay was a story told in action instead of words.

That should be plain enough to any person who can understand English, but evidently it was not, for many wrote in that they had always written their scripts in that manner and had been asked to write action and not narrative.

Since the script is a story told in action, even an ass should know enough to write it in action, but that action should be a narrative and not a drama when reduced to film. In other words the technique should be more nearly the technique of narrative than the technique of drama. It should seek rather to convey the appeal through idea than through the situation of the moment. In drama the villain starts to make the heroine "hisn" in performance of oft repeated threats. The hero enters R. U. E., biffs him one under the ear and the villain takes the count as the curtain slowly descends with the hero and heroine basking in the limelight. That is drama. It must make the visual appeal. There must be the actual blow as well as the mental punch. In a story the recital of the blow would not be as strong as the statement of the hero that the girl was the villain's own sister. This example is crude, but it will convey the idea. In fiction idea is greater than visual punch. In drama the visual punch is greater for the moment. There must be action or there will be a dead stage.

It is one of the great charms of photoplay that it unites the action of the drama with the idea of the story and presents a new form. There is much in drama that photoplay lacks, and much in story that photoplay lacks, but, on the other hand, photoplay confines some of the best points of story and drama into a new form—a form all its own. Photoplay is neither drama nor story. It is more nearly story than drama, but it is not precisely that. It is photoplay and nothing else. It is written in action as a story, and only when this is done can it be regarded as a photoplay.

A synopsis only, therefore, is not a photoplay but the story on which a photoplay may be built. It is an incomplete form, a hybrid that is neither story nor photoplay, and so long as the synopsis only flourishes, the photoplay business with languish, no matter how clever may be the men who write the synopses and those others who make the photoplays therefrom.

The Retort Courteous.

Recently an Editor wrote that he had not seen a decent script in his mail in a month and we reminded him that he had not bought one in a year. It does take six months to head off the real writers from a dead office, but you cannot choke off the boobs in a thousand years.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 150.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theatre managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

How much do you feel you have been benefited by this series of questions, and do you think the questions and answers ought to be published in book form?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 143.

The Roll of Honor on Question 143 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex.; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Tex.; Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada, and Leonard Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.

None of the replies, however, quite cover the case; therefore I give the reply sent in by Edison Lamp Works of the General Electric Company, Harrison, N. J.

Reply to Question No. 143.

By Edison Lamp Works, Harrison, N. J.

The Question:

What is the relative efficiency as between a 110 and 220 volt incandescent lamp?

The Answer:

With the same kind of lamps the 220 volt incandescent lamp is usually less efficient, due to the filament being much less and longer than is the filament of the 110 volt lamp of the same wattage. Due to this cause, the 220 volt lamp cannot be operated at such high degree of incandescence, hence the 110 volt lamp with its thicker filament can be operated at a higher degree of incandescence, as there is a slightly less tendency to failure.

[I am also going to publish the reply of Wilson Hays, which seems to have been taken from some publication, because there were two or three replies worded practically precisely the same. I cannot vouch for all the facts, but give the reply for what it is worth.—Ed.]

Reply to Question No. 143.

By Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.

Prior to 1901 incandescent lamps operating at 200 to 250 volts were limited to low efficiency, averaging 4 watts per c. p., and had a useful life, about 50 per cent. longer than the 100 volt, 3.1 watt lamp. They required, however, about 20 per cent. more power in station capacity for the same output, an important feature, which proved a great drawback to their use for some length of time. The superior distributing advantages of the 200 volt system, however, created a great demand for these lamps and great efforts were made by the various lamp manufacturers to improve their efficiency. These efforts resulted in the production of 250 volt lamps having an initial consumption of 3.4 watts per candle for the 16 candle power and 20 candle power lamps, while 3.1 watts per candle for higher candle power are now made, which have an average useful life as good as that of the 100 volt, 3.1 watt lamps, which is equal to about 450 hours.

Lamps operating on 110 volts can be worked at an efficiency of from 3.5 watts per candle to 1.25 watts per candle.

The amperage consumed by a 220 volt lamp is less than that consumed by a 110 volt lamp, but the wattage is considerably greater, hence it is comparatively expensive to use high voltage incandescent light.

Neat Work.

A. H. Huff, whose address, I regret to say, was misplaced, sends in samples of announcement slides he makes. The slide is produced by covering the glass with some sort of white coating, and then, with a sharp tool, printing the lettering thereon. The work is very neatly done, and by means of water colors some very pretty tints are added. The same kind of thing has been published in this department several times. Brother Huff's work is very neat.

Noisy Compensarc.

The Lyric theater, Mt. Pleasant, Mich., says:

> We are using 60 amperes at the arc, through a Fort Wayne compensarc, Type C, Form 4. Line voltage 110. The only trouble is the noise given off by the compensarc and by the arc. The compensarc is about 4 inches from the metal floor and wall, and sets on a granite slab, with pieces of rubber between the compensarc and blocks. Am using Columbia carbons. When I had Electra there was not so much noise. If I pull the lever down to 40 amperes the noise is decreased, though there is a humming sound after the arc is struck.

I think the whole trouble lies in the fact that your compensarc is too close to the iron. You must remember, my brother, you cannot insulate against magnetism. Just, temporarily, move that compensarc away from the iron by, say, 2 feet and see what happens. I see no reason why the make of carbon used would have any effect on this particular proposition, though cutting down the amperage would decrease the effect, because it would decrease the strength of the magnetic field.

Bad Inspection.

Union Hill, N. J., submits a sample of film which shows three pictures having a partial double print, the same, of course, being due to some fault in the printing machine. He says this was cut from a Keystone, and then remarks:

> When the test print is made at the factory and is projected, there usually is the director, the cameraman and operator present reviewing the film, and still things like this get by. I would also call your attention to the matter of short titles. On several occasions I have had to speed a scene which needed action, but was obliged to slow down when a subtitle came, as same was too short for the audience to read it. You certainly cannot caution operators too often or too strongly with regard to splicing films without first scraping off the emulsion and scraping the back of the film.

You are in error, my brother, in supposing that the director, cameraman and operator see all the film prints. What they actually do see is the negative, and afterwards, usually, a finished print, but if these various parties saw all the hundreds of prints made from each negative they would not have much time to do anything else. After the film is finally passed, the assembling department is presumed to discover minor faults in the printing, such as the one you submit.

Very Bad.

John Davis, New York City, says:

> I have noticed in the so-called projection department of a trade publication the following advice: "You will smooth out your field light on the screen considerably by moving the condensing lenses apart, maybe half an inch, and while you may sacrifice a certain amount of illumination your field light will be distributed much better." What is your view of this matter, and what is the real effect of spacing the condensers further apart?

If you have a copy of the third edition of the Handbook and will look at the top of page 115 you will see the following: "The spacing of the two condensing lenses different distances apart has the effect of altering the E. F. of the combination. The further the lenses are placed apart the longer will be the E. F. of the combination, and vice versa." The spacing of the condensers half an inch apart would cause some light loss, because of the fact that the ray from the rear condenser is, when the arc is in operating position, a diverging ray. There are cases where it is possible to somewhat improve matters, however, by spacing the condensers a little in order to change the E. F., but it is a mighty bad way of doing it. The condensing lenses should, as a general proposition, be placed as near together as you can get without their surfaces actually touching. If this does not deliver the right result, then the best thing is to change the focal length of one or both lenses, thus altering the E. F. in the right way, instead of in the wrong way. The amusing part of it is, however, that the purveyor of knowledge in question proposes to clear up his field by altering the E. F. of the condenser, whereas he should have moved his lamphouse.

Discouraging.

From a Brooklyn operator, whom I personally know to be a high class man, and one who not only delivers the goods on the screen, but does it economically, comes the following letter:

> During my six years of work and study as operator of motion picture machines I have consistently endeavored to produce quality on the screen, but have finally come to this conclusion: What's the use? To explain: I have from the beginning always endeavored to maintain a high standard of work in my profession, and have endeavored to command a fair salary therefor. I have found, however, that the prevailing idea amongst exhibitors is cheapness, regardless of results on the screen. I have found that good work is not appreciated, nor is it even understood by the average exhibitor. My last experience is typical. I worked at a certain Brooklyn theater for two years, during which time I can prove that my work was most satisfactory. I don't make this statement on hot air, mind you, but can produce the proof. A few weeks ago the theater changed hands. I was told by the new owner I could remain as long as I liked, and was kept on until I had made all necessary repairs on the electrical wiring, which would enable them to start the roof garden for the season, then, without a moment's notice, I was discharged to make way for an eighteen dollar man. My salary had been twenty-seven dollars. Reports from various patrons, whose acquaintance I have, are that projection is now simply rotten; notwithstanding this, the man who took my place still has the job because he is cheap, and cheapness is appreciated. Now, Bro. Richardson, this is not designed as a rap at anyone, but simply to show that, after years of hard work, close application and study, I actually stand less chance of securing a position than does the "I should worry" chap who does not know anything and does not care. I have applied to at least fifty different managers since I got out, and find the same idea to prevail, cheapness, not ability. The situation, as I see it, is I must now either take an eight to ten-hour grind from sixteen to eighteen dollars, or else go out and shovel dirt. I again ask: What's the use?

Well, my brother, your experience is unfortunate, and it is a lamentable fact that there is considerable truth in what you say. As the matter stands today there are all too many managers who do, as a matter of fact, PLACE CHEAPNESS ABOVE EXCELLENCE; also there are very many managers who, as a matter of fact, are totally unable to differentiate between high class work and mediocre. These men are not show men in the true sense of the term. They are not the men who are going to stick in the game. You must remember that the motion picture business is right now in the throes of a new birth. It is emerging from the store room show into a real theatrical business. The day is rapidly passing when the type of manager you complain of will be able to "get by." Hundreds upon hundreds of them have already been put out of business, and there are going to be more and more dropped as time goes on. I have in the past predicted, and I still do predict, that within a comparatively short time high class work will be not only appreciated and demanded, but will be recognized in the pay envelope. It is indeed unfortunate that a man of your calibre has met with this sort of treatment but, my brother, keep a stiff upper lip and remember that while this is a very bad time of the year to be seeking employment, there are good positions to be had, with managers who know high class work when they see it, appreciate it, and are willing to pay for it.

And in this connection I would like to call the undivided attention of managers to the unfairness of discharging a man without a moment's notice. When an operator quits without notice the manager very promptly and properly proceeds to put up an awful howl. No words in his vocabulary are strong enough to condemn such action on the part of the operator, yet, on the other hand, there are all too many managers who think absolutely nothing of discharging an operator without even a moment's notice. And let me tell you, Mr. Manager, IT IS JUST AS FAIR FOR THE OPERATOR TO QUIT WITHOUT A MOMENT'S NOTICE AS IT IS FOR YOU TO DISCHARGE HIM ON THOSE TERMS. But when this is applied to a man who has given entire satisfaction for two years, is still giving satisfaction, and has been told he can stay as long as he wants to—well, perhaps I had better not say what I think of that sort of proposition. It is distinctly dishonest, to say the least.

Interesting Experiments.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., comes forward with the following very interesting data. It is submitted as being another cog in the wheel of information concerning the projector lens system.

> The results here illustrated and tabulated were arrived at by very careful experiment. First, an opaque disc 3 inches in diameter was placed over the front condenser, as shown. This will allow to pass only that part of the light beam which is most affected by chromatic and spherical aberration. The aberrations in the central part of the beam, eliminated by the disc, are very slight, and it is necessary to exclude this part of the beam in order to observe the exact effect produced by the aberrations of the beam which passes through the outer edges the condenser.
> An artificial crater of about 50 c. p. was used, and very careful adjustments were made, with relation to the distances X and Y, until the crater image appeared as a white spot. In every case the white spot was found to be located forward of the narrowest section of the beam, and is always accompanied by a flare or ring of light around its outer edge. This flare, caused by spherical aberration, represents a total loss of light, which is of considerable amount. Even with the most careful adjustment, the white spot is rarely free from a slight red or blue ghost at the center.

The white spot, as located by these experiments, occurs between the narrowest section of the beam and the actual image of the crater mentioned on page 130, new Handbook. The latter is there quoted as being a white spot surrounded by a blue haze, but in view of present experiments it appears red as blood, and is considered an unsuitable position for the aperture.

The results of these experiments are shown in tabulated form, which is copied from Griffith's Table No. 2, page 143 of the Handbook. It will be observed, however, that the value of X in these experiments always less than Griffith's results, even allowing for the thickness of the lens.

Now with the usual amperages in present use, the necessary enlargement of the crater will vary from 3 to 4 times. If we therefore take the average of the values of X under columns 3 and 4, it gives 2.82 inches as a mean distance of the crater from the rear condenser. If, again, we use the corresponding values as given in Griffith's table, we get 3½ inches, which is the distance recommended by the editor as a standard position for the crater. (I wonder! I wonder?) But just the same, if the whitest light is desirable at the aperture, I cannot see that 2.82 inches is the proper distance instead.

Finally, it should be noted that the white spot is produced by composition of colors, and in order to also appear white on the screen they must be again recomposed by the action of the objective. But this action cannot take place unless the entire beam from the aperture passes through the objective. If too much of the component colors be lost by an objective of too small diameter, the result on the screen must be discoloration in some form or other, most probably a ghost. There can be no compromise made for an objective of too small diameter, as it must match the conditions secured by the condensers, i. e., if the white spot is to be utilized.

The second figure, the table, came in a later letter, but was designed to be supplementary to this article. Brother Martin wonders as to the correctness of the 3½ inches-from-lens-to-crater proposition. Well, I'll tell you where I got that from. Remembering that the intensity of light decreases inversely with the square of the distance from the light source, it is highly desirable to have the arc as close to the condenser as we can get it, in order that the condenser may receive and transmit to the objective the greatest possible light intensity. There are, however, limitations, because if you get it too close there is liability of the flame from the carbon striking the top edge of the condenser, thus cracking the lens; there is danger of pitting of the lens surface by small particles of incandescent carbon torn from the crater; there is great danger of breakage through the tremendous heat received by the lens. In my judgment these things limit the distance of the arc from the crater to 3½ inches, where high amperage is used. Of course that distance might be materially diminished when the amperage is low, but if we are to establish a standard distance, then we have got to begin with the high amperage arc and figure from the conditions that kind of arc sets up. I don't say that 3½ inches is the minimum. That is a matter which is a proper subject for argument. In that matter I merely express my individual opinion. If we can place a high amperage arc nearer the condenser without lens breakage or excessive pitting well and good; by all means do it. Or if it is deemed desirable to establish a minimum distance for high amperage and another for low amperage, all right. My mind is by no means made up as to just what ought to constitute the final determination in these matters. So far as the table be concerned it would seem to be impractical of adoption as a standard, because of the fact that distance Y (distance of the apex of the front condenser to the aperture) is brought down so low at high amperage that with long focal length objective lenses the light loss would be tremendous—always assuming, of course, that the present condensing system be used. I would, however, again suggest to Brothers Martin, Griffiths and Armstrong the apparent advisability of concentrating on the placing of a negative between the aperture and this objection.

Wichita Operating Room.

Seth E. Barnes, chief operator Palace Theatre, Wichita, Kans., sends picture of his operating room, and says:

> The new Palace Theater seats 1600 people, and is one of the finest in this part of the country. The cost was about $85,000. The operating room is placed at the top of the balcony, about 30 feet above the center of the screen, with a throw of 93 feet. We are projecting a 16-foot picture on a Minusa Gold Fibre screen. I have the screen set at an angle approximately the same as that of the machine, and am getting excellent results. The operating room is 8 x 12 feet, with an 8-foot ceiling. The floor is of concrete and is 4 inches thick. The back wall is of brick, and the other three sides and ceiling are of wire mesh on angle iron, plastered inside and out with cement plaster, which makes a wall more than 2 inches thick, and incidentally a very good room. Ventilation consists of a 36-inch vent in the ceiling, and a large window in the back wall; also there is a 12 x 12-inch inlet in the floor for hot or cold air from the heating and cooling system. The equipment consists of two of the latest motor-driven Simplex projectors and a Motiograph dissolving stereopticon, though the latter has not yet been installed. Have a 75-ampere Fort Wayne generator set. The observation ports are 12 inches square, and are fitted with automatic shutters controlled by a master-cord, the ends of which are brought down and fastened to the upper magazine, an idea of my own, which puts the link where it is most likely to melt the quickest. What do you think about it? I have a rewind beside each machine, same being located directly beneath the observation port, in front of the operator. The house employs two operators, Yours Truly being the one in the ice cream suit, which is his working clothes. Fred Fisk, my assistant, you see beside me. We run from 11.30 A. M. until 11 P. M. six days a week. Both belong to Local 414, which was chartered January 3, 1916. All our men are working, and every house in town is signed up and paying good salaries. Am pulling between 50 and 60 amperes, using Speer carbons, 3-4-inch above and 5-8 below. Get a good spot, but the carbons have small cracks which, at times, cause considerable spluttering at the arc. My lens system is lined up in accordance with the table in October 16th issue. Am using a No. 1 Gundlach lens 5¼ inches E. F. with two 7½-inch condensers about 22 inches from the aperture. I measured the diameter of my light beam at the back focus of the lens, and found it to be 1-32 of an inch smaller than the lens, which I believe is all right, though the manager of one of the exchanges here says I would get better results with a half size lens. What do you think?

Judging by the photograph and your description, you have a very excellent operating room, though I would have preferred 4-inch hollow tile to the plaster, and I don't like the window in the rear wall, because I am absolutely opposed to any light in an operating room. If you paint the glass black and keep the window closed during matinees, why, then the objection disappears. The manager of the exchange is in error. If your light ray is 1-32 of an inch smaller than the lens, you are getting the full benefit of your light, and there are objections to lenses of larger diameter. I will qualify this by saying, however, that there might be some advantage, provided you stop the larger lens down to the diameter of the light ray. I doubt if the difference would justify the added expenditure. Your fuse link scheme, Brother Barnes, was published in the second edition of the Handbook three years ago. It is an old, pet scheme of mine, but I prefer a film link to the metal link. I expect to be in your city in October, and will then give your operating room the "once-over."

Hatchet Buried.

It will be remembered that when we visited Pittsburgh some time ago we had a very unpleasant experience, and that experience was set forth at some length in the department.

On our recent visit to that city, as guest of the Pennsylvania Exhibitors State League, President Freeman, of the Operators' Union, whose act I severely criticised, and the past president of the union hunted me up. Brother Freeman and I had some rather heated argument, but I admire the man who comes up like a man, "has it out," admits his error and regrets it. No matter what his error may be, that one is a MAN, so we ended by shaking hands, wiping the past off the slate and making a new and, let us hope, a better start.

The men took me around to their new club house, of which they are justly proud. It is in a class by itself, and if handled carefully ought to prove a very great success. It is owned and operated by a separate organization, the name of which I cannot recall, but that is merely to keep financial matters straight. Only union operators can "belong." By means of club profits the local expects to pay sick and death benefits, as well as build up a good, solid treasury, a percentage of the net return being placed to the credit of the union.

I would strongly recommend to the Pittsburgh local that it spend a portion of its energies in educating its own members in the technical side of their profession, and anything I can do to assist the union to that end will be a pleasure. Frankly, there is work of this kind needed in Pittsburgh. Ergo: get busy, gentlemen, and do it. So far as the late unpleasantness be concerned, the hatchet is buried and sod is growing over its grave.

Unfair Competition.

About one hundred miles northwest of New York City is a small town in which there is and has been a moving picture show handled by a live-wire owner and manager. This man has been giving a corking good show, everything considered. Although he has had no competition he has put in a motor generator set of the latest, most improved type, and rather than have his show stopped he long ago added an engine generator set. He employs a thoroughly competent operator, and leaves no pains unspared to give the people their money's worth.

And now comes a man who remodels an old bowling alley which, I am told, has been closed for three years on account of dampness and mustiness, raises the roof a few feet, sticks in a bunch of second-hand chairs, a piano which has been described to me as a rattle-trap, hires an operator and starts a "show." Now it is told me for a fact by people in position to know that, prior to the time this man started his show he had hardly seen a projection machine. He put in one machine of his own, and the operator he hired being possessed of another, put that in, too, in a room designed for only one machine. He got the operator to let him help with the projection, and in just a few days Mr. Operator lost his job and this "manager" became operator. We have apparently reliable information that the "show" (it must have been a "holy show") stopped nine times the first night he ran, and once the wait was as much as fourteen minutes. During the first night he started two reels wrong end to.

Now, this is what I call unfair competition. The opening of such a place as this in a town where there is only barely patronage enough to support one good show, is going to injure the good show WITHOUT PROVIDING ANYTHING WORTH WHILE IN ITS PLACE, the possible net result being the closing of the good show, whereupon the people won't have anything worthy the name in the way of moving picture amusement. But there is another and a more serious side to this question. I am told the old bowling alley, as it is remodeled, constitutes a fire trap, and it is absolutely criminal to allow an inexperienced man to be in charge of projection in such a place. It is bad enough to have inexperienced operators in charge of projection under any circumstances, but in a case of this kind, where it is going to operate to injure a really good show, endanger the safety of the audience, and in all human probability subject the eyes of the people to an absolutely unnecessary eye strain, it becomes a very grave matter. This department has no patience with such doings as this. It is very rightly said this is a free country, and any man can go into business who wants to. However, while, broadly speaking, that statement is true, still, like most other things in this world, it must be modified to fit the circumstances. You would not allow a man to start a powder factory in his dwelling in the heart of the city, would you? Certainly not. Why? Well, simply because it would endanger the lives of people and the safety of surrounding property.

Well, a case of this kind comes, to a certain extent, under this classification. From the fire risk it is a danger to life and property, and from the eye strain point of view the incompetent operator is very bad indeed.

CARL LAEMMLE
600 BROADWAY
NEW YORK

July 11, 1916.

Mr. F. H. Richardson,
Moving Picture World,
17 Madison Avenue,
New York City.

My dear Mr. Richardson:

A copy of the third edition of the "MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK" has just been received and I wish to offer my profound thanks for this beautiful gift.

I know it must be a source of gratification to you to know of the vast benefit derived by managers and operators throughout the country who will use this great book and I wish to congratulate you on your splendid achievement. I believe this is the most concise treatise on this subject published today.

That the future may hold in store for you a full measure of success is the sincere wish of the writer.

Yours very truly,

Carl Laemmle

President.
UNIVERSAL FILM MFG.COMPANY.

Acquainted by Proxy.

Carleton E. Martin, Port Huron, Mich., says:

This is the first time you have heard from me, but I am well acquainted with you, having seen your picture in the World a number of times. I am only the assistant operator, but am trying to get ahead. Have a copy of the third edition of the Handbook, and it certainly is great; also I read the department each week, and not down behind the furnace either. Our equipment consists of two Power's Six A's and a General Electric mercury arc rectifier so connected that when we strike one arc the other is automatically extinguished. Length of throw is 90 feet, to a Gold Fibre screen. We project a 14-foot picture. The E. F. of the objective is 6 inches; diameter 1⅝ inches; back focus 4 inches; distance from film to apex of front condenser is 15 inches, with two 7½-inch condensers, spaced ½ inch apart. The arc is 3 inches from the flat surface of the rear condenser. We get a slight yellow ghost on each side of the center at the bottom of the picture, which makes me want to match up our lenses according to Table 1 of the Handbook, but I am not the chief, therefore it is not up to me to butt in. Our supply voltage, which is supposed to be 120, fluctuates between 110 and 130, therefore you see we cannot get a good spot all the time. We use 5-8-inch National cored carbons upper and lower with the jack-knife set. Are troubled a great deal with tits forming on the flower carbon, which I believe is due to the fact that we are compelled to keep our carbons very close together in order to get a clear spot. The operating room is of concrete, 19 feet long, 7 feet wide and 7 feet high. The machines set practically level. The rectifier room is at one end. Observation ports are 6 x 8 inches and are 3 feet to the right of each machine, so that in changing-over, framing, or adjusting the light we are obliged to look through the lens port. I have often wondered how wide the mason who built those ports thought a projection machine really was. For ventilation we depend on the air from the house, and an opening 30 x 30 inches set in the back wall between the machines, which admits a great deal of light—all of which is very bad, I think I hear you say. (You bet you would hear that exact thing if you were here.—Ed.) I note in issue of July 1st that you expect to pass through Michigan on the tail end of your trip next winter, and I would be glad if you could stop off in Port Huron. There are four theaters, but no local. My chief belongs to the Saginaw Local I. A. T. S. E. It is now 2 A. M. and the signal has just blown for our soldiers to leave for Mexico.

This is a most interesting letter. This man may be only the assistant operator, but if one may judge by his letter he is going to be a real chief operator some day. His brains are not asleep. He is using them. He says he is "trying to get ahead." Well, he is taking the right course to accomplish that end, and I most heartily recommend him to the consideration of his employers.

The optical system of those projectors is in urgent need of attention, and intelligent attention, too, because with a 4-inch back focus, and the condensers located 15 inches from the apex of the front lens to the aperture it would be necessary to have an objective 2 3-16 inches in diameter to avoid light loss. The objective in use is 1 5-8 inches. Under that condition, even with two 7½-inch condensers and 22 inches between the apex of the front lens and the aperture, there would still be light loss. As a matter of fact, under the conditions named, the employer is paying for current, at least one-third of which is being totally wasted through lack of knowledge on the part of his chief operator in the lining up of the lens system. As a matter of fact there ought to be a lens of larger diameter in use in that theater. With two 7½-inch condensers and 22 inches between the apex of the front lens and the aperture and a 1 3-4-inch diameter objective there would be no light lost at the objective, but there would be some loss due to the distance of the arc from the lens. It would not, however, be anywhere near as great as under the present condition. The location of those observation ports is utterly absurd, and the worst part of it is that two or three hours' work would cut a proper port, say 12 inches square, and with a little thin cement the other could be easily filled up. I am afraid, Brother Martin, your chief operator is one of those who does not believe in projection departments and handbooks. If he did read and study, most emphatically these conditions would not obtain. He is wasting a large percentage of the power which his employer is paying for; also the result on his screen is not what it should be. The jack-knife set is inefficient, out of date, and has been discarded by practically all high class operators. You are quite correct in the matter of the carbon tits. It is caused by the shortness of the arc, which hinders the entrance of sufficient air to properly volatilize the carbon. The spacing of the condenser lenses ½ inch apart is bad; that also means some light loss. Quite possibly the chief operator does not know what the optical effect of spacing the condensing lenses is. Suppose you ask him and see.

Some Questions.

Ohio comes in with the following:

I am with you, because I read the department and possess a second edition of the Handbook; also I today sent for the third. And now I want to ask some questions to be answered through the department, though I must request you not to mention my name or that of the theater, as you can readily understand what some "operators" think when one asks questions. I am running two Power's Six A motor-driven projectors, taking D. C. through 110 volt Edison rheostats connected separately for each machine. I only took this job last week, and it is a dirty one. The carbon stubs were thrown in an ordinary wooden barrel without any water at all. The lower film guards were put away, and I had quite a little search to find them in order to effect their reinstatement. Today I discovered that the rheostats were on the negative wire instead of the positive. The objective is 4½ inches back focus, 1½ inches in diameter, and the condenser is a 6½ toward the arc, and the other is of a bi-convex, and its center is just like a piece of ground glass where the dowser has scraped against it. There should be a 6½ toward the arc and a 7½ in front. Am I right? I started in to clean my connections, and when I got to the rheostats I saw they were 110 volt, 25 ampere, set at their lowest capacity—that is to say, with all the resistance in. I at once set them to maximum capacity, and they worked all right for three days, though there was but little improvement on the screen. Then, with both arcs burning, one of them blew a 60 ampere fuse. I placed a new fuse and it blew, and so on until I was compelled to set the adjustment lever back to minimum. Now I know I don't pull 60 amperes, so why did those fuses blow? My carbons are Nationals, 5-8 inch above and below. My test lamp placed across the arc lights up just as bright as when placed in any socket. What is the trouble?

The bi-convex lens is the front lens of the meniscus-bi-convex, and I think very likely you will find the rear lens to be a meniscus, that is to say, slightly concave on its front face. If not, then you are working a plano-convex with a bi-convex, which is not right. Take out the bi-convex and substitute a plano-convex. If you have a 4½ inch back focus with a 1½ inch objective, you will see by referring to Table No. 1, Page 141 of the Handbook, that the least diameter objective you can use without light loss is 1 7-8 inches, and even to use that you must have two 7½ inch condensing lenses with 22 inches between the apex of the front lens and the aperture. As the matter now lies you are wasting a considerable amount of light, the actual amount depending on the distance of the condenser from the film. As to the rheostats, it is a very difficult matter to say what is wrong, but if that 60 ampere fuse carried nothing but the one arc, then apparently there is a ground in the rheostat which cuts out a large amount of, if not all, the resistance when the lever is set at maximum, but the ground is broken when the lever is pulled back. That is about all I could say from your description. Would suggest that you carefully examine the rheostat and test it for ground. See Page 260, third edition of the Handbook. If you mean that the test lamp burns to c. p. across the arc when the arc is not burning, why that is O. K., because with over ½ ampere flowing the voltage would not be reduced practically at all. If you mean your test lamp burns to c. p. across the carbons while the arc is burning, why, that could only be with a 220 volt supply and a very long arc.

A Microscopic Focussing Device.

A microscopic focussing tube with which a needle point sharpness of focus may be almost instantly obtained is such a comparatively easy device for a camera man to make for himself that it is remarkable that more camera workers have not provided themselves with such an instrument.

Practically every camera man carries a focussing glass or magnifying loup of some simple character, but one who has used a focussing glass of medium high power will never again be satisfied with the rough approximation that is the best he can do with the ground glass and an ordinary loup.

It is remarkable how many camera men regard an aerial image as something mysterious and outside their range of comprehension. When the camera is focussed correctly the image exists at the focal plane, i. e., the frame opening, whether it be cast upon the film or ground glass or whether they be absent altogether. In focussing with the ordinary low power glass on the film or a piece of ground glass a source of serious error is being introduced into the image. It is therefore impossible except by chance to obtain a definition which is finer than the structure of the film or the granular structure of the abraded or ground surface of the ground glass.

The ground glass or film is an almost indispensable part of the cinematographer's outfit, it is true; but its use is for the composition of the picture and the placing of the side lines rather than a necessary part of a focussing device. Nor can we dispense with the ground glass if we have nothing more than the ordinary focussing glass to depend on for sharpness of definition, for if we attempt to view the aerial image with a low power glass, even though it be mounted in a tube at the proper focal distance for the eye it cannot be relied upon unless a cross lined glass is interposed in the focal plane.

The human eye is a wonderful instrument and is able by muscular contraction of the flexible lens which it possesses to change the focal length of that lens so that either near or distant objects may be brought to a focus upon the retina. This function of the eye is involuntary and automatic and is termed the accommodation of the eye; that is, the eye accommodates itself within certain limits to more or less diverging rays of light, and if we attempt to focus on the aerial image at the aperture plate without providing a crossline at the focal plane so as to focus the eye at the proper distance we might find that our eye had accommodated itself to an aerial image having a position before or behind the actual focal plane. With the cross line in place, however, the image must be in the same plane as the cross line or it will be out of focus, so that when focus is obtained both the cross line and the image are equally clear and the image will be bisected by the cross line as in a surveyor's transit.

If, however, we take a step forward and increase considerably the power of the magnifying glass with which we examine the serial image the slightest deviation of the image from the focal plane throws the lens system of the microscope so badly out of focus that it is much beyond the range of the eye's accommodation to bring it to a focus and we are thereby enable to dispense with the cross line if we wish, as we have no further use for it.

It is imperative, however, that in using a high power glass that some rigid mounting be provided by which it may be made certain that our magnifying glass be always set at the correct focal distance from the focal plane.

Resolved into its lowest principles a high power focussing device is a compound microscope mounted in a camera so that the image produced by the camera lens may be considerably enlarged. In the foregoing sentence the words "high powered" are used merely as term to differentiate a compound microsocpe from the magnification produced by a simple lens combination as found in an ordinary focussing loup; in reality, such a microscope is of very low power as compared to compound microscopes used for bacteriological examination. Probably the cheapest and quickest way to obtain such a glass would be to buy what is ordinarily termed a student's compound microscope, which may be had for prices as low as two dollars and fifty cents to five dollars, and withdraw the tube containing the eye piece and objective and mount it directly in the camera.

*Copyright, 1916, by the Chalmers Publishing Co.

If the construction of the camera prohibits the tube being mounted permanently in the camera, it is an easy matter to provide a ring mount into which it may be slipped for use, taking care to provide a stop screw or ring upon the tube of the microscope, so that the instrument must come to rest at the proper distance from the aperture plate.

The first section of an ordinary brass draw telescope contains a similar lens combination and an old or second-hand telescope, if it can be purchased at a reasonable figure, will make an excellent focussing lens system.

If you are more ambitious you may purchase from one of the many excellent microscope makers an eye-piece and a low power objective and mount them yourself in a brass tube. An excellent set may be purchased for about fifteen dollars or even less and should you wish to go in for photo-micrographic motion pictures, you will be already provided with a lens set for photo-micrography. It must be understood that the higher the power of the magnifying glass the smaller will be the field, but as any lens worthy of being fitted with a microscopic focussing tube must be truly anastigmatic, all objects within its range at the same distance as the object focussed upon will be also in focus. The image through the glass presents also the advantage of being right side up, so that you will find your camera when so fitted to be an excellent telescope which you focus with your focussing device instead of with the draw tube as in the usual telescope.

The De Brie camera is fitted with a focussing device admired by many camera men and it gives the entire field of the aperture plate right side up and slightly magnified. It is always in place in the camera and the image may be almost instantly examined on the film by drawing out the eye-piece at the back and opening it. Such a glass may be made by using an objective of much longer focus than is ordinarily used in a microscopic combination and gives such a low power that it is not safe to use without film or ground glass in the aperture on account of the accommodation of the eye as previously explained.

A dodge to use in this case is to perforate the film and turn back until the hole is in the center of the aperture plate, when the edges of the hole will serve the same purpose as a cross line. Unfortunately, unless the perforating device is correctly placed in relation to the frame line turning back will not bring it into correct position.

For the ordinary sized camera one may use for a De Brie type of glass the lens combinations from two achromatic loups of about one inch focal length, using one for the objective and one for the eye-piece.

With such a low power objective the distance from the aperture plate can be varied considerably, but is best determined experimentally to suit the distance from the aperture plate to the back of the camera.

It is well to arrange to have the eye-piece project beyond the back of the camera; otherwise it is hard to get the eye close enough for proper inspection.

For the first type of glass described a ½ or ¾-inch objective is of ample power and the eye-piece should be at the other end of a six or eight-inch tube or longer if the size of the camera makes it necessary.

This will bring the objective within an inch of the aperture plate. To find the exact focus, cut a piece of clear glass the width of the film and mark it with a rub of emery cloth on one side; lay this in the aperture plate with the side scratched with the emery toward the lens, remove the lens and with the camera turned toward the light and the glass in the aperture plate securely in position focus the microscope on the scratches on the glass. This is the position in which it must be fastened for focussing.

With the De Brie type of glass, place the eye-piece on a stand at a distance from a piece of printed paper equal to the distance from the aperture plate in your camera to the point where you wish the eye-piece to project at the back; move the objective back and forth in a straight line between the eye-piece and the printed paper; when you can bring the image of the type to a focus through the two lenses their separation is the length of the tube you will need for mounting them.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and S. M. BERG

Musical Setting for "The Prince Chap."

Released July 31st by the V-L-S-E, Inc.
(Prepared by S. M. Berg by special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., music publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 12½ T "Phoebe Puckers" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 7 D "Amateur band" is a description of action.

This is the story of an artist who, unable to make progress in America, goes to London at the invitation of a friend. Out of good-heartedness he adopts the child of his model who has died. His fiancee in America misunderstanding his action marries another. A decade passes and the child, now grown to womanhood, loves her foster-father. After some further incidents the picture closes with the realization of the child's dreams.

The character of this is dramatic with several amusing comedy scenes intertwined. There are many situations where piano only is needed, particularly at 34 to 38½. During these scenes a Chopin Prelude would be appropriate. Reunion (a character) is frequently playing flute, and should be followed by musician. Note particularly: Storm and rain effects from 30¼ to 38½.

The THEME selected is "Legende"—Friml.

CLARENCE E. LINN.

AT THE Chicago Exposition the Rudolph Wurlitzer booth was conspicuous by its absence. I called at their display hall, 615 South Wabash avenue, and at their big store at 329-331 South Wabash avenue, to learn why. Mr. Keating, the representative for the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, told me their reason for not exhibiting at the Coliseum at this convention was because, for lack of time, they could not make a fair display of their goods at that place; that they had therefore decided to hold their own individual exhibition in their own display hall at 615 South Wabash avenue, where a large banner hung in front informing the passerby that here was to be seen and heard the "Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra," or something to that effect "You'll find all about it in our full page ad in your paper," said Mr. Keating. He referred to their ad on page 552 in the issue of July 15 of the Moving Picture World.

Our old friend J. C. Deagan also was not to be seen—or rather, was not to be heard at this exhibition. Of course I haven't attended all the conventions, but I had somehow got the idea that Deagan's bells were part of the works.

The Harmo was another instrument I didn't see. What's the matter with our Chicago folks. Here I was all keyed up to say something full of local proudness, and the only Chicago firm to come to the front was Seeburg.

The Bartola Orchestra looks considerably different from what I saw three or four years ago. Now there is a swinging keyboard at each end of the piano (they swing in over the piano keys, you know) and pedals. To make it plainer, there is an auxiliary keyboard of two and a half octaves at the right hand of the pianist and another of two and a half octaves at his left. These swing directly over the piano at the will of the operator, and form the manual of the organ. Either instrument (piano or organ) can be played separately. Charles C. Pyle, general sales agent, at 710 Mallers building, Chicago, Ill., will send a free booklet telling all about the "Bartola Orchestra." Mr. Barton (the inventor) was at the Bartola booth at the Chicago exhibition and seemed to be devoting much of his time and attention to a bally-hoo instrument he has perfected. It consists of a set of loud voiced pipes connected with a small keyboard. The one on exhibition could be held in the hand and had six keys. These keys when depressed operate on two organ pipes each, tuned in thirds. Any number of keys may be depressed at once—one, two, three, or all—and the resulting sound is a chord or parts of one chord—always the same chord. Mr. Barton assured me it could be heard through a smoked glass or a war argument at a pacificist picnic. He is going to try it out at the Club's baseball park some day when the home team wins.

The Trip to Canada

By F. H. Richardson

A Friendly Invasion and What the Projection Man Found in Montreal

JULY 24 the writer left New York with two wheels and a a bunch of gasoline, to invade the British Empire, capture Montreal and give Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia the up and down and once-over. The first day's drive used up 183 miles (went up west side of the Hudson, which is longer), and night found us seated at Brother La Grow's camp-fire in Albany. We had intended to view and report upon some Albany projection, but did not get out of New York until eleven o'clock, and 183 miles in a little more than half a day left this quill pusher all ready for rest and the bed. In the morning we met Brother Donald B. Shepard, operator Orpheum theater, who, I am told, is a very progressive operator.

Brother La Grow has become discouraged with operating conditions in Albany—so much so, in fact, that he has taken up a different line of work.

From Albany north the drive is a truly beautiful one. At Scroon Lake we detoured over to Ticonderoga, via a road which might have caused us to say gosh dang it, or something like that, but for our ignorance of such vulgar language, for the sand was something awful. At Ticonderoga, N. Y., I visited the Crillon theater, Barto and Connelly, owners; Austin Nois, operator, and barring an unnecessarily large picture, which sets up eye strain and cuts the brilliance of illumination, the projection was very good. Only once during the four reels I saw was there any discoloration of the light, though the show was stopped once by the film climbing the sprocket. I did not visit the operating room, but the ports were of ample width and the room seemed to be of good size.

They told us it was "about 120 miles from Ticonderoga to Montreal." "About" is good. It was 163, and as we did not start until noon, and there was eight miles of sand road to negotiate, your Uncle Dudley, the writer, was real busy—and so was the Go-devil. But we made it all right, with an hour to spare before dark.

It had been my intention to address the Montreal managers and operators, but as there is neither league or union I passed it up. I did, however, visit a few of the Montreal houses, but first let me say that he who imagines this northland city to be aught else than a thoroughly charming, strictly up-to-date city (population about 750,000), had better sit down and imagine again, because Montreal is all of that. We ran right square into the European war when we struck Victoria Bridge, across the St. Lawrence River (length, one and one-quarter mile), for it was very completely patrolled by regular soldiers, carrying real guns with a big cheese knife glued to the end of the barrel. Ugh! It gave me the shivers just looking at them.

The Regent Park Avenue, of which F. H. Warnicker, a most courteous and able gentleman, is manager, is one of Montreal's new- up-to-the-minute motion picture houses. It seats 1,013, and is beautifully and tastefully decorated. Under the balcony, over the rear of the main floor, is a dome effect, with an ornamental colored glass skylight effect in its center. It is new, odd and very pretty. The operating room is of good size, but the observation ports are too narrow and the room is too light. Its ventilation is excellent. There are two Powers Six B projectors and a dissolver. Current is supplied through a Martin rotary converter. The picture is unnecessarily large—I explained the disadvantage of the large picture, and Friend Warnicker agreed the argument for the smaller picture was good, and said he would act upon it at once.

A. De Laurier is in charge of projection. When I entered the light could have been justly criticised. I visited the operating room and when I came down, strange to say, it was very good indeed. Cut out those ports, Friend Warnicker, paint the front wall black and keep the light out of the operating room, is my advice.

Just around the corner from the Regent, on Laurier avenue, is the Mount Royal, managed by J. Lauthier. This house is old and well established and Friend Lauthier is well known and liked by his clientele. The house seats 800 and is tastefully decorated. All that I have said concerning the size of the Regent's picture applies equally, or even more to the Mount Royal, for the picture is 21 feet.

The operating room is a good one and is in charge of F. Lessard. The equipment consists of two Powers Six B's and a Wagner converter. The room is painted black, has an ample vent flue and fairly good observation ports. Projection was as good as could be expected considering the huge size of the picture.

At the Midway theater, on St. Lawrence boulevard, I saw a picture of correct size being beautifully projected at proper speed, though M. Kashim, manager, frankly admitted that the speed of projection is too fast in the evening when business is rushing. He claims this is necessary, but I don't agree. I do not believe any audience on earth will not be better satisfied with, say, a two-hour show at proper speed than a two-hour show at race-horse speed, even though, in the first instance, they see only seven reels, and in the second they see nine. But, be that as it may, Friend Kashim is a very live wire and seeks to do the right thing. George Gladious owns the Midway. The house has a regular sign shop upstairs and employs scenic artists. Two Simplex projectors are used. There was too much light in the operating room.

The Imperial, Bleury street, managed by H. W. Conover, seats 2,200. It is a Keith house, and a beauty. The operating room is literally on the roof and, so far as comfort and ventilation are concerned, is ideal. But there is the inevitable distortion, of course. R. Vandette is in charge and is very proud of the plant. There are three Simplex projectors, and a General Electric motor-generator set. The very complete switchboard has 220 and 70 volt D. C., and 110 volt A. C. Manager Conover was out, and I did not have the pleasure of meeting him.

The Windsor, corner Dorchester and Windsor streets, was the last house visited. It is an old church building remodeled into a theater, owned by the Windsor Amusement Company, of which Gerald J. Barry is president, and Harry Bryan, manager. William Desjardin is chief operator. Projection at the Windsor is good, and Friend Bryan is mighty proud of his home, which, by the way, is very pretty, the ceilings being very high and arched.

The excellent operating room is reached by a winding ladder—ever see one?—but once in it the grouch at the entrance largely disappears. The walls are black, the ports fairly good and the room is almost level with the screen. Powers machines are used—Six B's, I think they were. though perhaps it was A.

The Montreal men were all taken by surprise, yet every operating room I entered was clean and in perfect order; also in almost every instance the men were "on the job" beside their machine.

On the whole Montreal compares, so far as the few houses visited be concerned, even more than favorably with other cities as to operating room conditions. Neither operators or managers have an organization, though the exchanges have just formed one, and it is believed that this will operate to induce theater managers to get together. There are about sixty-five moving picture theaters in the city, I am told, and certainly there ought to be a good league and a good union.

YORKE-METRO PLAYERS AT LAKE TAHOE.

A company of fifteen Metro-Yorke players, headed by Harold Lockwood and May Allison, is at present at Lake Tahoe, California, making the exterior scenes for "Mister 44," a new five-act Lockwood-Allison feature soon to be released by Metro. Lake Tahoe and the surrounding region were chosen for the taking of the exteriors by Director Henry Otto because of peculiar adaptability to the atmosphere of the story—a romance of the North Woods.

The group of screen folk at Lake Tahoe includes Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Director Henry Otto and Assistant Director Bennett A. Molter, Antonio Gaudio, cameraman, and his assistant, Benjamin Pierpaoli; Franklin Hall, Yona Landowska, Aileen Allen, Belle Hutchison, Lee Arms, Elija Zerr, and Ben H. Grimm, publicity representative. Several members of the studio staff are also with the company.

"CIVILIZATION" TO OPEN IN PITTSBURGH.

Mr. Patch, who so ably exploited "The Birth of a Nation" at the Pitt theater, Pittsburgh, last year, will present Thomas H. Ince's eleven-reel sensational peace cinema at the same theater for an indefinite run, beginning September 15.

Spokes from the Hub

BY MARION HOWARD

BEING keen on everything military, I had the treat of the season along that line in "Britton of the Seventh," a Brady literary masterpiece, and done so well by those Vitagraph players. To those of us who lived during the uprisings of the Indians when brave Custer and his soldiers were massacred, the pictured story struck home to our hearts and the realism of it all was enhanced by the use of real cavalrymen and real Indians. I'd like space enough to pick out some of the salient points brought out. In the very first picture we find that dear Bobby Connelly working over a map of Mexico, hunting for a bandit, and on one side of the room are toy soldiers, many in number, representing our troops on the border. Here we have a very up-to-date happening. Then that splendid old man, Charles Kent, turning the hour glass back in telling his grandson the story of "Britton of the Seventh," and all worked out on the screen. Darwin Karr, whose lower features are startlingly like Francis Bushman's, and who is equally attractive and well set up, was a splendid type of the American soldier. There was a quartet of women players conspicuous for their beauty as film stars, Eleanor Woodruff, Rose Tapley, Eulalie Jensen and Marion Henry, who played the squaw.

Among the high-water mark pictures seen here of late "The Clown" ranks on the Lasky banner, and I have not before seen Victor Moore in a part with so much pathos in it which discloses his quite remarkable ability to portray emotion. Not once did he overdo it, but was the artist all through. Florence Dagmar was fetching in appearance and played a difficult part. They were surrounded by such big players as Thomas Meighan, Ernest Joy and dear Tom Forman. The desert scene was graphically presented. Marion Fairfax has given the public something very wholesome, and I hope all will see the picture, for its lesson in sacrifice and in suppressed emotion, on the part of this hero of the circus. The child is a marvel. Another top-notcher is "The River of Romance," with Harold Lockwood and May Allison doing good work as usual, this time in very effete surroundings such as palatial villas on the Thousand Islands. The plot is well known ere this, also the book by E. J. Rath. With the Metro backing the photographers went the limit on outdoor scenes, which are rarely beautiful and many in number. One gets a fine idea of the St. Lawrence river and some of the islands where the quality dwell in summer. Why the title? I have before me a review of a play by the same name put out by the Essanay company last year, but in no way similar in plot or settings, as this does not seem to concern a river, so the Metro title is more plausible. "A Society Masquerader" would have been better, however.

Well, "The Eternal Question" was all right so long as the author stuck to his text—dress, "does it or does it not make the gentlewoman?" It was cleverly started and quite naturally the best was made by men at a club, the plot starting through the entrance of a monkey attached to a chain held by a beautiful woman of the streets. All went well, even those in front not being aware of the identity of the woman accompanying the organ grinder, until late in the third or fourth reel. A good time to end the play was when the disclosure was made with its incidental happenings around that bet. To introduce the villain in such an impossible manner, linking him, with no reason, to the man involved in the bet, demanded some explanation by title. Then the ridiculous introduction of aeroplane stunts, three at least different types of machines used—all this simply convulsed the audience at the Exeter theater where merriment does not usually reign. It was taken as a burlesque, clumsily done at that, and the spectacle of Mme. Petrova chasing around the deck of the enemy ship was absolutely funny; also the sight of one man —the lover—being attacked by several sturdy seamen and coming off without a black eye even, was something to ponder on. The play, despite its silly ending so melodramatic for a Metro offering, was splendidly cast, but one does not care to see it again or pass the word along as it is unworthy the star and her support. The entire house felt the inconsistency of it all.

On same program and quite in contrast we had "Susie Snowflake," picturing Ann Pennington in her first camera test. She certainly made good and is well entitled to be listed among the Famous Players of the screen. This is an excellent summer attraction and appeals through its naturalness and types all through. Here we have that cold-blooded woman in "The Foundling" (featuring Mary Pickford), and who will ever forget her work as the head of the asylum and her cast-iron attitude in palming off her bad lot of a niece as the real orphan. It was not a goody sort of a part, but so well done. Marcia Harris is her name, and when you see her in the cast, just watch her work, for it is inimitable, so unlike the average middle-aged spinster thrust upon us. The sister, too, was another type, softer-hearted but narrow. All the reviewers have dealt at length with this offering and not one word of criticism. It is full of heart interest, and a bit of pathos here and there as well as comedy, for instance, when the girl of eighteen reaches the early home of her dead mother to fall into the hands of the pair of prim old maids, is asked to say grace at her first meal she convulsed the house by saying "May God have mercy on this food." Leo Delaney as the village doctor—the only one—did some excellent work in a quiet way, as did young Courtleigh in a thankless part. This play is so thoroughly refreshing that I want all theaters to book it. James Kirkwood directed it and that is saying much.

Kitty Gordon was here again in "Her Maternal Right," and was seen to better advantage than in "The Crucial Test," which was so inconsistent in spots so far as clothes were concerned. In the latter play she makes a very good fashion model, wearing many quite impossible gowns as only Kitty can wear them. One was a hobble from neck to toe, and Hogarth's line of beauty wasn't in it with Kitty Gordon's in that rig. Another was hooped in such a way as to queer her, and I noticed that she did not enter the scene through any visible door. Zena Keefe, who exercised her maternal right to kill if need be, was excellent in a part requiring skill. George Ralph and Frank Evans made good. The photography was way up and Director John Ince deserves credit for the detail.

In addition to "Her Maternal Right" the World film corporation has shown up three other attractions all of them stronger in every way than the one mentioned. First we had "The Eye of God," a timely presentation as Tyrone Power the lead is here in "Where Are My Children?" which is packing the Majestic theater, and so all had a chance to see him in an altogether different role—that of a criminal. It is a story told backwards, as it were, by the man about to be electrocuted, and is thrilling—written by a woman, Lois Weber, and along unusual lines. The second is "Sally in Our Alley," with dainty Muriel Ostriche ("what a horrid name to give such a little woman," my neighbor said). Anyhow the play was the thing, and that Irish pair—the Foys—were great. Carlisle Blackwell is a good looker for the hero, but has far less to do than in anything I've seen him in earlier. We recognized one or two of the scenes as not far from Central Park. The plot was not very new, and the ending somewhat abrupt and inconsistent, for it would be impossible for a young man of the standing of this hero, to so quickly swallow such parents on sight. "The Weakness of Man" was excellent, with one or two situations quite new. Holbrook Blinn, always a good actor, carried off the honors, and dear little "Babbie" played her part well, so much so that we could hardly blame "hubby" for looking her way when we know of his home conditions. I was surprised to recognize Charles Mackay in the cast for I pictured him in stock with his charming wife, Lillian Kemble, in Canada. Now we have both the Mackay brothers in the films, for Edward is cast in "The Faded Flower" with Rose Coghlan, Marguerite Snow, Arthur Donaldson and Alma Hanlon, the dainty "Babbie" of "The Weakness of Man." Charles and Edward Mackay are sons of the Venerable F. F. Mackay, who celebrated his 84th birthday over in New York, July 20. He is an active member of the Green Room Club, the Players and of many organizations, and usually attends the meetings. Charlie Mackay's first wife was Georgie Porter, now the wife of Bob Edeson. She recently inherited quite a sum of money from her father, Linn Boyd Porter, who died here early in July.

Among the best pictures of late are "Big Jim Garrity," with Bob Edeson, a Pathe gem, in his hands "A Virginia Romance," with Bushman and Bayne, and "Silks and Satins," with dainty Marguerite Clark, Thomas Holding, Clarence Handysides and others well known in support. It is an enticing little play, beautifully staged, and the costuming is what takes with the ladies every time. Anything Miss Clark does is worth while, and safe for managers to book. Best of all the children like her equally as well as do their parents. "The Apostle of Vengeance," a Triangle play, features William S. Hart as a clergyman of the sane type, and it is rather refreshing to see him minus cowboy rig and prancing steed. He wears a clergyman's dress throughout and preaches heart sermons free from cant, but convincing to the extent of converting the mountain feudists and citizens generally, thereabout.

A splendid Ivan offering is "A Fool's Paradise" as it is original in the working out of an old plot and shows the senility of the old roue type of men. In this case his repentance comes in good time and he goes out of life fairly decent after all, surrounded by his family, including a darling little grandchild, who in reality turned the current of his thoughts in the nick of time. All should see this. Joseph Burke played the old boy most effectively, and we again saw him in "Susie Snowflake" in the first reel, though not mentioned in the cast. One scene is actually done in Atlantic City on the board walk where the man is spending a holiday with his daughter and where he meets a vampire of a woman, capitally done by Christine Mayo, who lures him to the fool's paradise—hence the appropriate title. Better see it and note how it turns out.

"The Flower of No Man's Land" furnishes an hour or so of high class enjoyment and is the first of the Metro films to feature Viola Dana, who has so long played with the Edisons opposite Edward Earle, who is greatly missed in the pictures. No titles are necessary in telling this story, so clear is the plot, and so artistic the work of the players, like Duncan McRae, the always finished actor. Here he has to run the gamut of emotions and dies at the hands of a North American Indian in his palatial apartments in the city. It is a tragedy but ends well for the little heroine, named "Echo."

"Destiny's Toy" deserves more words of praise than space permits. Book it all along the line if only for the work of J. W. Johnstone and Louise Huff, who makes her debut with the Famous Players in this wonderfully staged picture. There is in it a young clergyman, not of the prig variety, but a creature of flesh and blood, not above a frolic with his protege out in the open. Society is pictured well, and the denouement a surprise for the family, but not for the audience in front. There is the greatest police raid ever put on here by a high class attraction. Boston's "finest" went individually to see the stunt.

"The Purple Lady" was greatly enjoyed by crowded houses at two theaters and it was a pleasure to see Ralph Herz, that clever comedian and erstwhile husband of Lulu Glaser, who has entered the picture game at last. She ought to film well with her roguish eyes and vivacity. To go back to Ralph, it is a queer coincidence that he and his former wife should remarry at about the same time, Miss Glaser to Thomas D. Richards on July 10, and Mr. Herz to Francis Logan, grand-daughter of the late Col. Jack Logan of Washington, only recently. It was also a coincidence that playing on the same bill at the Exeter was Edna Goodrich, whom Mr. Herz once sought in marriage, racing with Nat Goodwin, who captured her as wife No. 4. She has vastly improved in her work before the camera, and "The Making of Maddalena" is excellent in all ways, a credit to Morosco and the star. Forrest Stanley made good as usual. As to "The Purple Lady" we laughed heartily over the clean fun in it and rejoiced to learn that Mr. Herz is to be seen under the Metro banner again in one-act comedy reels.

Herbert Rawlinson of the Universal is a favorite here and rightly, as he is clean cut. He has been in a number of short reels of late, notably "The Rose Colored Scarf" capitally done with Agnes Vernon in support; "The Wire Pullers," new idea worked out well; "They Would Not Take Him Seriously," another bright one-reeler. "Such Is Life in China" was a good Universal, with some splendid views of the Oriental country.

What a debt the public owes to the ability of Burton Holmes who long ago visited far away countries, like Germany and others involved in this needless war, and took along his camera for moving pictures. Those of us who have never visited Germany, for instance, are being taken well into that country to most historic and picturesque places and into the heart of big cities. Last night we saw Bavaria and the shores of the most beautiful lake in all Germany, the Koenigs-See. Next week we go down the Danube to Vienna. All through, the titles are illuminating and many times rather humorous,; then too we get an occasional glimpse of Mr. Holmes to show that he is really on the spot. The Paramounts deserve a rising vote of thanks for capturing the great American traveler, whose profile adorns the title.

An excellent municipal movement has started here in giving free moving pictures outdoors for the poor of the slums and elsewhere, more than 3,000 witnessing the first presentation at the North End, where at least 35,000 Italians reside in close quarters. The pictures were light and varied, including Chaplin, baby welfare, accident preventing, and the patriotic, the flag causing prolonged cheering and applause. They are very beneficial and will be repeated in other sections and return visits made, thanks to a committee headed by the Y. M. C. A.

It is a joy to note the re-issues of the Biograph company and we like short reels of this quality, besides they show us the work of many stars now scattered among the other companies. In "Men and Women" we had Blanche Sweet, now a Lasky star; Lionel Barrymore, looking like a fat alderman and unlike his present physique as noted in the Metro plays, and that dear reliable young lead, Marshall Neilan, now making good as a director. "The Unwelcome Guest" gave us a glimpse of Jack Pickford in one of his first pictures. Then we get an occasional reissue of an Essanay, always so dependable with those early players. Hub fans especially like the George Ade fables, which have been too infrequent of late. The International Film corporation is giving splendid pictorial films showing current events, political or otherwise, and ever good. The funeral of the lamented Capt. Boyd was reverently done, and had its effect on the audience. Then we were taken to a duck farm where 12,000 were being reared for the market, and it was an unusually attractive sight, especially at the incubator house, where 7,000 are hatched weekly. We saw the entire modus operandi from birth to shipment as edibles. One thing to criticise, the frequent pictures of great fires of no local interest, and which are rather depressing for those who attend the theater for amusement. It does disclose the skill and enterprise of the camera man always on the job. Floods, too, are not cheerful in any sense and the thought comes into one's mind that the United States Government might find a way to check the evil—at least control it. Well, we get "food for thought" in our picture houses anyhow.

POWELL GOES TO GEORGIA FOR COURT SCENE.

During the filming of the forthcoming feature photoplay of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., it was necessary to obtain a scene in a court room and as Mr. Powell, the director, is a firm believer in the "genuine" in his pictures he made a flying trip with his company to Augusta, Ga., for this particular scene.

Mr. Powell was extremely fortunate in securing the use of a court room while court was in session, and also the services of the presiding judge, sheriff, bailiff and the jury. The jury which appeared in this scene was composed entirely of millionaires who represent practically all of the capital of Augusta.

The Powell Company contemplate the location of a studio in Augusta and while there Mr. Powell investigated certain conditions which will doubtless determine whether or not he will decide on that place.

SOME UNIVERSAL CITY DOINGS.

The tenth episode of "Timothy Dobbs," starring Carter De Haven, is now under production by Director Wallace Beery, and it is expected this will end the series, after which De Haven will be featured in another comedy.

The directors and photoplayers who recently were transferred from the Eastern studios to Universal City were given a reception and dance on Saturday, August 5. The committee in charge of the affair consisted of Lois Weber, Cleo Madison, Marie Walcamp, Myrtle Gonzales, Herbert Rawlinson, Lon Chaney and Jack Holt.

A number of the leading players from the other studios were invited in order that the newly arrived Universalites might become better acquainted with the Los Angeles film colony.

Wyndham Gittens has arrived at Universal City, having been sent to the Coast by Vice President and General Manager H. O. Davis, to serve in the capacity of Screen Editor for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. As Screen Editor, Gittens will co-operate with Eugene B. Lewis, Scenario Editor.

ARE EDUCATORS INTERESTED?

Something to be Said in the Affirmative on the Strength of Number of Machines Sold.

THE Nicholas Power Company report an unusually large number of installations of their Power Cameragraph in educational and industrial institutions during the present month and assert that they are reliably informed that many more of these institutions would use motion pictures for educational purposes were it possible to obtain a regular film program suitable for this work. Among the most notable installations are:

Board of Education, Passaic, N. J.
St. Mary's College and Academy, St. Joseph County, Ind.
Hamilton High School, Hamilton, Ohio.
Jewish Orphans' Home, New Orleans, La.
Young Men's Christian Association, Fortress Monroe, Va.
Ford Motor Car Co., Detroit, Mich.
Avondale School, Cincinnati, Ohio.
Board of Education, Norwood, Ohio.
Amoskeag Mfg. Co., Manchester, N. H.
Young Men's Christian Association, Tobyhanna, Pa.
St. Michael's R. E. Church, Jersey City, N. J.
State of New York Utica State Hospital, Utica, N. Y.
St. Joseph's Church, Rosebank, Staten Island.
Young Men's Christian Association, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.
Bureau of Clubs & Playgrounds, Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone.
St. Joseph's R. C. Church, Cristobal, Canal Zone.
State Board of Health, Raleigh, N. C.
Young Men's Christian Association, Mallory, W. Va.
First Presbyterian Church, Parkersburg, W. Va.
Willard State Hospital, Willard, N. Y.
U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.
General Electric Co., Schenectady, N. Y.
Ashland Coal & Coke Co., Crumpler, W. Va.
Pontiac State Hospital, Pontiac, Mich.

The Educational Campaign of the Nicholas Power Company is being pursued with great vigor, and the above enumerated installations made in the past thirty days are eloquent proof of the immense field for motion pictures which Educational and Industrial institutions offer.

This department of the Nicholas Power Company is under the supervision of Mr. De Hart, who has had extensive experience with this work and is thoroughly familiar with requirements and special conditions of this new field for motion pictures.

Gaskill Launches Phoenix Players

New Organzation Incorporated in Florida—Pictures of from Six to Twelve Reels are Promised.

RADICAL departures from the commonplace in moving picture production and marketing are forecasted in the announcement of the formation of the Phoenix Picture Players, Inc. by Charles L. Gaskill, well known in the trade and to exhibitors. Incorporated under the laws of Florida with a capitalization of $1,000,000, the Phoenix Players will start the production of features of six to twelve reels immediately upon the equipment of its studios in Orlando, Fla., and on the Hudson, the latter possibly the Helen Gardner studios at Tappan.

"In bringing about this organization," stated Mr. Gaskill recently, "I have purposely interested the capital of men not heretofore identified in any manner with the motion picture industry. Not that such men might not have been induced to join with me in the undertaking, but rather because, almost invariably, the men already in the business are too set in their prejudices and minds to look beyond the profits of today to the tomorrow when something else besides contracts with exhibitors will be necessary to insure these profits."

KELLER TURNS UP A SWINDLER.

George C. Keller of Buffalo, N. Y., writes the Moving Picture World to warn the trade against a camera man, name not given, who claims to have worked for Fox and other firms, but who is now victimizing innocent people by claiming to be able to secure positions for them in the picture business. The swindler is described as a man of twenty-five years, five feet six inches tall, light complexion, smooth face, sharp features. The Buffalo police are looking for him.

NEW ENGLAND RIGHTS FOR "CIVILIZATION" SOLD.

After a spirited competition which had not ended until midnight, the New England rights to Thomas H. Ince's massive cinema production, "Civilization," were sold Monday, July 31st, to the New England Film Distributors, Inc., of which David A. Lourie is the president, and has offices at 15 State street, Boston.

Gaumont Program for Week of Aug. 20

Contains Three Single-Reels and Possibly a Five-Reel Feature.

OWING to the Gaumont policy of not announcing a foreign film until it has passed through the war zone, and is safely in America, the company is not in a position to announce a remarkable five-reel production which it is hoped to release through Mutual the week of August 20. However, the three single-reel releases of this week have already been determined. Upon August 20 Reel Life No. 16 will have as its leading subject "The Power of Water." This gives vivid pictures in historic sequence of the development from the old fashioned water wheel to the electric turbine. On the same reel will be one of the Gaumont tabloids. It is one of the series dramatized from episodes which have been so popular in "Life" under the title of "What Would You Do If—?" The present diminutive photoplay asks specators what they would do if they were so very fat and their spouses preferred other company. Miss Nan Evans is the featured player, supported by "Bud" Ross.

Quaint Cape Cod is pictured in "See America First," No. 50, released August 23. The Gaumont camera has caught for the screen such important historical places as Plymouth Rock and the grave of Miles Standish. There are pictures of the old grist mill at South Yarmouth, and characteristic views of seacoast scenery from Hyannisport to the cape.

On the reel with "Quaint Cape Cod" is one of the Gaumont Kartoon Komics from the pen of Harry Palmer. It is called "Kuring Korpulant Karry" and deals with the gyrations of a fat young lady who takes up roller skating in a serious way in the effort to reduce. Mr. Palmer is at his best in this picture.

The third single-reel of the week is the ever-popular Mutual Weekly. As it is edited "up to the minute" there is no way of knowing even two days in advance what is will contain.

New Stars for Ivan Productions

Anna Nilsson, Harry Spingler, Wilmuth Merkyl, William H. Tooker, Frankie Mann and Rose Coghlan Included in Cast for "Her Surrender."

FOR the second production to be made by the Ivan Film Productions, entitled "Her Surrender," under their new policy of all-star cast features, a notable cast of screen stars has been assembled. Anna Nilsson, star of the sensational serial, "Who's Guilty?" recently completed by Pathe, and who achieved great renown in "The Regeneration," has been engaged to create the principal female role in the newest Ivan screen play.

Rose Coghlan, the famous legitimate star, who this year celebrates her golden jubilee as an actress, fifty years on the stage, and whose work in "The Faded Flower," the last Ivan release, won the universal commendation of the critics, has been re-engaged for this new production. William H. Tooker, star of "A Fool's Revenge," and a principal in countless other screen plays, conceded the foremost delineator of character roles on the silent stage, will enact an important role.

Harry Spingler, a leading juvenile, who has been starred for a year with William Farnum in Fox productions, and whose work in such well known screen plays as "The Plunderer" and "The Bondsman" have won him a large following among the film fans, will make his debut under the Ivan banner in Mr. Abramson's latest screen drama. Wilmuth Merkyl, who has been the leading man to Madame Petrova, and who was starred in such notable productions as "The Blindness of Virtue" and "Blazing Love," has been cast for one of the principal male roles. Frankie Mann, a noted player, long with the Vitagraph and Lubin companies, conceded one of the most charming personalities on the screen, has been given a novel vampire role to portray.

"Her Surrender" emanates from the pen of Ivan Abramson, the author of the many former Ivan successes. As is usual in plays written by Mr. Abramson, the theme deals with an evil existing in everyday life and the play endeavors to point out the remedy as well as the cause and conditions arising therefrom.

Work on this feature will commence immediately under the direction of Ivan Abramson. Marcel le Picard, the noted Photographic expert, has devised several novel light effects which will be first presented to the public on the release of this film.

When completed, "Her Surrender" will be released through the Ivan exchanges as the regular scheduled Ivan monthly feature for September.

Motion Picture Publicity Men Organize

Articles of Incorporation Formally Approved and Permanent Officers Elected.

TWENTY-FOUR advertising and publicity men representing, with two exceptions, every important motion picture producing company with offices in New York City, met at the Claridge Wednesday, August 2, to approve the articles of incorporation which had been drawn up for the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers by its counsel, Arthur Friend. The meeting had been called by the temporary officers, and the first business transacted was the election of permanent ones for the ensuing year, as follows:

President, Arthur James of the Metro; vice-president, Wallace Thompson of Paramount; secretary and treasurer, E. Lanning Masters of V-L-S-E; executive council, John C. Flinn of the Jesse L. Lasky Photoplay Co., Paul Gulick of the Universal, Carl H. Pierce of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co., Harry Reichenbach of the Frohman Amusement Co., S. B. Van Horn of the World Film Co., Hopp Hadley of the Mutual. The three elective officers are also members of this council ex-officio.

Mr. James, in accepting the presidency, made it quite plain to those who had not attended the previous meetings that the A. M. P. A. was an organization without connection with any other body or board, and that it was the intention of its founders to confine its activities strictly to matters which appertain to advertising, and the welfare of advertisers.

The articles of incorporation were then read and approved, and a vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Friend for his efficient and expeditious work. Mr. Friend was also unanimously elected an honorary member of the A. M. P. A. The president then appointed a membership committee consisting of E. Richard Schayer, of the Louis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc.; Nat G. Rothstein, of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., and C. J. Meegan, of the General Film Co., and the following publicity committee: Paul Gulick, of the Universal, chairman; Terry Ramsaye, of Mutual, and Ben Schulberg, of the Famous Players.

Until permanent headquarters can be secured the regular meetings of the A. M. P. A. will be held in the Claridge, the next meeting being called for Wednesday, August 9.

V-L-S-E STAFF CHANGES.

Charles A. Meade, for the past year manager of the Dallas V-L-S-E. branch office, has been promoted to the managership of the Cleveland office, to supplant C. E. Shurtleff. He began his duties in the Ohio city on July 31. J. B. Dugger, who has been Mr. Meade's assistant in the Dallas office, will succeed him as manager.

R. W. Bertelson, manager of the sub-office at Salt Lake City, has been forced to relinquish that position on account of ill health. His place is now being filled by F. A. Wagner, of whom much has been heard as a San Francisco salesman. In assuming the manageship of the Salt Lake City office, Mr. Wagner will come under the supervision of Frank Harris, Denver manager. Succeeding Mr. Wagner in the San Francisco office will be M. C. Wilder, who has been promoted to a salesmanship position from that of booker.

Another young lady of the V-L-S-E. came into prominence when Miss J. James was named as booker of the San Francisco office to succeed Mr. Wilder. She has been secretary to Manager Quive of that office since the ascension of A. W. Goff to the assistant general managership of the Big Four. Previous to that time she was assistant to Mr. Goff and kept all statistics covering San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Denver and Salt Lake City offices.

Selig Returns From Coast; Talks of New Pictures

Predicts Great Reception for "The Crisis"—Not in the Market for Scenarios and Thinks Discussion of Subject "Press Bunk."

WILLIAM N. SELIG returned Saturday, July 29, from Los Angeles, Cal., where he has been visiting the Selig Pacific Coast studios. While in Los Angeles Mr. Selig completed plans for the production of "The Garden of Allah." "The drama will be produced on a most elaborate scale," stated Mr. Selig in an interview on his return to Chicago. "Colin Campbell will direct it and no expense will be spared to make the production the most spectacular of anything we have ever done.

"I want to call your attention to several other productions. 'County That God Forgot' is going to be an unusual western drama in very detail. Marshall Neilan wrote the story for Thomas Santschi. I shall release it through V-L-S-E. The play will be in five parts and Santschi will be suported by an excellent company of players including Mary Charleson, George Fawcett and others.

"'Light of Western Stars,' Zane Gray's great story of the west, will also be produced in films in the near future. This drama will run anywhere from five to ten reels whatever it is worth. Kathlyn Williams, Tom Mix, Marshall Neilan, George Fawcett and others will appear in the action.

"I want to predict a great reception for 'The Crisis.' We have completed Winston Churchill's novel in twelve reels and it will be presented to the public probably early in the fall. The production is about ready for release and those who have viewed the film have been kind enough to state that 'The Crisis' is the greatest thing we have ever done and will prove one of the most artistic productions filmed to date. The film follows the story in every detail and while there is a succession of spectacular scenes, the strength of the plot has not been sacrificed."

William N. Selig, upon his recent return to Chicago from Los Angeles, Calif., again announced that the Selig Polyscope Company is not in the general market for scenarios.

"The scenario question is being discussed pro and con in most of the trade papers and in other publications," said Mr. Selig. "Whether this stuff is just publicity matter or whether 'the scarcity of good photoplay plots' is being earnestly considered, I do not know. I do know, however, that there is no such thing as a scenario 'question' with our company. We have about seven hundred stories, including novels, short stories and motion picture plots in manuscript in our vaults. These were penned by the world's best writers. This material will last us for years. When this supply is exhausted we can get more. We have always paid satisfactory prices for good stories, believing that the story was the real foundation of the entire photoplay structure. The plot counts just as much as the star or the direction."

Bluebird Upsetting Star System.

Still Plugging for the Slogan "The Play's the Thing"—Hoffman Says It's Making Good.

LOUISE LOVELY will share honors with Warren Kerrigan when Bluebird Photoplays present "The Social Buccaneers" late in September. Miss Lovely has, hitherto, been a lone star on Bluebird play-bills, having begun her service to moving pictures in America when the Bluebird series were established.

Fulfilling their advertised purpose to make "The Play the Thing," the casting of subjects has been a separate consideration in all the recent releases, and thus it comes that Miss Lovely and Miss Billington, together with Rupert Julian, lately appeared in the same release, "Bettina Loved a Soldier." Now Lois Wilson, who has been Mr. Kerrigan's leading woman for many months, gives way to Miss Lovely in plays where the casting will be improved by the substitution.

Ruth Stonehouse will be introduced to Bluebird as a star, with Rupert Julian her director; Dorothy Davenport has already joined the ranks of new leaders of Bluebird plays, and Franklyn Farnum, Emory Johnson and Richard Morris are other new principals lately added to the Bluebird stock organization. In every instance where these additional players have been employed, or will be occupied, they will be cast and have been cast because they seem best suited to the role.

"We are spending too much money in nationally advertising our program," says General Manager M. H. Hoffman, in recent announcement, "to warrant our failing to maintain our purpose to make the play of first importance. We have tried our plan and are abundantly convinced that the public interest in photoplays is based first upon the quality of the scenario, or play.

"We first select the play, and then select the best players we can find to impersonate the characters. Production takes co-incident importance with selecting the play and players, these three vital factors to good photoplay entertainment being what must, naturally, be relied upon in our purpose to abandon the "star" system in favor of the Shakespearean dogma.

"We are succeeding so well that the skeptics are, in many instances, coming over to our way of thinking. The biggest exhibitors of moving pictures are being canvassed for their opinion, and we are getting the proof that Bluebirds are advancing in public favor everywhere, solely upon merits and the basis we have established as the Bluebird policy."

Mr. Hoffman expressed enthusiastic belief that the first six months of Bluebird, operating along conventional lines, paved the way to an abundant success for the new departure in their methods of exploitation. He returned last week from a trip of inspection among the exchanges in the Middle West.

Marie Edith Wells.

MARIE EDITH WELLS in her two years before the screen has had a goodly measure of success. Previous to a short experience on the stage she had been an artist's model. Her first motion picture experience was with the Kalem company. Here she appeared in "The Cabaret Singer" and with Tom Moore in "The First Commandment" and "The Girl and the Bachelor."

Marie Wells.

For over a year she played leads in subjects released through the World Film Corporation. Among these were "Just Out of College" and "Then I'll Come Back to You," both Frohman productions; "Sealed Lips," Equitable, and "The Builder of Bridges."

Miss Wells is one of those sylphlike creatures of exquisite grace and charm. Likewise she is clever and brings to her aid a certain knowledge of the work in hand which is the delight of any director. She has been repeatedly featured by the companies in whose productions she has appeared until she has gained an enviable reputation with the fans everywhere. Much more might be said here regarding her peculiar fitness for motion picture portrayal, but those who have seen the pictures in which she has appeared to advantage need no further recommendation.

WHERE IS B. JACOBS?

C. C. Charles, manager of the Rex Film Exchange of Albany, would very much appreciate any information which any of the exhibitors or exchangemen can give him in regard to the whereabouts of one B. Jacobs, who was formerly employed by the Pioneer Film Company, and during the month Film Exchange. Mr. Charles intimates that it would be well to circumscribe the activities of said Jacobs.

Brenon Leases Studio.

New Structure and Equipment at Hudson Heights, N. J., Taken Over by New Company.

THE Herbert Brenon Film Corporation has closed a five-year lease on the Ideal Studios and Laboratories, located on one of the most commanding sites on the Palisades, on the Hudson County Boulevard, at Hudson Heights, and here Mr. Brenon will begin work immediately upon his first production, "War Brides," with Nazimova in the role in which she has scored one of her greatest successes.

Albert Teitel, under whose supervision the plant was built, was educated in this department in France, and is conversant with all the contributions of science to the cinematograph. It consists of two buildings, the stage areas being 143 by 75 ft., and 50 by 70 ft., respectively. In the larger studio there are accommodations for more than three hundred players in large, airy dressing rooms, this occupying one entire floor. Below this floor are the offices, property rooms, scene storage room, paint room, machine shop, carpenter shop, and concrete and glass tanks for taking submarine pictures. Many of these features have been installed from original designs and are not duplicated in any other plant. Spraying systems have been devised for cooling the roofs of the studios, making it possible for the company to work in comfort in the hottest days of summer. Visitors galleries have been built, in order that persons interested may witness the making of the pictures without interfering with the work.

The laboratories will be under the direction of Mr. Teitel, the builder of the plant, and F. Doublier, who formerly was associated with the Lumiere company, four years laboratory superintendent of the Eclair Company, and designed the Paragon plant at Ft. Lee. In this laboratory, too, the aim has been to provide facilities for producing perfect film. The latest inventions in perforating machines, printers, filtering system and drying apparatus has been installed.

In addition to all this equipment, there is under construction an open air studio or stage, 100 by 160 feet, to be provided with similarly complete appliances.

In this studio Mr. Brenon already is installing his producing staff, and it is believed that the remarkable facilities offered will result in a new time record being set between the date of the organization of the corporation and the release of its first photo drama. However, not speed but quality will be the constant aim of Mr. Brenon, and his first picture, "War Brides," will not be released until he is satisfied that it is the best he has ever created, and that it does full justice to himself and his star, Nazimova.

Mr. Brenon's brother, Chandos Brenon, will be his personal representative, and will be in charge of the executive offices in the Longacre Building; he was previously manager of the Fox offices in Montreal. The department heads who will be associated with him are as follows: George Fitch, studio manager and technical director; James McKay, assistant general director; Roy Hunt, chief of camera department; Herbert Messmore, chief of property department and William Plunion, assistant; George Hall, chief of scenario department; Tom Tomaine, head carpenter; John Elam, scenic artist; Miss Minola DePass, private secretary.

Pauline Frederick Signs with Famous.

Celebrated Emotional Actress Decides to Remain on Screen —Signs Two-Year Contract.

CONTRARY to current rumor that she was to accept flattering offers from legitimate managers to return to the stage, Pauline Frederick, the celebrated emotional actress, who became a great screen star over night when she made her motion picture debut in the Famous Players adaptation of Hall Caine's great drama, "The Eternal City," has decided to remain upon the screen and has signed a two-year contract with the Famous Players Film Company. By the terms of this contract Miss Frederick becomes one of the few highest paid screen stars and automatically assures her appearance in Paramount Pictures for the next two years.

Miss Frederick's screen record will show that, though she is chiefly noted as an emotional actress and as a "heavy," she has evidenced a phenomenal versatility in the roles which she has played. Following her triumphant debut in the Hall Caine play, Miss Frederick next appeared in "Sold," in which she played the artist's wife, who risked her reputation to help her struggling husband. It was a distinctly sympathetic role, but served to bring out the star's wonderful charm and grace.

Miss Frederick's next appearance will be in an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's drama, "The Woman in the Case," in which she surprised the Famous Players officers by requesting that she play the self-sacrificing wife, Margaret Rolfe.

Great Theme in Blue Ribbon Feature.

Compares Conditions of Today to Those of Revolutionary Time.

A PICTURE destined to cause much comment on the part of the public and press is "The Dawn of Freedom," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, listed for release on Monday, August 14. It deals with a question that is making many people think. A question that before very long will cause many changes in the management of affairs —that of Capital vs. Labor.

In brief, "The Dawn of Freedom" is a stinging satire on the death of those ideals that made the nation. It presents one of the staunchest patriots of the Revolution, Captain Cartwright, as escaping death through suspended animation, into which he is put by a missionary, Father Ambrose, only to awaken today in conditions that bring out the theme.

Charles Richman in the role of Captain Cartwright, gives a convincing conception of how we would expect a man of Revolutionary times to act should it be possible for one to return, as the Patriot does in the picture. Richman is an artist and "The Dawn of Freedom" affords him many opportunities of which he takes advantage. Arline Pretty, James Morrison as the lover, Joseph Kilgour is seen as Washington, Billie Billings, Thomas R. Mills, Templar Saxe and Edward Saxe and Edward Elkas also assist in making this photoplay one of medit.

Many historical figures and events are depicted. William J. Hurlburt is the author of the story. Theodore Marston supervised the filming of the Revolutionary scenes and prologue, while Paul Scardon directed the taking of the modern scenes.

WILLIAM PARKER JOINS U. SCENARIO STAFF.

Eugene B. Lewis, head of the Scenario Department at Universal City, has added William Parker to his staff. Parker for a number of years was in the newspaper business, having been associated with the San Francisco Examiner, the Call and the Los Angeles Herald. He began writing scenarios about two years ago. A year ago he went to Santa Barbara to devote his entire time to creating stories for the screen and harkening to the call of a wider field joined the Universal staff to do adapting and feature writing.

LAST EPISODES OF "THE GRIP OF EVIL."

The last three episodes of Pathe's masterpiece in fourteen chapters, "The Grip of Evil," form a six-reel serial of themselves, a big one in breadth of interest, depth of plot and power of situation; a little one only in length. To bring the story to its powerful climax, the producer has found it advisable to use the same characters and continue the same story throughout the twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth chapters. The result is interesting in the extreme since it gives the masterplot a new and unexpected twist.

UNITY FILM SERVICE OPENS OFFICES.

For the purpose of handling the serial "The Yellow Menace" for New York and Northern New Jersey, the Unity Film Service has been incorporated and has opened offices on the twelfth floor of the Godfrey Building, New York City, under the direction of J. H. Lynch, formerly connected with the New York Metro exchange. The first episode of "The Yellow Menace," called "The Higher Power," will be released on Labor Day.

That Universal Program for the Week of August 14

Serials, Comedy and Drama, Constitute the Ingredients for an Effective Tonic for Summer Business

AUGUST 14 is a red-letter day on the Universal program, for on that date the first installment of the Universal Special Feature serial, "Liberty," will be released. "Liberty" is a serial of life along the border at the present day. It features Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo and Jack Holt in an up-to-the-minute drama which is in effect, a photographic reproduction of the high lights of events which already have occurred along the Rio Grande. Jacques Jaccard is directing the serial, which will run twenty weeks.

On the same day, "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me," with Carter De Haven furnishing the fun and excitement, is released. "Timothy Dobbs" is the first of a series-serial of an unusual nature. It does not follow the beaten paths of photoplay production and Carter De Haven is at his best in it. The first two-reel episode of the series is entitled "The Sody Clerk."

The same red-letter day sees the release of the Red Feather five-reel drama, "A Yoke of Gold," with Dorothy Davenport playing the principal role. "A Yoke of Gold" is a romantic drama of the days of the old California missions. It is the twenty-ninth Red Feather production and was directed by Lloyd B. Carleton. Miss Davenport is supported by Emory Johnston.

Just so things won't be too serious on that eventful August 14 the Universal will spring upon an unsuspecting world the Nestor comedy, "The Battle of Chile Con Carne," which is a red-hot tamale enchilada. Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean have some lively adventures in Mexico before the play comes to a finish.

"A Son of Neptune," a Gold Seal three-reel sea drama, featuring Gordon Griffith, W. V. Mong and Betty Schade, leads off the program of August 15. It is followed by the Victor release, "He Wrote a Book," in which William Garwood and Lois Wilson collaborate in some delightful light comedy.

Agnes Vernon plays the principal role in "The Toll of the Law," an Imp drama, which is released on August 16. Billie Ritchie follows close on Miss Vernon's heels in "The Mother in Law," a two-reel L-Ko comedy, in which Billie has some adventures with his wife's maternal parent. The day's program is well balanced by the introduction of No. 33 of the Universal Animated Weekly.

Matt Moore and Jane Gail appear in a Victor two-reel comedy drama on August 17 which hits home. It is entitled "Ashamed of the Old Folks," and Mr. Moore and Miss Gail do some clever bits of delineation in it. On the same day Harry Carey and Olive Fuller Golden appear in the Big U western drama, "A Woman's Eyes," which, although confined to one reel, is really a two-reel subject. Its action is intense and the play is a gem of its kind. Another of the famous Dr. Dorsey expedition pictures, "The Riddle of the World-Japan," is released under the Powers brand in one-reel on August 17.

"Good and Evil" is the Imp feature for August 18. It is followed by "Weapons of Love," a Big U drama, in which G. R. Nye and Vola Smith play the principal roles. There will be no release under the Nestor brand on August 18.

Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips are featured, on August 19, in "Beyond the Trail," a two-reel western drama, which is followed by "Soup and Nuts," a Joker comedy, in which Gale Henry and William Franey play the principal roles. There will be no Laemmle release on August 19. Nor will there be Rex or L-Ko releases on August 20. The feature of that date will be a Powers juvenile comedy, entitled briefly—"Pie."

Brady-Mades Scheduled

List of World Film Productions Promised for September and October.

THE schedule of late summer and autumn releases as arranged by World Film, with a complete roster of Brady-made pictures, promises much in the way of intense drama, startling themes, artistic features and diversity of subjects.

Starting September 4, with Gail Kane in "The Other Sister," the productional department have in readiness, now, fully prepared to launch forth in what the World terms its most consistent period, the following highly interesting subjects.

After Gail Kane in "The Other Sister," E. K. Lincoln and two noted women players, June Elvidge and Frances Nelson, punctuate the program in "The Almighty Dollar," with Robert Warwick following on September 18 in Thomas W. Lawson's tremendous subject, "Friday the 13th."

Ethel Clayton closes the September period in "The Scorching Way," an unique feature, specially built to apply to Miss Clayton's particular adaptability.

October issues includes six noted stars in four extremely satisfactory documents.

House Peters and Gail Kane are the regular units on October 9, in "The Velvet Paw." Charming Alice Brady follows on the sixteenth in her most recent effort, "The Bird in the Cage." Robert Warwick and Gail Kane are then seen on October 23 in the picturization of Nathan Hale, which has been in the making at the Paragon studio, for four months and which will be sent out under the title of "The Heart of a Hero."

Wonderful Kitty Gordon supported by Muriel Ostriche and a special cast, closes October in "The Man She Married," which is released October 30.

November is to be equally as interesting in so far as the number of stars to be seen, and the diversity and importance of plays are concerned.

Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell opens the month on the sixth in "Little Comrade," to be followed by E. K. Lincoln and June Elvidge in "The World Against Him."

November 20 popular Arthur Ashley, Frances Nelson and Clara Whipple, three highly prominent players, are to be seen in "The Revolt," a picturization of one of the most sensational stories of the past decade. Alice Brady will in all likelihood close the month.

New Essanay Feature

Spoor Secures "The Prince of Graustark" for a Five-Reel Production.

PRESIDENT George K. Spoor of Essanay has obtained the rights to "The Prince of Graustark" and will produce it as a five-act photoplay. This is a sequel to George Barr McCutcheon's famous "Graustark," produced in six acts by Essanay. Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton will appear in the leading roles, with a supporting cast headed by Ernest Maupain, Sydney Ainsworth and John Cossar. Fred E. Wright, who directed "Graustark," will also produce this piece.

Just as "Graustark" made such a wonderful photoplay so will "The Prince of Graustark." The best seller has had such a phenomenal sale as a novel that its characters are well known to readers numbering into the millions. Like its forerunner it makes an ideal film, one possessing the snap and brilliancy so popular with motion picture patrons. Typical Americanisms rule the situations and the climax develops into a delightfully executed "surprise-ending."

This play will offer the first opportunity for followers of Bryant Washburn and Marquerite Clayton to see the two of them in the same feature. Each has been with Essanay for a term of nearly four years, but had never been cast together until the past few months. In several three-act pictures they appeared together and formed such popular opposites that —coupled with their suitability for the parts—President Spoor decided to cast them in features.

Miss Clayton has appeared in three recent features, "According to the Code," "Vultures of Society" and "A Daughter of the City." Mr. Washburn's last feature was "The Havoc," but he has appeared in numerous three-act pieces since.

The selection of Ernest Maupain for the part of the eccentric millionaire, whose chief characteristic is American initiative, is happy, as all persons familiar with his work and the character in the book will agree. So also is the casting of Sydney Ainsworth as Count Quinnox.

An indication of how such a popular and established story is taken by the public has just been exhibited by the ease in which excellent locations were obtained. The estates and homes of four of Chicago's wealthiest men were procured with comparative ease when the title of the picture was mentioned, even though such requests had been repeatedly rejected in the past. With elaborate settings and a strong cast this promises to be a notable feature.

Stars in General Film Program.

Week of August 14 Features Many Leading Players In Regular Releases.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY'S information department calls attention to the fact that in the General Film Service program for August 14-19, inclusive, twenty-six noted stars apear in its productions.

Guy Oliver and Fritzi Brunette, Selig's widely known and popular stars, lead the list in the first picture of the week to be shown Monday, August 14, "The Germ of Mystery," a drama in three parts. This will be followed by a Vitagraph comedy, "Conductor Kate," featuring Kate Price. Then will follow the Selig-Tribune News feature showing pictorially all the important happenings throughout the world. The day's program will be closed by "Saved From Himself," a drama in one reel, reissued by Biograph with Mabel Normand in the title role.

"My Country, 'Tis of Thee," an Essanay dramatic production in two parts, presenting Richard Travers and Lillian Drew, will be the first picture thrown on the screen Tuesday, August 15. "Ham's Strategy," a Kalem comedy in one part of the Ham and Bud brand, will follow, and "A Lesson in Labor," a Lubin drama in two acts, featuring L. C. Shumway, Velma Whitman and George Routh, will then be shown. Then will come "A Temporary Truce," a drama in two parts with Blanche Sweet as leading woman. This is a Biograph feature.

The ever popular Canimated Nooz Pictorial reinforced by a scenic picture, both from the Essanay studio, will inaugurate the program Wednesday, August 16. Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, famous, popular funmakers, will then be seen in a one-reel comedy, "Their Dream House." This will be followed by "The Turquoise Mine Conspiracy," the second episode of "The Girl From 'Frisco," by Kalem. This gives Marin Sais and True Boardman many opportunities to display their acknowledged talents.

The Selig News-Tribune has the distinction of being shown first on the program Thursday, August 17, followed by a Vim comedy in one reel, "Life Savers," in which "Plump and Runt" furnish the fun.

Ivy Close the international beauty brought over from England by Kalem, especially for General Film Service comedies, will be seen in "He Wrote Poetry." a one-reel comedy August 18. Hughie Mack of Vitagraph fame will then be presented in a one-reel comedy, "There and Back." Then just to round out the day of fun, "Pokes and Jabbs" will be seen in a Vim comedy entitled "Comrades."

For Saturday, Essanay provides one of their bright stars in Joyce Fair, featured in a three-part drama "A Little Volunteer." A Vitagraph three-act drama presenting Evert Overton, will add strength to the program that day. "With the Aid of the Wreckers," an episode of the "Hazards of Helen" Series by Kalem, featuring Helen Gibson, will be screened next, and Tom Mix will close the week in Selig's "A Bear of a Story," a one-act comedy.

That General Film Company will be especially strong in stars that week, reflecting the policy upon which General Film Company has laid so much stress of late and which it claims has proved itself a great success according to the testimony of exhibitors.

Big September Harvest of "Fall of a Nation."

Fifty Prints of Dixon-Herbert Spectacle Will Be in Use Soon After Labor Day—Cleveland and Providence Openings Successful.

THE demand for "The Fall of a Nation" by state rights buyers and exhibitors continues in such force that E. V. Giroux, general manager of the National Drama Corporation, says fifty prints will be working by the middle of September. Ten prints of the Dixon-Herbert spectacle were completed in July for the immediate quick requirements, but forty more have recently been ordered to keep pace with the rapidly increasing demands. At the same time Arthur W. Tams has printed large editions of the Victor Herbert orchestral and piano music, which is advertised as "the first original score written for a great picture by a composer of foremost rank."

The New England campaign of the film started auspiciously on July 31 with a week's run at James E. Moore's Modern theater, Providence. Many exhibitors from eastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island mingled in the big crowd that attended the premier. Wallace M. Powers represented the interests of the National Drama Corporation. After leaving Providence Mr. Powers visited Worcester, Boston, Lowell, Portland, Bangor and other New England cities in which he has a wide acquaintance. Willard Holcomb, business manager of J. Frank Hatch's "Fall of a Nation" company, reports splendid business at the Euclid Avenue opera house, Cleveland, where the picture had its first Ohio showing beginning July 30. A tour in the first-class theaters of Toledo, Dayton, Columbus and Cincinnati will follow the Cleveland run.

Under the direction of Mrs. William Bramwell (Minnie Seligman) a benefit performance of the spectacle will be given at the Hotel Nassau, Long Beach, on Wednesday evening, August 9. The gross receipts will be devoted to the relief of guardsmen's families who were left without funds by the militia move to the Mexican border.

New Griffith Feature.

Liberty Theater Secured for First Presentation of "Intolerance" on August 22.

D. W. Griffith completed arrangements with Klaw and Erlanger recently to take over the Liberty theater for the season 1916-1917, beginning August 21. His first production there will be the new colossal spectacle, "Intolerance," which he designates as a sun play of the ages.

Mr. Griffith has been at work upon this story for some time. It is an original idea consisting of parallel narratives coming down through four ages in the world's development. The connecting link between the past and present reveals that the same force which has created crises in the world's affairs is at work today. In this production Mr. Griffith has set a new mark and created his most ambitious achievement. Greater backgrounds have been made for his action than was ever revealed before. In his principal scenes he has utilized more people than were ever seen in any production.

"Intolerance" will be presented for the first time at the Liberty theater on Tuesday night, August 22. This is the production which has been referred to heretofore as "The Mother and the Law," a title which was used solely for working purposes. It tells a modern story of striking local color and stirring detail which depicts the suffering and adventures of a young couple who happen to be caught in the whirlpool of so-called social reform. The effort to thwart the law of individual destinies is the force which brings the young lovers and others into a sequence of events which engulf them. In this Griffith has shown a keen insight into prevalent conditions and in illustration of his theme has painted a picture which will startle the world by its realism.

The entire conception is poetic and epical, investing a newer understanding of the past and present with a more direct force than was dreamed possible until this method perfected by Griffith came to hand. It will be staged with that attention to detail which marks the Griffith productions and its emotional message will be carried by an orchestral score equal in every demand to the range and sweep of the book.

Mr. Meade journeyed to New York from Dallas in connection with his transfer to Cleveland, and Mr. Gruben accompanied him to visit his mother at her New Jersey home. Mr. Gruben is a Jersey boy. Mr. Flynn is spending his vacation here.

Nat Goodwin and Florence Turner Featured

Mutual Program for Week of August 14 Headlines Those Stars—Has Other Interesting Subjects to Complete the List

NAT C. GOODWIN and Florence Turner, two of the foremost players of the stage and screen now before the public, are presented as the stars of the chief feature release of the Mutual Film Corporation for the week of August 14.

Of the many "possibilities" offered for Mr. Goodwin's appearance, none presented a better opportunity for displaying the star's remarkable talents for character delineation than "A Wall Street Tragedy," and it was selected for him, from more than a score of offerings.

"A Wall Street Tragedy," as the title implies, is a story dealing to a large extent with big finance and presents Mr. Goodwin in the unusually pleasing role of Thomas Norton, a Western capitalist and mine owner, who fails in an attempt to corner the copper market.

Principal among the support are Richard Neill, Mary Newton, Eugenie Elba, Zola Temzart, J. Cooper Willis, Clifford Gray, Marie Burke, Mabel Wright and several others of equal note.

Miss Turner makes her appearance in her third Mutual Star Production as the heroine of "A Welsh Singer," filmed under the direction of Larry Trimble from Allan Raine's widely read story of the same name. Of the many feature productions in which she has been starred during her long career in screen work none had furnished Miss Turner with the opportunity of bringing into play her wide scope of emotional abilities as does "A Welsh Singer." With one exception, Miss Turner is supported in this remarkable screen production by the same company of capable players who have appeared with her in her preceding feature production released by the Mutual Film Corporation. Among them are Henry Edwards, who plays the leading role opposite Miss Turner, Campbell Cullan, Malcolm Cherry and Una Venning, the latter a newcomer by these Turner features.

Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh are the featured players of "The Holly House," the Mutual's three part offering of the week. In this feature production, screened at the American studios by Edward Sloman, Miss Rich is presented in the role of a charming little miss who finds herself the center of a most unusual story of love and adventure. Harry Von Meter and Leona Hutton, in addition to Mr. Vosburgh, have been cast fr important roles. "The Holly House" will be released August 17.

Three two-part dramas are scheduled for release during the week, including "Ruth Ridley Returns," August 14, "El Diable," August 18, and "Destiny's Boomerang," August 19. "Ruth Ridley Returns" is a sociological drama, in which Ed Coxen and Lizette Throne are the featured players, has to do with a mother who commits a theft which sends her daughter to the penitentiary.

"Disguiser,' with Claude Cooper and Frank McNish, a Falstaff comedy, leads off the Mutual single reel comedies for the week. It will be released August 15. The "Beauty" release "Perkin's Mystic Manor," starring Orral Humphrey, is to be released August 16, while "The Luckless Scheme," a two-part Vogue, will go to the public August 20.

Mutual Weekly No. 85 for release August 16, and "See America First," which goes to the exhibitor on the same day, presents an unusual number of interesting new and travel scenes. Reel Life, the Mutual Film Magazine in pictures for release August 20, is comprised of a number of unusual subjects filmed especially by the Gaumont studios for the animated magazine.

New Faces in Big Four's August List

WALTER W. IRWIN, General Manager of the V-L-S-E, announces that, in line with the policy of the Big Four company of producing features sufficiently attractive to overcome even the distressing summer weather, a program of unusual strength has been compiled for the month of August.

"The Alibi," a tense play of intrigue and crime, in which James Morrison and Betty Howe are featured, is a Vitagraph release for August 7. The play is from the pen of George Allan England and was picturized by George H. Plympton. Paul Scardon directed it.

"The Sting of Victory," in which Henry B. Walthall of Essanay plays double roles supported by Antoinette Walker, will be released on August 8. Mortimer Peck wrote the story and J. Charles Haydon produced it.

On the 14th will be released "The Dawn of Freedom," featuring Charles Richman, Arline Pretty, James Morrison and several other Vitagraph stars. This play, written by William J. Hurlburt and directed by Paul Scardon and Theodore Marston, is one of the most pretentious ever produced under the "V" banner.

"The Country That God Forgot," a Selig contribution to the V-L-S-E. program which promises to outdo even the past two unusually strong releases of this producer, will be released on August 21. In this play Thomas Santschi will play the leading part. Supporting him will be George Fawcett, Mary Charleson, Sidney Smith and Cecil Holland. Marshall Neilan, who is responsible for several of the big Selig successes, directed the picture.

"The Footlights of Fate," a five-part Vitagraph feature adapted from Louis Joseph Vance's "Joan Thursday," will also be released on the 21st. This play features Naomi Childers, Marc McDermott and others. William Humphrey directed it.

"The Kid," a charming newspaper story featuring Lillian Walker and produced by Director Wilfred North, is slated for August 28.

ROLIN COMPANY EXPANDS.

The success of Pathe's "Luke" comedies has caused the Rolin Company, which produces them, to expand. A new company has just been formed under the direction of Harry Russell, formerly of Keystone. "Fatty" Lampton and little Gertrude Short will play the leads.

McGovern with Powell Productions

Advertising Manager of New York Motion Picture Company Resigns to Handle Sales for New Concern.

IN keeping with the policy of securing the best business organization possible, the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., announce the acquisition of Elmer J. McGovern, to assume the position of general sales representative of that company.

Mr. McGovern came into the picture field after a long and varied business experience with the New York Central Railroad, and became associated as advertising manager with the old Exhibitors Times, now the Motion Picture News, where he remained until prevailed upon to go with the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

Elmer J. McGovern.

He was placed in charge of all advertising for the large corporation and his measure of success may be judged by his holding the position of assistant to Mr. Kessel at the time of his resignation to go with the Powell Company.

With the experience gained through his several years of work with the New York Motion Picture Corporation, it is a foregone conclusion that he will prove a valuable adjunct to the Powell organization.

SOBEL BECOMES A "REALESTATER."

J. H. Sobel, a former World Film "booster," and more lately with B. S. Moss, has resigned to go into the real estate business, becoming manager of the New York office of Leon Sobel.

Three Vitagraphs on General Film.

Evart Overton in a Curwood Story—Kate Price in "Conductor Kate" and Hughie Mack in "There and Back."

DURING the second week of August, Vitagraph will release three pictures of exceptional merit through the General Film. The most prominent of these is "The Wandering Horde," a three-part Broadway Star Feature by James Oliver Curwood, in which Evart Overton is starred. "Conductor Kate" and "There and Back," both single-part comedies, are the other two subjects.

In "The Wandering Horde," Curwood gives an insight into the lives of men of high finance. He also conveys some idea of how the "hoboes" who wander the roads and byways of our country subsist. The two conditions are blended together with a pleasing love story in which Evart Overton is seen as chief stockholder in a large corporation and a novelist. He is given strong support by a capable cast that includes Denton Vane, Adele Kelly, Charmine Mayfield, Edward Elkas, John Costello and Logan Paul. Eugene Mullin is to be complimented on the way he produced the story and also on his selection of settings. The country scenes are the most realistic we have ever seen.

"Conductor Kate" is crowded with laughs, that continue throughout the entire run of the picture. Kate Price after proving herself a better "man" than her husband, by knocking him out for coming home "wobbly" after a stop at the corner saloon, further goes to prove it by taking her post on the rear end of a trolley car. She sees to it that the "no smoking" order is carried out. Also, that the ladies obtain seats even though she is compelled to pull some of the "gentlemen" out of their seats to make room for them. Templer Saxe is seen as the husband. William Addison Lathrop is the author of the story.

Good-natured Hughie Mack, the heavyweight comedian, in "There and Back," lives up to his reputation of laugh-maker. He puts forth his best effort in this latest offering, which was written by C. Graham Baker and Lawrence Semon. Many amusing situations are furnished in the cabaret scenes, which are numerous. Semon, who produced the picture, can always be depended on for something new, and this is no exception, for many novel ideas are introduced. Patsy De Forest and Josephine Earle make up the balance of the cast.

That Big Explosion.

Created Great Excitement Among the "Weeklies," Each of Which Claim a "Scoop."

The terrific explosion of high powered ammunition intended for use in the European war which occurred at Black Tom peninsula, New York Bay, on Sunday morning, July 30, created quite a commotion among the cameramen engaged in taking news scenes for the "Weekly news reels." Every available camera in the news service about New York was pressed into service and the rivalry in the point of getting the first picture on the screen was sharp. It was a big event and covered considerable territory, also it was a dangerous assignment to cover for the reason that shrapnel shell was bursting all over the place, not to speak of the continual danger of several tons of explosives letting lose at any time and in unexpected places.

But the camera men covered the event speedily and with a completeness that wins credit for their calling. As to who arrived first at the curtain it is difficult to say—they all claim the honor. But it was a good job.

Paramount's Quality Program.

Better Pictures for Better Theaters and a Better Public for the Week of August 21.

THE week of August 21 will be an exceptionally interesting one for Paramounters, because of the excellent quality of the releases that will be issued on the Paramount Program during the week. Interesting short reel subjects will also be released, rounding out Paramount's quality program of better pictures for better theaters and a better public.

The two five-reel features will be the Lasky production of "Public Opinion," and the Famous Players production of "Rolling Stones." The leading role in "Public Opinion" is portrayed by Blanche Sweet, whose notable characterization of sympathy represents one of her best pieces of work. The scenario was written by Margaret Turnbull.

"Rolling Stones" has been adapted by the Famous Players from Edgar Selwyn's great comedy drama, in which Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot will be presented in the leading roles. The production is staged under the direction of Del Henderson, one of the best known directors in the motion picture industry who recently was added to the Famous Players staff.

The Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures for this week are not only interesting because of the beauty of the scenic matter, but are especially notable because of their wartime interest. The release entitled "In South Tyrol" is that Italian corner of Austria to which Mr. Holmes takes his fellow-travelers, which is familiarly known as "Italian Austria." It is one of the most daintily beautiful sections of Europe.

The Paramount-Bray cartoon for this week is another clever animated antic of "Colonel Heeza Liar," who, J. R. Bray, the cartoonist, has doing stunts in the character of Hamlet. The cartoon shows the Colonel applying for a job in a motion picture studio, to play opposite Mary Pickfrd and other leading artists.

Paramount Pictographs, the "magazine-on-the-screen," has more variety in this the twenty-eighth edition of the magazine than any of its previous numbers. It opens with the picturizing of how a fireman is made. The "Better Babies" section of the Pictographs has as its basis a plea for maternal nursing, and shows the results that accrue from feeding a young baby from the bottle, or on prepared food, sold under proprietary names, and how by reason of this children become bow-legged, knock-kneed and flat-footed. Weaving in wood is another interesting subject that is pictorially discussed in which there is shown that willow chairs are made without nails, they being woven the same as you would weave carpet.

Another section takes up the workings of the George Junior Republic, a town of children, which costs each citizen an average of $4 a week. Each child has to earn his board and room, and if he commits a nuisance or any other of the "republic's crimes," he is called into the children's court and the jury is composed of kids. The concluding subject of this week's magazine is entitled "A Picnic for Two," in which there is shown an automobile used for picnicing. After the couple have traveled twenty miles, they turn the car into a kitchen, then a dining room, then a bath house, the latter containing a shower bath.

DAVIS IS PROMOTED.

H. M. Davis has been appointed manager of the New York City branch of the Unicorn Film Service. Mr. Davis has been identified with the motion picture business for the past fourteen years, and is well fitted for the responsible position he now occupies.

Prior to his connection with the Unicorn Mr. Davis was with the Mecca branch of the Universal. As he has himself managed a number of theaters he knows the needs of exhibitors, and his personal attention is of value to the patrons of the Unicorn.

EDWARD JOSE AND PEARL WHITE FOR ANOTHER PATHE SERIAL.

Edward Jose, producer of Pathe's "The Iron Claw," will make a serial this fall with Pearl White as the star. This serial will be made under the auspices of the Astra Film Corporation and released through Pathe.

Miss White has starred in more serials than any player before the public, and her drawing power is remarkable. The association between Mr. Jose as director and Miss White as the star proved so fortunate in "The Iron Claw" that exhibitors will undoubtedly be much pleased to learn that this association will be continued.

I.; National tennis championship games, Brooklyn; new bathing pavilion, Chicago; native dancers, Java; golf championship, Del Monte, Cal.

HIS HARD JOB (Vitagraph), July 31.—The hero of this one-reel comedy is played by Wm. Dangman. William's difficult job is minding a baby. He is not at all expert at the work but makes it interesting for everyone, especially the baby, who, by the way, is a remarkable infant actress. The reel will amuse the women and children. It was written by James Stiles and produced by Frank Currier.

HUBBY'S RELATIVES (Vim), Aug. 2.—Harry C. Meyers and Rosemary Theby continue their domestic difficulties in this one-reel comedy. Hubby's relatives turn out to be bill collectors, for the most part, and he is put to it to rid the house of their presence. The reel is capitally played and the situations are fairly funny.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 62, 1916 (Selig), Aug. 3.—Twenty-two die in an explosion in waterworks tunnel under Lake Erie, Cleveland; steamer Mt. Clemens carried rescue party, four of whom perished in attempt to rescue comrades; seven killed when bomb explodes during preparedness parade, San Francisco; chorus girls sell tickets for relief of guardsmen's families, New York; sizzling heat drives thousands into cooling water, Chicago; summer camp for poor children at Canton, Mass.; First Illinois on hike at San Antonio; Mathewson's farewell.

HUMAN HOUNDS (Vim), Aug. 3.—Plump and Runt are a pair of detectives in this one-reel farce. Their efforts to help a client secure a divorce from her husband, leads to considerable broad fun. The number has the vigor of action that is generally to be found in a Vim comedy.

PEACHES AND PONIES (Kalem), Aug. 4.—A one-reel comedy featuring Ivy Close, this picture is a decided advance upon the first number in which the English actress appeared. A review was printed in the issue of Aug. 12, page 943.

A MYSTERY OF THE RAILS (No. 91 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Kalem), Aug. 5.—This hazard has an extra number of thrills. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of Aug. 12, page 1101.

A RACE FOR LIFE (Vitagraph), Aug. 4.—This is a capital one-reel comedy. Its fun is extravagant but the way in which a lamblike college boy wins a race while fleeing for his life from an enraged French cook is very amusing. Wm. Western, Jack Mower, Mary Anderson and Otto Lederer comprise the leaders of the cast. A short scenic, "A Glimpse of Sweeden," is on the same reel.

AN ANGELIC ATTITUDE (Selig), Aug. 5.—The attitude referred to is assumed by one of the characters, who poses as a subject for a charming artist of the opposite sex. The scenes are laid among the Tom Mix cowboys, Tom himself being the leading spirit of the picture. The reel is broad farce and ranks with the best of the Mix brand.

General Film Company Specials

REPENTANCE (Essanay), July 29.—The plot of this three-reel photoplay is a strong one. It touches on religion, the heroine of the story being an agnostic—a novel situation in a drama. The way that the girl is brought to realize her error is convincing. John Lorenz and Anne Leigh are the principals in the cast. Their work is praiseworthy.

THE OLD MAN WHO TRIED TO GROW YOUNG (Selig), July 31.—To begin with, this three-reel photoplay never happened. It is a mixture of "Faust" and "A Fool There Was," and, taken from the right viewpoint, possesses decided merit. It is full of action and has a clearly-defined moral. Some of the incidents, including the use of the hairdye, need not be questioned too closely, but the manner in which the story is worked out will satisfy most spectators. An excellent cast, headed by Al. W. Filson, Charles West and Vivian Reed, do the drama justice.

THE HOUSE OF DISCORD (Biograph), Aug. 1.—Reviewed in the issue of July 15, this two-part drama is classed as a picture likely to appeal most strongly to women on account of the effective human note in the relationship of mother and daughter. Blanche Sweet, Dorothy Gish, Marshal Neilan and Lionel Barrymore are in the cast.

THE ALIBI (Vitagraph), Aug. 7.—This production presents an excellent adaptation of a novel by George Allen England. James Morrison and Paul Scardon do some excellent dramatic work. The picture is one of the best melodramatic offerings of the season. A full review will be found elsewhere.

THE SAND LARK (Knickerbocker), July 28.—The scenes of this three-reel photoplay are laid on the seashore, fisherfolk being the principal people in the story. While befriending a woman she finds on the beach, the heroine compromises herself and causes her lover to think the worst of her. As usual, a little calm reflection would have cleared the atmosphere of suspicion—and spoiled the dramatic climax. The story is human but rather long drawn out. Henry King and Margaret Landis are earnest and capable in the leading parts. The locations are picturesque.

THE CHIMNEY SWEEP (Essanay), Aug. 1.—Joyce Fair is the leading lady of this two-reel drama, written by Edward T. Lowe, Jr. The picture belongs to the juvenile class of fiction, a waif who starts life as a chimney sweep filling the role of the hero. The youngster falls in love with a daughter of wealth, works his way up the social ladder and marries the lady of his choice. The story is just what it pretends to be, and is neatly acted by Joyce Fair, Tommy Harper, John Cossar and Fred Malatesta.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

LITTLE EVE EDGARTON (Aug. 21).—An unusually well-produced five-part production, directed by Robert Leonard. The picture is an adaptation of Eleanor H. Abbott's novel, and features Ella Hall and Thomas Jefferson. Herbert Rawlinson and other competent players are also in the cast. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

International Film Service Inc.

Mutual Film Corporation

DAREDEVILS AND DANGER (Beauty), Aug. 2.—An unusually thrilling number in which some daring motorcycle riding occurs. The plot of the story is slight and deals with the theft of the plans of a self-firing, self-aiming machine gun. This resolves itself into a race between an automobile and a motorcycle. A very good number

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 83 (Mutual), Aug. 2.—Interesting items of this issue are views showing the open air camp of the Salvation Army at Boston, Mass.; the "Keyport" sinking off the Battery; a picture of James Whitcomb Riley; a demonstration of the Dunn diving hood, and the State militia leaving Seattle for Alaska via the S. S. "New Orleans."

WHEN JERRY CAME TO TOWN (Cub), Aug. 4.—When Jerry came to town, according to the picture, he caused a great commotion. He gets a job, and was speedily thrust therefrom in the twinkling of an eye. In the bargain he falls in love with a pretty girl, and eventually manages to get out of several scrapes without a scratch, while as much could not be said of some others.

JUST AS HE THOUGHT (Beauty), Aug. 6.—An Orral Humphrey number that may be classified as being only moderately interesting. The farce is based on the funnyisms in the daily life of a drunkard, whose wife and mother-in-law make life miserable for him by trying to reform him. A revival meeting is taken advantage of for the introduction of extra comedy.

REEL LIFE, NO. 14 (Gaumont), Aug. 6.—An interesting number, including several views on a Long Island duck farm, Asiatic architectural masterpieces, and a demonstration of the deftness of "Four-Fingered Jim" in the making of basket work fans.

LOST AND FOUND (Vogue), Aug. 6.—The comedy in this number has a strong flavor of Chaplin slapstick. Some might find it very amusing. It concerns principally the fortunes of two pals who, having struck a fortune, are relieved of it by a couple of thieves, and afterward find employment in a shoe store where most of the slapstick work takes place.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 48 (Gaumont), Aug. 9.—This number contains some beautiful views in the vicinity of Delaware Water Gap and the Pocono Mountains. The photography is excellent and the scenes well chosen.

JERRY'S CELEBRATION (Cub), Aug. 11.—An amusing farce comedy in the usual "Jerry" style. A mix-up of automobiles and Indians is one of the most laughable points of the comedy. Most audiences will find this number entertaining.

TOO BAD EDDIE (Beauty), Aug. 13.—This will be found to be a very amusing farce comedy in which Eddie, the publisher of a daily newspaper, has an interesting time trying to dodge his creditors. In so doing he pretends to be engaged to the daughter of the rich man of the town, is forced to back water, and in the end, when everything goes wrong, he decides to make good his escape.

THE STRENGTH OF DONALD McKENZIE (Mutual Star Production—American—No. 123), Aug. 3.—William Russell and Charlotte Burton are featured in this five-part production. The story, not a strong one, treats of the casual meeting of two young people in the mountains, and of the result of the meeting in the eventual engagement of the pair. Some interesting situations occur when the plans of the villain go awry. A tame squirrel takes a prominent part in the picture.

THE MADONNA OF THE NIGHT (American), Aug. 3.—A three-part number featuring Nita Davis. This number is not of special interest. It presents the story of a young woman who, in returning from college for her Christmas vacation, accidentally drops her slipper from the train at a stop on the road. Running down the embankment to get it, she suddenly realizes that the train has left her. After wandering about she walks into a saloon, where she is carried off by one of the men congregated there, and returned to her home in safety. The production would be more interesting under another name, and without the effort made to imitate in appearance the Virgin.

SANDY—REFORMER (Mustang), Aug. 4.—A two-part western production, featuring Helen Rosson and Art Acord. The story deals with the adventure of Sandy, a plain cowboy, who is lured into buying worthless mining stock, and afterwards gets the best of the man who sold him the stock, forcing him to return him the price of it. His dream of a home of his own then comes true when he marries a pretty waitress. A very good number.

FATE'S DECISION (Centaur), Aug. 5.—This two-part production from the Horsley studios will be found interesting. Margaret Gibson is given an opportunity for the display of talent which she takes advantage of. Playing opposite her is William Clifford with Claude Mortonsen playing the "heavy." The story is not new in theme. In fact it is one of the sort that has been done again and again, treating of the business man's wife who goes momentarily astray because she feels her husband is neglecting her. Nevertheless, the production is well made and cannot fail to interest.

SOME LIARS (Vogue), Aug. 13.—A two-part comedy which concerns the persecution of a husband whose wife is boss of the home. With his pal, whose domestic life is happier, he goes off on a spree one night and thirty days later appears again before his interrogating spouse in fear and trembling. He is soundly trounced for his pains and so the story ends. The number is moderately entertaining.

A WELSH SINGER (Mutual Star Production—No. 127), Aug. 17.—A five-part production made at the Turner studios in England. The story on which it is based is taken from a novel by Allen Raine, and is an exceptionally pretty romance. Florence Turner plays the leading feminine role in a delightful manner, clothing the character of the shepherdess who later is transformed into a prima donna, with simplicity and dignity. This picture can be hown with impunity in any theater.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE STRONGER LOVE (Morosco), Aug. 14.—Vivian Martin makes her first appearance as a Morosco star in this very well produced story of a mountain feud. The characters are convincingly acted by Miss Martin and those in her support and the photography is notably fine.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 60, 1916 (Pathe), July 26.—Interesting items of this number are Ladies of the American Red Cross Society presenting the colors to the U. S. Troops at Fort Sam Houston; demonstration of tractor ploughs at Munroe County fair; Allied Warships in the North Sea; Gen. Joffre reviewing a detachment of French Infantry as it passes to battle, and scenes in the Oregon woods showing sportsmen hunting venison.

WHO'S GUILTY? NO. 13 (Arrow), July 31.—"The Goad of Jealousy" is the title for this number of the series, which, although not quite as strong as some of the other dramas that have been presented, will at the same time be found interesting as a well directed production. It treats of how a woman yielded to the voice of Jealousy, and eventually poisoned herself.

WHO'S GUILTY? NO. 14 (Arrow), Aug. 7.—In this number is presented a story dealing with the career of a young man who became the innocent victim of a malicious person living next door through whom he is sentenced to prison twice on false accusations. In the meantime his mother dies for lack of proper care, and his sister almost becomes the victim of the man in trying to save her mother. Rather overdrawn, but effective. Its title is "The Irony of Justice."

THE GRIP OF EVIL, NO. 5 (Balboa), Aug. 14.—This number presents the case of a young girl whose father is a drunkard and whose mother favors her son rather than her daughter, thereby preventing the girl from making the best of her opportunities. At the loss of her position through her mother's unjust treatment, she wanders about distracted and then tries to commit suicide by drowning, and is rescued by a young bachelor who afterward falls in love with her. In his home she is harrassed by her brother, who tries to collect money for gambling purposes.

THE FUGITIVE (Gold Rooster Play), Aug. 14.—The initial release of the Thanhouser Film Corporation on the Gold Rooster program features Florence LaBadie. The story of the production was written by Philip Lonergan, and takes the form of an interesting melodrama. At times there is felt a lack of action that could easily have been avoided. A full review will be found on another page of the magazine.

CAUGHT WITH THE GOODS (Nestor), July 31.—A pleasing little number, showing the way in which a trained ourang-outang steals a wallet and throws suspicion on the hero. Later the theft is unraveled. A light subject of quite an entertaining sort.

WHAT DARWIN MISSED (Nestor), Aug. 13.—A comedy number, by Beverly Griffith, featuring Victor Potel as a professor who specializes in animal studies. He dreams he is in an African jungle, where he meets an elephant, an ourang-outang, some alligators and other beasts. Real animals are employed in each instance. The plot is slight, but children will probably like the animal features.

THE BATTLE OF CHILE CON CARNE (Nestor), Aug. 14.—Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean appear in this Mexican war burlesque. Lee makes up well as Gen. Caramba. Eddie is a reporter, who falls in love with a Mexican belle and carries her over the border after much trouble. This is quite pleasingly presented and has several amusing moments.

HE WROTE A BOOK (Victor), Aug. 15.—A one-reel comedy, by Hayward Mack, featuring Wm. Garwood, Lois Wilson and Edward Brady. A young college student is imposed upon by his friends, but he learns boxing and succeeds in turning the tables on them. The plot has a touch of originality and the number is quite amusing.

TOLL OF THE LAW (Imp), Aug. 16.—A story of the underworld, by Francis J. Powers, featuring T. D. Crittenden, Agnes Vernon and Wm. Lowery. The plot is one of obvious sentiment and no particular originality, though the characters are quite appealing. A blind girl, her crooked brother and a minister are the principals.

A WOMAN'S EYES (Big U), Aug. 17.—A Western episode, featuring Harry Carey, Joe Rickson and Olive Fuller Golden. The "Buzzard" discovers oil on the homesteader's land and plots with Horn to jump the claim. The latter relents when he meets the girl and drives the men away. This is interesting and well presented.

THE RIDDLE OF THE WORLD (Powers), Aug. 19.—No. 1 of a series of films depicting life in Japan, taken by Dr. George A. Hersey. Some novel views are shown of life in the land of temples and cherry trees. An instructive insight into the manners and customs of the Japs is afforded.

WEAPONS OF LOVE (Big U), Aug. 18.—A mountain story, by Hapsburg Liebe, featuring Vola Smith and G. Raymond Nye. The girl is very attractive and the scenic effects are also good. The story has the right native tang to it and is an improvement over the average number of this type.

GOOD AND EVIL (Imp), Aug. 18.—This number contains a slight allegorical touch, showing the way in which the spirit of Christ is reflected by a painting of the Madonna child. The idea has been used before in different ways. The lesson conveyed is a good one, though there is some vagueness of construction.

SOUP AND NUTS (Joker), Aug. 19.—Pat Rooney is featured in this number, by Ben Cohn, as a Willie boy who goes to college. He clashes with the other students and it make a man of him. The plot is rather slight, but fairly amusing.

Universal Film Mfg.Company Specials

PEG O' THE RING, NO. 15 (Universal Special), Aug. 7.—In addition to having thrills galore, the last two-part episode of the Grace Cunard-Francis Ford serial brings the story to a satisfactory conclusion by removing several of the evil characters and causing the others to reform. The rescue of Peg from a burning building is one of the most startling incidents, after which she undergoes an operation to cure her peculiar mental malady. Altogether these two reels provide an appropriate conclusion for a popular serial.

A YOKE OF GOLD (Red Feather), Aug. 14.—A five-reel offering, the scenario by Calder Johnstone and directed by Floyd B. Carleton. This is a story of old California days, located in San Gabriel and Santa Barbara missions and the surrounding country. It is a very quiet story, almost entirely devoid of drama. The chief strength is in the settings and general atmosphere, which are true to the time depicted. While it contains considerable beauty of presentation, it is not strong in story value. Alfred Allen, Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson play the leads.

LIBERTY (Universal Special Feature), Aug. 14.—No. 1 of a new serial, bearing the special title "The Fangs of the Wolf." This is to be a story of love and adventure on the Mexican border, with a dash of patriotism thrown in here and there. A group of daring performers, comprising Marie Walcamp, Jack Holt, Bertram Grassby, Neal Hart, G. Raymond Nye and Eddie Polo promise well for a serial of this type. This first installment, in three reels, makes a good showing. Actions of a stirring type is the chief element of interest. The wild, picturesque settings are attractive.

TIMOTHY, THAT'S ME. (Dobbs No. 1, "The Sody Clerk") (Special Universal Feature), Aug. 14.—A bright, snappy comedy two-reel subject, written by Bess Meredyth and directed by Wallace Beery. Carter De Haven plays the part of a young soda clerk who likes himself pretty well and imagines he is a great actor. All the village "flappers" are in love with him, including Mary, daughter of the proprietor. Vola Smith appears as the latter. Robert Milash is funny as Jeff, farm hand and valet. The subtitles are good samples of up-to-date humor and the subject as a whole is laughable and pleasing.

A SON OF NEPTUNE (Gold Seal), Aug. 15.—This three-reel juvenile subject, by Wm. V. Mong, features Gordon Griffith and Georgia French. The small boy, after his father's death, wanders over the seacoast blowing his toy whistle. The beachcomber and his wife find him and treat him cruelly. He runs away and his whistle brings a little girl, who has lost her way. He tells her a fairy story and they fall asleep. The dream, in which gnomes and fairies appear, is prettily worked out. This would have been stronger as a two-reel subject, but will please children as it stands.

THE MOTHER-IN-LAW (L-KO), Aug. 16.—A three-reel comic number, featuring Billy Ritchie as a man pestered by his mother-in-law. The action is of the knockabout type, some of it slightly vulgar, though not in an offensive way. The number will probably have a strong appeal in houses that are not too particular. Some of the incidents are certainly very funny in their way. The patent bath tub, the traveling soap bubble and the moving of the house to the railroad right-of-way, are features that will bring laughter.

ASHAMED OF THE OLD FOLKS (Victor), Aug. 17.—A two-reel number, featuring Matt Moore and Jane Gail as a young married couple. He also plays the part of the girl's father and she his mother, double exposure being employed in various scenes. The makeups of the old couple are so well done that many observers will not discover the deception until they are taken off at the close. The story itself is not particularly strong, but there is enough novelty in the production to hold the attention. The number is an entertaining one.

BEYOND THE TRAIL (Bison), Aug. 19.—A two-reel Canadian story, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips, Charles Ogle and Wm. Welsh. This shows a young father and his girl who have come to the wood regions, where no questions are asked. Later, when the girl grows up, her lover comes. He turns out to be a son of the man who had greatly wronged her father. The story is quite dramatic and well-constructed, and while somewhat conventional, holds the interest well. The winter scenes are pleasing.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of August 6 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Woman in the Case" at the Strand.

As the feature for the week of August 6 the Strand theater offered the Famous Players screen adaptation of Clyde Fitch's noteworthy drama, "The Woman in the Case," starring Pauline Frederick, who has chosen the part of the self-sacrificing wife who risks everything to save her husband. In support of Pauline Frederick there appeared several well known players, chief among them being Clarence Handysides, Alan Hale and Marie Chambers.

A subsidiary feature at the Strand was Charlie Chaplin's latest comedy, "One A. M."

The Strand Topical Review, the Strand Travelogues, and a "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon comedy completed the film program.

Harry Gribble, Fritz Bruch, and Miss Lucy Bruch, Miss Grace Hoffman and Miss Perle were the soloists.

"Hell to Pay Austin" at the Rialto.

The Rialto offered Bessie Love and Wilfred Lucas in "Hell to Pay Austin," a Triangle photoplay from the pen of Mary H. O'Connor, who has combined a man's "punch" and a woman's tender appreciation of charm in a story of frontier life. As a special added attraction "Charlie" Chaplin appeared upon the screen, commencing Monday, in his latest comedy creation, "One A. M."

The regular program included a Keystone comedy, "Laundry Liz," with Fay Tincher in the title role. An attractive topical and scientific weekly, and the third section of Dr. Leonard S. Sugden's motion pictures of Alaska, were also shown.

Vocal artists from the operatic field predominated in the musical section, and included Lucille Arnold, M. Desere De Frere and Hardy Williamson.

"The House of the Golden Windows" at the Broadway.

Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid, the Famous Players-Lasky stars, were seen at the Broadway theater in the Jesse L. Lasky-Paramount production of "The House of the Golden Windows," written especially for them by Charles Carvor from the story by L. V. Jefferson.

The photoplay is founded on an old fairy tale. The screen version is laid among the green fields of California and tells the story of Tom and Sue Wells struggling for riches, and how Sue goes in search of the house on the hill, only to find that her own little shack has windows of gold.

"One A. M.," the latest Mutual-Chaplin two-part comedy featuring Charlie Chaplin, was added on Monday.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater the four newest Triangle pictures were shown. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Frank Keenan in "Honor Thy Name," and on Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Mae Marsh and Robert Harron in "The Marriage of Molly-O" led the program. A Keystone comedy supplied the lighter moments.

Doris Kenyon

DORIS MARGARET KENYON, who will be featured with Robert Warwick in "Marie," a coming Paragon production to be released on the World Film program, was studying vocal culture, and had played in a few performances of the "Princess Pat" company when she was discovered.

Her childhood ambition was to become a grand opera singer. Now, between the operatic stage and motion pictures, she is at a loss which to choose for her profession, but she is sure of one thing, and that is, she wants to become a great artist in whatever work she finally decides to buckle down with.

Doris Kenyon.

Miss Kenyon will be 18 years old next September 5; she is 5 feet 6 inches tall, weighs all of 130 pounds, has an original light complexion with brown hair and gray eyes. She is considered by artists to be the most natural smiling girl in the pictures, and her smile is as charming as it is bewitching.

She is fond of swimming; in fact, she is an expert in the water, and has no fears for sharks. Horseback riding is another hobby of hers, while she does love to ride in her big auto.

When at play or at work in the studio, Doris Margaret is far too long a name for her friends to call her by, so they have adopted the more intimate cognomen of "Do-Do." Bear in mind that if you have not heard very much in the past about Miss Kenyon, that is not her fault. She will see that you do hear a great deal more about her from now on. Watch out!

A player familiar to the screen through his starring ventures in Gaumont's Casino Star Comedies is "Budd" Ross, who returns again to the Gaumont fold to appear in some of the piquant tabloid photodramas appended to "Reel Life."

Work on the newest of the Helen Holmes Mutual Star Productions "The Manager of the B. & A.," a filmization of Vaughn Kester's story of the same name, has all but been completed at the Signal-Mutual studios under the direction of Director-in-Chief J. P. McGowan.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"BROKE BUT AMBITIOUS" (Universal).

A horde of college boys were loosed this summer. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, Nestor comedians at Universal City, never went to college, but they play the roles supremely well in "Broke But Ambitious," which will be released on August 21 by the Universal.

Just out of school, where they have worked their way through as laundry agents, furnace cleaners and at other such occupations, they see an ad. in the paper for two young men to serve as companions and to amuse a yachting party.

Scene from "Broke But Ambitious" (Universal).

Take a look at the picture below. See how amusingly they are entertaining the "yachting party," Yes; they were shanghaied. However, that's neither here nor there. They had a delightful cruise, were only seasick on six days out of the week and made excellent scullions in the ship's stew chamber.

"Broke But Ambitious" was written by Harry Lyons, scenarioized by C. J. Wilson, Jr., and produced by L. W. Chaudet. H. S. Griffith, Priscilla Dean and Marcia Moore appear in support of the Nestor twins, and towards the end of the play what with Priscilla and Marcia furnishing the love interest all tinkles as merrily as a marriage bell.

"THE PAINTED LIE" (Horsley).

"The Painted Lie" will be the title of the gigantic military spectacle, a forthcoming David Horsley masterpicture production, starring Crane Wilbur, which has been referred to in early announcements as "Somewhere in Mexico."

The story was completed this week and is the most massive production ever turned out from the Horsley plant. Thrilling battle scenes of real conflict between United States troops and bandits are included in the action of the picture, these scenes having been filmed by Cameraman Roberto A. Turnbull, who accompanied Mr. Wilbur and Director Robert B. Broadwell to the border during the period of the crisis between this country and Mexico.

The story is from the pen of Crane Wilbur, and the principals of the supporting cast are Mae Gaston, Harrish Ingraham, Ida Lewis and Marie Corteaux. The release date of "The Painted Lie" will be announced later.

WITH THE UNICORN ORGANIZATION.

O. W. Moore, a well known picture man, has severed his connection with the Bluebird company, Indianapolis, Ind., and has taken the management of the Unicorn office in that city. A. J. Normal is manager of the Unicorn Chicago office. Mr. Normal left the Mutual Film Corporation to take up his new duties. S. M. Moscow has been transferred from the Boston office of the Unicorn to the management of the Syracuse, N. Y., branch. C. N. Christenson has resigned from the Mutual Film Corporation to take the management of the Cleveland, Ohio, office of the Unicorn.

The Unicorn branch offices have steadily increased in number until today there are twenty-eight in full operation. They are situated in the following cities: Albany, N. Y.; Baltimore, Md.; Bangor, Me.; Boston, Mass.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Charleston, W. Va.; Charlotte, N. C.; Chicago, Ill.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio; Denver, Colo.; Detroit, Mich.; Harrisburg, Pa.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Kansas City, Mo.; Memphis, Tenn.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Minneapolis, Minn.; New Haven, Conn.; New York City; Philadelphia, Pa.; Pittsburg, Pa.; St. Louis, Mo.; Springfield, Mass.; Syracuse, N. Y.; Toledo, Ohio; Washington, D. C., and Wilkesbarre, Pa.

When the Atlanta, Ga., and the California offices are opened, which will be very shortly, the network of Unicorn offices will cover the entire country.

THE McCLELLAN REFRIGERATING MACHINE.

A new and interesting device for cooling the liquid wash used in film developing is now being marketed by the McClellan Refrigerating Machine Co., of Chicago.

The McClellan system is adapted to all conditions, and can be attached to any tank. It is specially designed, small and compact, and is connected to the developing tank by piping to a coil located inside the barrel. The machine can be set to any degree desired, and will govern the temperature of the liquid accordingly.

The refrigerating gases are automatically controlled, and a simple turn of a water valve handle starts and stops the machine. It is operated by electricity, motors for which are furnished with it. The McClellan system eliminates the usual trouble experienced by the use of ice, and it is guaranteed not to interfere with the chemical solution. The Burton Holmes studio of Chicago has had the device in practical use for some time, and the results are reported highly satisfactory.

"MY COUNTRY 'TIS OF THEE" (Essanay).

This is a timely photoplay which grew out of the Mexican problem. It is not at all a war story, however, but a love romance, dealing with the conflict between a man's duty to his country and his home. The man, a captain in the militia, goes to the front despite the bitter opposition of his wife. She tells him he does not love her and is encouraged in this belief by the Other Man. The captain hears that his wife is beguiling her time in company with the other man and gets a furlough and rushes home. He finds, however, that the woman has learned to know the worth of his rival. In her revulsion of feeling she is aroused to an intense admiration of his patriotism and his sterling qualities as a real man. She bids him to return to his duty to his country while she awaits him at home. The picture was taken during the time the Illinois National Guard was leaving Chicago for the concentration camps. The entrainment of the troops is shown, as one of the intense scenes is the parting of husband and wife. Richard C. Travers and Lillian Drew play the leads, with Sydney Ainsworth in the role of the other man.

Scene from "My Country 'Tis of Thee" (Essanay).

COSTLY THRILL FOR "FRISCO."

An expenditure of close to $6,000 was necessary for a single scene showing an oil well explosion which will appear in "The Oil Field Plot," a coming episode of Kalem's "The Girl From Frisco" series. Director James Horne, in charge of the company, and his assistants spent two weeks in a search through the Taft, Sherman, Fullerton and LaBrea oil fields before they found at Bakersfield a well that was temporarily idle.

Much wire pulling and the placing of a bond covering the cost of erecting a new pumphouse and tower were then necessary before the scene could be taken. It was a gala day in Bakersfield and between the handling of the monster crowd and the staging of the explosion Director Horne had his hands full.

Four cameras were used to cover every angle of the scene. So well were the advance preparations handled that there was no damage to valuable nearby buildings, nor was a single accident reported.

Newspapers in California are already beginning to show unusual interest in Kalem's series featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman. Advance outlines of the stories and the publication of the first four episodes in the August issue of Short Stories Magazine have disclosed the fact that Robert Welles Ritchie has drawn from real incidents of California history for his plots.

"The Oil Field Plot" for which Director Horne staged his spectacular effect last week tells of the struggle some years ago by independent oil men against moneyed interests that were alleged to have the cooperation of certain railroads. "Tigers Unchained," the fourth episode, is founded on the famous "Folsom Prison Outbreak," occurring about a decade ago at the state penitentiary. "The Turquoise Mine Conspiracy," the second issue, pictures with fidelity a desert town from which the ever hopeful prospectors set forth on their endless search. The initial release, "The Fighting Heiress," issued August 9, treats of the well remembered conflict between the sheepherders and cattle rangers.

PIQUANT EPISODES FROM "LIFE."

Realizing the value of co-operation with the Gaumont company, the Life Company, publisher of the humorous periodical of the same name, has consented to the dramatization of some of the clever little episodes from its pages which appear under the general heading of "What Would You Do If—?" There are to be filmed as tabloid dramas and used to give greater variety to "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film. The first will appear on "Reel Life" No 15, released August 13. Miss Iva Shepard and "Budd" Ross are the leading players. In humorous fashion it puts up to spectators the question of what a young woman should do who had never been engaged and is suddenly wooed by a fascinating chap who seems irresistible. Just as the wedding ceremony is about to be performed guards from an insane asylum arrive and remove the groom. The second episode, attached to "Reel Life" No. 16, deals with the troubles of a fat young woman in keeping up her husband's interest. Miss Nan Evans is the featured player. These tabloids are being directed by Edwin Middleton. Among other players who have parts in these little plays are Miss Mary Cunningham, Miss Rose Ludwig and Jack Hopkins.

PRIVATE SHOWING OF "BEATRICE FAIRFAX."

A private view of "Beatrice Fairfax," the new moving picture serial of the International Film Service, Inc., will be given to exhibitors and the press in the Criterion theater, Broadway and Forty-fourth street, on next Tuesday, August 8, at 10:30 a. m. The first two episodes and the prologue of "Beatrice Fairfax" will be shown, as will also the current news reel and cartoons. A symphony orchestra will furnish the music.

GERALDINE O'BRIEN STARS IN GOLD ROOSTER PLAY

"A Woman's Fight," the Pathe Gold Rooster Release for August 20th, is one of those highly dramatic plays which appeals to every audience. It was produced by Popular Plays and Players under the personal supervision of Herbert Blache, and reflects credit upon Mr. Blache for the careful attention to details which has been given it.

Miss Geraldine O'Brien, the star, has previously appeared in a Gold Rooster play, Henry W. Savage's "Excuse Me," a five reel comedy which has been more than ordinarily successful from coast to coast. Miss O'Brien has for several years enjoyed a large following among patrons of the "legitimate." In "A Woman's Fight" her characterization of a working girl, naturally pure hearted and big souled, forced to go astray by reason of circumstances, is excellent. Nor does her art suffer when in the story she lifts herself out of the depths and as the wife of a wealthy clergyman assumes a different station in society. Thurlow Bergen plays the clergyman and is always convincing.

It is the opinion in the Pathe offices that this is one of the best of the Gold Rooster Plays.

COLONEL HEEZA LIAR PLAYS HAMLET.

The Paramount-Bray animated cartoon for the week of August 24 is from the pen of J. R. Bray. It tells a very funny and interesting story of Colonel Heeza Liar tripping lightly down from the Avenue, where he spies a "Help Wanted" sign on the side of a motion picture studio. While he stands reading the sign, knowing he wants a job and needs the money, he spies Mary Pickford, Mae Murray, Marguerite Clark, Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Vivian Martin, Charlie Chaplin and others of the larger satellites in the film industry walking into the studio. He realizes that if he can get a "reel" job with the real money he will be on Easy Street for the rest of his life.

The different stars show the Colonel some of their familiar stunts, and he, believing they have nothing on him, enters the office of the studio director, and by reciting a dramatic poem to the gentleman (who is in favor of his execution), signs a contract for $1,000,000 a week, to play the part of Hamlet.

At the rehearsal the Colonel plays opposite Mary Pickford and Charlie Chaplin and they get into a series of misadventures which end in their being fired from the studio. In the end the Colonel finds that he had a long, but sweet nightmare.

"MARRIED FOR REVENGE" (Universal).

There are certain incidents in "Married for Revenge" that no critical reviewer of moving pictures would approve of. For instance, we see in the picture reproduced herewith two so-called gentlemen throwing huckleberry pies at each other. Such conduct is reprehensible; it would not be tolerated for an instant in any Fifth avenue drawing room. It is simply not done. One instinctively feels that one should not do such things because of their impropriety.

Gale Henry, looking over William Franey's shoulder, heartily disapproves of her husband's conduct. Even the beautiful Lillian Peacock is astounded at the turn affairs have taken. She would not have it thus if such were possible. But then when one has "married for revenge" nothing should astound.

Scene from "Married for Revenge" (Universal).

The sub-title of "Married for Revenge" is "Two Old Chumps," and its application is at once apparent when one views the disheveled appearance of the two principals in the scene. William W. Farmer is responsible for the scenario of the story, and Allen Curtis directed the pie throwing and other scenes. Charles Conklin and Milburn Moranti should be mentioned in the same liquor-laden breath, for they share equally in the guilt of having foisted "Married for Revenge" upon an unsuspecting public.

"Married for Revenge" will be released on August 26.

"SAVING THE FAMILY NAME" (Bluebird).

The Smalleys contribute their sixth production to the Bluebird program September 11. "Saving the Family Name," prepared for the screen by Lois Weber, who based her scenario upon a story by Evelyn Heath. Beside assisting Miss Weber in the direction Phillips Smalley will play the principal male role. Mary MacLaren, the heroine of "Shoes," will be the featured person.

There are in the details mentioned above sufficient facts of importance to the exhibitor to make "Saving the Family Name" a feature that will warrant preparing for several weeks in advance. Lois Weber's vogue, established in her production of "Hypocrites," has been greatly enhanced by her consistently excellent contributions to the Bluebird series.

Mary MacLaren, who gained quick fame by her abrupt elevation to screen stardom from the obscurity of "playing maids," when she was discovered and directed by Lois Weber in "Shoes," carries a quite different role in "Saving the Family Name," and justifies the excellent judgment made manifest by Miss Weber in bringing her out as a leading woman.

With the preliminary introduction of "The Unattainable" featuring Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson, for the week embracing Labor Day, the Bluebird people practically start the theatrical season with "Saving the Family Name"—inaugurating, at least, a renewed effort to place their brand in the public eye, through their national campaign, and retaining vogue for the series by advancing carefully chosen subjects.

Phillips Smalley, as Miss MacLaren's leading man in "Saving the Family Name," makes his second appearance as a Bluebird actor. Jack Holt, Carl Von Schiller, Harry Depp and Miss Girrard Alexander will be among the principals in a large cast. Allen Seigler attended to the camera work, the photography being an important factor because of the nature of the story.

MARGUERITE CLARK AS "LITTLE LADY EILEEN."

"Little Lady Eileen," the girl who believes in fairies, the next starring vehicle of Marguerite Clark, is scheduled for release on the Paramount Program August 10 by the Famous Players. The keynote of the picture, which was directed by J. Searle Dawley, is the implicit faith which Eileen has in the fairies, though nobody else among her companions takes any stock in such nonsense. So strong is her faith that the little Irish lass she actually sees the fairies themselves, though her lover is blind to them and scoffs at her.

The romantic atmosphere of old Ireland and the delightful subject have given both the star and the director an almost unparalleled opportunity to give full rein to their respective abilities. Surely none could be better suited to a role of this kind than the diminutive Miss Clark, and the skill of Mr. Dawley in interweaving the real and the fantastic is too well known to need comment.

It was for this production that the folk-lore and tradition of old Ireland was exhaustively studied and much time was spent in the making of queer jaunting carts, old mule-drawn carriers, Irish railway coaches, and even papier-mache fairies, in the midst of which the tiny figure of Miss Clark is now lost and now looms gigantic.

Exceptionally clever work has been done in support of Miss Clark by Harry Lee as the old Irish cobbler, Vernon Steele, John L. Shine, Russell Bassett and Maggie Halloway Fisher.

LENORE ULRICH IN "THE CONFLICT."

Upon the completion of Lenore Ulrich's new photoplay vehicle for Pallas Pictures "The Intrigue," the popular little star will immediately begin work on her next subject, "The Conflict," a dramatic story by Julia Crawford Ivers. "The Intrigue," in which Miss Ulrich appears in the role of the beautiful Countess Sonia Varnli, a foreign spy, will shortly be ready for release on the Paramount program.

In "The Conflict" Miss Ulrich will appear as "Alona," the half-breed daughter of a wealthy white man. A romantic theme is evident in the story and it is expected that this will be brought out to particular advantage by the work of the star, together with the stirring moments of the play.

"The Conflict" will be staged under the chief supervision of Scott Sidney, who has just become affilated with the Pallas organization. Mr. Sidney was formerly with Ince and has a long list of successes to his credit. He will be ably assisted by Waldo Walker. Supporting Miss Ulrich is another exceptional cast, including Colin Chase, who appears opposite the star, Howard Davies, Adelaide Woods, Jack Stark, Gail Brooks, Joy Lewis and William Winter Jefferson. The camera work will be supervised by James Van Trees, who is responsible for much of the excellent photography evidenced in recent Pallas releases.

"REEL LIFE" MERITING PRAISE.

The Mutual Magazine in Film, "Reel Life," which is manufactured by the Gaumont company, is coming into some well merited praise from Mutual branch managers. It is the branch manager who is in close touch with the exhibitor, and it is extremely gratifying to the Gaumont company to find that these men are not only themselves enthusiastic over the new reel, but are able to report that exhibitors are equally as well pleased.

"We have received some very favorable comments," writes one manager, "and the picture is used in 'first run' houses." From another comes word that "we received nothing but the very best comments on 'Reel Life.' It is one of the most entertaining reels that can be a part of any program. The advertising campaign you are conducting is a good one, and we are quite sure will produce results."

As an instance of the entertaining qualities of this reel may be mentioned the leading picture series in "Reel Life" No. 16. This shows how water power is developed, throwing on the screen every method from the primitive water wheel which requires twenty-four hours in which to grind a bushel of corn to the stupendous electric power-houses which have hundreds of thousands of horsepower developed by water.

THE GERMAN FLEET IN THE NORTH SEA.

For the first time since the European conflict began the German fleet, bottled up in the North Sea, has been photographed for moving pictures. Nelson E. Edwards, staff photographer of the Hearst International News Pictorial, accomplished this apparently impossible task after eighteen months of effort.

Ever since the war started attempts have been made by moving picture concerns to secure films of the German fleet. To every request the German Government turned a deaf ear.

Edwards, however, won the confidence of the German chancellor, Von Bethmann-Holweg. The first concession he won was to visit Constantinople, where the Sultan of Turkey posed for him. That was last November.

Upon his return to Berlin, Edwards worked night and day to secure permission to photograph the fleet. Soon after the North Sea battle the chancellor consented to his going to Wilhelmshaven. He was given a permit to visit all the ships of the line, the first of its kind ever granted to a moving picture photographer.

Edwards hurried to Wilhelmshaven, where he was turned over to Admiral Von Scherr of the German navy. For three days he was the guest of the admiral aboard the Frederick Wilhelm der Grosse, making reel after reel of film of the German warships patroling the North Sea, constantly on the lookout for an opportunity to break through the apparent blockade of the British. All of the important ships of the German navy are shown and the pictures settle by actual visualization the disputed question of the fate of several of the warships that took part in the memorable dash for the open.

The pictures of the German fleet will be shown in installments as a part of the Hearst International News Pictorial.

TWO-REEL VOGUE COMEDIES.

The Mutual Film Corporation announces a new series of special feature comedies in two reels to be produced by Vogue Films, Inc. The new policy goes into effect within the next two weeks at the Los Angeles studio. To facilitate production Harry Kernan has been added to the staff of directors. Notable directors and players on the Vogue staff are Ben Turpin, acknowledged by Charlie Chaplin to be one of the few funny men of the screen; Rube Miller, director and star; Paddy McGuire, the "Bungling Bill," Gypsy Abbott, Madge Kirby, Lillian Hamilton and Arthur Travares.

NEW FACES IN "GLORIA'S ROMANCE."

A whole host of new characters are being introduced into the latest chapters of the George Kleine motion picture novel "Gloria's Romance," and every one of these new roles is being interpreted by a real star, so that even in the matter of the "bits" the high standard of the supporting cast is being surrounded by a cast second to none which ever appeared on the screen.

One of the first of the new characters to make his appearance on the screen is a child. In chapter twelve of "Gloria's Romance" little six-year-old Maury Steuart first appears as Staas Casinur, the son of a down and out waiter. Little Maury is a great deal more than one-fifth of the Five Steuarts, and is famous wherever players congregate. His talent for emotional acting is so evident that he has already appeared in support of such stars as Ethel Barrymore, Mabel Taliaferro, Mrs. Fiske, Holbrook Blinn, Thomas Jefferson and Nat Goodwin. And now it is Billie Burke he is aiding and he thinks Billie just about the finest lady he ever met. Maury, like so many other screen children, was "discovered" and first introduced to the studios by David W. Griffith, but every one who has followed his career agrees that in "Gloria's Romance" he is doing better work than ever before.

The next character to make his appearance is "Choey" McFadden, proprietor of a Bowery dance hall. And exhibitors will instantly recognize in the smiling features of this good natured "sport" an old friend—for it is none other than Rapley Holmes. The same Rapley Holmes that used to star in Fables in Slang as made by Essanay, that was known even before that as the sheriff in "The Roundup" on the speaking stage, and that will always be remembered as the husband of Gerda Holmes, one of Equitable's stars.

Next to appear is "The Hag"—a drunken, bleary-eyed, bedraggled habitue of McFadden's Bowery dance hall. In real life "The Hag" is Adelaide Hastings and by her creation of this role Miss Hastings has risen to real fame, for engagements galore have been offered her as a result of her splendid character work in this "bit." In real life she is a most refined and cultured young lady, but as "The Hag" she is all that the name implies. Miss Hastings alleges that it took her more than five years to accumulate the rags she wears in Chapter 13 of "Gloria's Romance," and the hat alone is a classic.

"THE GIRL OF LOST LAKE" (Bluebird).

Lynn F. Reynolds has written and produced a rustic drama, rugged and forceful, without a crime committed or an injustice recorded. The "punch" so eagerly sought by the exhibitors to whet the appetites of their sensation-loving clientel will be found in the strength of the completed story.

Those who go to pictures for natural and logical entertainment will be highly edified in the fine acting Myrtle Gonzalez, Fred Church and Val Paul contribute, backed by such excellent players as George Hernández, Bertram Grassby, Ruby Cox, Jack Connelly, Jack Curtis, Bobby Mack and Mary Du Cello.

Lost Lake is an actuality, situated high among the Sierras—but the romance is only partly legandary to the location. Giant trees beautify the scenes; great peaks and fine glimpses of mountain grandeur set the rugged and rustic forcefulness of the characters very happily in fitting surroundings.

One of the sensational features is the photographic "shot" of a struggle and fall from terrifying heights of two men locked in pitiless struggle for life—and the fact that they both tumble into eternity clears the way for the happier ending of the story.

Nearly two weeks were spent in the Sierras by the Bluebird company, and the realistic locations provided by nature for the the proper framing of the narrative will be one of the conspicuous features of the production. There are comparatively few interiors, most of the action taking place in what the robust writers call "God's great out-of-doors."

"MABELLE OF THE PICTURES" (Universal).

A one-reel drama, featuring Peggy Coudray and Director William V. Mong, is being produced by Mr. Mong at Universal City, entitled "Mabelle of the Pictures." It is a story of a motion picture actress who is not believed in her home town to be a good girl because she is required to wear ballet costumes before the camera.

"THE POWER OF MIND" (Mutual).

The much-mooted question of whether criminal tendencies can be inherited or whether they are developed by environment has been worked into an unusually interesting three-part drama which will be released August 10 by the Mutual Film Corporation, under the title of "The Power of Mind."

Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne, two American-Mutual players who enjoy a wide reputation with the picture theater-going public, are the featured players in this production, written by Anthony Coldeway and staged by Thomas Ricketts.

This unusual film drama treats of the influence of a master criminal on the mind of his young and beautiful daughter, who believes she has inherited the criminal instincts of her parent.

known to the police as a master criminal. Her anxiety is removed, however, when for the first time she learns that she is not the daughter of the man she supposed to be her father, but of an honest business man.

Mr. Coxen has been cast for the role of a young physician, whose love for the young girl prompts him to make an investigation into her past which reveals her true identity. George Gebhart, Charles Newton and George Field are included in the big company of players appearing in support of the co-stars.

"THE GERM OF MYSTERY" (Selig).

"The Germ of Mystery," released Monday, Aug. 14th, through General Film service, is another of those exceptional feature picture plays in three reels, being released regularly by the Selig Company.

The drama was produced by William Robert Daly from the story by L. V. Jefferson and among the Selig stars to be exploited can be named Guy Oliver, Fritzi Brunette, Frank Clarke and Lillian Hayward.

How Dr. Comstock, a specialist on poisons, is charged with a mysterious crime of which he is innocent and how Letitia, his sweetheart, finally saves him from prison and fastens the guilt upon another, are but circumstances in a detective story filled with exciting situations and gripping climaxes. A poisonous spider figures in the action.

There is clean-cut photography and wealth of beautiful scenic effects.

"THE CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY" (Consolidated).

The first episode of "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the sixteen episode serial produced by the Erbograph Company and presented by the Consolidated Film Corporation, through the Metro Exchanges, will be released the latter part of August, according to announcement from the Consolidated offices.

By far the most sensational, exciting, smashing serial photoplay yet produced, "The Crimson Stain Mystery," "shows the stuff it is made of" in the first episode. It starts off with a rush like a whirlwind and the action continues at top speed until the end.

Due to the ability of Ludwig G. B. Erb, the first episode shows a sample of some of the latest improvements in motion picture photography. One of these is the showing of the crimson stain in the arch-fiend's eyes from which the serial gets its name. How this was accomplished is Mr. Erb's secret, but the fact remains that it is there.

The leading characters in "The Crimson Stain Mystery" are interpreted by Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin. Mr. Costello's reputation as a matinee idol and a screen favorite is too well known to require extensive comment here. The adorable Ethel Grandin's appearance in "The Crimson Stain Mystery" marks her debut in a photoplay serial. The role assigned her gives her unlimited oportunities for the display of her wonderful talent, and judging from the first episode Miss Grandin takes full advantage of her role.

The story was written by Albert Payson Terhune, the master writer of big full-of-action smashing stories.

"The Crimson Stain Mystery" is a story of a modern Frankenstein. Doctor Burton Montrose, a famous scientist, discovers a biological element which he believes will improve the mental faculties of the human race. Tested in secret upon a few human subjects the discovery reacts making of them relentless and cruel murderers.

The entire story is replete with situations of the hair-raising, heart-pounding variety such as only Albert Payson Terhune can originate. The direction is in the able hands of T. Hayes Hunter.

WILBUR'S LAST HORSLEY PICTURE.

With the presentation of the Centaur feature, "The Spite Husband," released on the Mutual program the week of August 26, Crane Wilbur, star and author, makes his last appearance in a David Horsley production of the two-reel length, to return to masterpictures in five reels, the first of which will be a gigantic military offering entitled "The Painted Lie."

"The Spite Husband" is an unique drama with Mr. Wilbur at his best in the characterization of a fisherman artist. Mae Gaston, as an eccentric heiress is the principal support of the star, and others in the cast are Jessie Burnett, Ida Lewis, Harrish Ingraham and Claude Mortonson. The story was filmed under the direction of Robert B. Broadwell.

Trade News of the Week

GATHERED BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS

St. Louis Not a Slow Town, Says Giebler

World Correspondent Insists Big Missouri City Cuts Up Just as Other Towns Do and That It Has Bright Lights, Too—He Points to Delmar Avenue and Its Airdomes to Prove It.

By A. H. Giebler, 236 Vanol Building, St. Louis.

WHEN we dropped our nickel into the coin box of a Delmar avenue car we told the conductor we wanted to be unloaded at the Broadway and Forty-second street of St. Louis. Of course we know this little old town like a book, but we wanted to see if the conductor knew, and he did. "I gottcha," he said. "Get off where you see the line of automobiles after we turn into Delmar from Taylor avenue, and walk west."

St. Louis is a peculiar city. Its bright light and night life district—its Broadway, its downtown—is not downtown at all, but 'way out west, forty-five blocks from Broadway. That is the reason so many people passing through gain the idea that we are a slow town and have no high life and high jinks and general cutting up such as other towns have. It is because they do not see it unless they charter a gasoline boat and go west.

Delmar avenue from Taylor to Kings Highway is a beehive of well dressed people, in automobiles and taxicabs, and on foot. There is a confusing mass of electric lighted information about laundries, tires, dyeing and cleaning establishments, and the virtue of summer underwear overhead, but it's an attractive place, there are lots of people there at night, and where there are lots of people it is always good for picture shows, and Delmar avenue boasts some of the finest outdoor theaters in the country.

We firmly intended and fondly believed that we would give this neighborhood a brief inspection and then take a hegira down on the south side, but we didn't figure on the dulcet tones of Dave Silverman's ten-piece orchestra at the Lyric Skydome, or the comfort of the armchairs on the balcony at the Mozart Garden, or the suave politeness of Owner Stromberg and Manager Mayberry of the Delmar Airdome, and the bear fight we saw out at the Crystal Feature Dome. In fact, we had to do some lively stepping to get through with the outdoor places in this delectable neighborhood by closing time.

The Lyric Skydome is one of the show places of the city. It stands on the corner of Delmar and Taylor avenues. It was at one time called the Bonita, but when the late John W. Cornelius took the place over it was remade and renamed. The place is a wide, roomy garden, with flowers and shrubbery and gravel walks. First run Paramount pictures are shown. Rita Jolivet in "An International Marriage" was the bill, and together with Silverman's orchestra offered splendid entertainment to the large audience that filled the place and found comfort in the cool walks. Mrs. Cornelius and her son, James, are always to be found in personal attendance at the Skydome, and the excellence of their management has caused the place to be one of the most talked-of outdoor picture shows in St. Louis. The Lyric Skydome is just on the edge of things on Delmar avenue, and we really didn't get into the thick of the crowd till we arrived at the Mozart, on the corner of Bayard avenue.

At this beautiful place, the Mozart, all the decorations have not been put on the inside; the space between the pavement on Delmar avenue and the wall of the garden is full of trees and shrubbery, and two beautiful life-sized marble maidens peep through the branches of the Carolina poplars and light the way with big electric balls suspended on chains hanging from their outstretched arms. Inside, the garden is laid out with patches of lawn, here and there heart-shaped beds of flowers, and fountains.

A feature of the Mozart is the balcony, with one hundred arm chairs. This balcony is built in rustic fashion, with a latticed roof, and gives the occupants of the chairs a nice view of the screen and a chance to catch every vagrant breeze that blows. Milton Pasmezoglu is the manager. "The Tarantula," with Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno, was the bill at the Mozart, and a patron, as he left the place, came right up and butted into our conversation with Mr. Pasmezoglu to say that: "The 'Tarantula' is one of the best pictures I ever saw."

We crossed the street diagonally from the Mozart and counted the dazzling lights that adorn the top of the wall which shuts the public gaze from the pictures of the new Delmar Airdome.

This fine place, which seats 2,000 persons, is right next door to the theater, and the audience enters the lobby of the theater and buys tickets at the box office, then passes into the garden at the left.

We hobnobbed a while with Ben T. Stromberg, the millionaire trunk maker, who went into the amusement business to amuse himself, and has made as big a success of it as he did of luggage making. Mr. Stromberg is a most affable gentleman, with high ideals about moving pictures.

C. E. Mayberry, an oldtimer in the regular theatrical line, and with five or six years of successful film exhibiting record behind him, is manager for Mr. Stromberg. First run Fox and Metro pictures are used at the Delmar, with Universal short features.

On the way to the gate we stopped at the box office, not to buy a ticket, but to renew our acquaintance with the smiling young woman who dispenses pasteboard admissions to the garden with a patent ticket seller that hands you a ticket and your change all at the same time, and she gave us our choice of the top layer of a big box of chocolates. We solaced our sweet tooth with a little sweetmeat that had figs inside.

The Delmar is raised from the street and is delightfully cool. Near the entrance is one of the most ornamental fountains we ever saw, a pool with the water and spray lighted with red and green lights, and the oval of the reservoir ornamented with eight urns, each filled with growing plants and vines, while in the middle is a beautifully sculptured lady, holding another receptacle with other plants. The Delmar was well filled and the crowd laughing at a Universal comedy when we left.

After this we mounted a street car and traveled out to the Crystal Feature Dome, managed by C. B. Belknap. The Crystal is a fine big place at 5946 Delmar. Valeska Suratt in "The Immigrant" had just been screened when we arrived and a comedy with a man and a bear fighting was making the audience hold its sides with laughter. If they enjoyed the other part of the bill as much as they enjoyed the bear fight they had no kick coming.

* * *

Across the street we dropped into the Unique Photodome, opened some time ago by the management of the Pageant theater, just next door, but has been under the management of W. L. Rowley since July 25. Mr. Rowley is the maker of the Goldenlite screens, and one of his screens was in use at the time. It reflected a sharp and clear picture, and no distortion was noticeable at any angle of observation. The Photodome seats 750, and was packed with an appreciative audience. Gail Kane in "The Labyrinth" was the big part of the bill.

Memphis Has First Outing

Managers King and Brown Eeing Congratulated on Successful Affair.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—The General Film Company, the Mutual, and the United recently got together and arranged an attractive outing, which was held at Lake View, Miss., for the benefit of all the employees of the three offices. A total of about sixty persons, including relatives and friends, were present.

The day was ideal and the crowd reached the picnic grounds early in the morning. A big dinner was served shortly after noon, after which everyone went over to the lake, where fishing, swimming, rowing, etc., were indulged in. Manager B. King, of the General's office, and Manager Brown, of the Mutual office, finally talked one another into an endurance swimming contest, which was incidentally won with ease by Brown.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon, teams representing the Mutual and General offices crossed bats in an interesting, if not scientific game of baseball, which went to a 12 to 12 tie at the end of seven innings, when the players tired of the national pastime.

Following the ball game the crowd rushed the big dining table in the open and saw to it that there was nothing left in the way of eats to be carried back to the city. Everyone was ravenously hungry after the water sports and the ball game.

The day proved to be one of the biggest that the film people had had in years, and the crowd upon its return was very enthusiastic, although tired.

Managers King and Brown, who jointly engineered the trip, were so pleased with its success that they are somewhat puffed up, and have decided that in the future the picnic will be an annual affair. Both men are of the opinion that such outings are good things not only for the employees, but for the executives, who as a rule are badly in need of good outdoor exercise.

Soldiers See Johnson-Willard Fight Films

Canadian Military Authorities Accept Them as a Factor in the Athletic Training of Kitchener's Army—Jesse L. Lasky Passes Through Ontario—Toronto's Strand Licks the Hot Weather Jinx With Novel Program.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street, Toronto.

CAMP BORDEN, ONTARIO.—The famed Johnson-Willard fight pictures have been adopted by the Canadian military authorities at Camp Borden for training purposes and nearly every one of the 30,000 soldiers encamped here has witnessed the Havana views the past two weeks. An attempt was made last fall to exhibit the six fight reels publicly in Ontario, but the films were condemned by the Ontario Board of Censors, and the Provincial Government also refused to change the decision of the censor board.

Upon the opening of Camp Borden and the adoption of the art of boxing as a part of the syllabus of training for Canadian overseas soldiers, the Johnson-Willard pictures were brought to the camp and were screened for the benefit of the headquarters staff. A few days later the films were screened for the benefit of Lieutenant Colonel Mayes, Director of Physical Training for the Canadian Expeditionary Force, who is a returned officer, and Lieutenant Colonel George H. Williams, senior chaplain for the Toronto Military District. In every case the officers formally approved of the plan to exhibit the reels to the soldiers as an encouragement to them to take up boxing exercises. The films were screened under the personal direction of Captain T. C. Flanagan of Toronto, who was ringside manager for Jack Johnson at the time of the heavyweight battle. Incidentally, Captain Flanagan is now one of the district staff officers.

Canadian newspapers featured the comments of various officers with regard to the fight films, and particular attention was paid to the opinion of Colonel Williams, a former minister, who looks after the social life of the training soldiers. "The pictures show a clean exhibition," declared the senior chaplain. "I have seen far more bloody fisticuff matches on the streets of London, while I have seen rougher play in many lacrosse and football games. The pictures are not objectionable, but I would not approve of their promiscuous showing to the general public."

In reference to the Johnson-Willard films, Colonel Mayes, the Director of Physical Training, declared the British Empire owed a great deal to the fact that Britishers had learned to be handy with their fists. "I only hope that boxing will return to a high level of recognition after the war," he said, as he officially accepted the films as a more or less spectacular feature of the military training for the soldiers in camp.

The views were exhibited under the direction of Captain Flanagan in the recreation park of Camp Borden, a small entrance fee being charged for admission. The men became wildly enthusiastic about the privilege of seeing the much-discussed films. No attempt has been made, however, to give public performances at which the films in question were to be a feature.

Jesse Lasky Visits Toronto.

Toronto.—Toronto was recently visited by Jesse L. Lasky, who was on his way from New York to Lake Nipigon, in Northern Ontario, for a week or two of fishing. Mr. Lasky declared his company had made no definite arrangements for the establishment of a branch studio in Canada. "Should I see a desirable spot in Ontario for the producing of photoplays," said Mr. Lasky, "my concern may establish a branch in Canada." While visiting the military camp at Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario, Mr. Lasky arranged for the taking of a series of pictures which will find early release.

Strand Defies Summer Weather.

Toronto.—In an effort to maintain good attendance during the recent spell of torrid weather, Manager Marvin of the Strand theater, arranged a special review of a dozen or more popular features for the week of July 20. The program was changed each day and on each was a Chaplin subject and a Pickford feature. The first of the Pathe "Who's Guilty?" series was screened during this week, while extra attractions consisted of "Tillie's Tomato Surprice," "Heights of Hazard," "The Dust of Egypt," "The Juggernaut," and "The Heart of a Painted Woman." The outlay for the week's films was not inconsiderable, but the plan proved highly successful, as good crowds turned out to see the returned and new engagements.

Take Aeroplane Views of Toronto.

Toronto.—The City of Toronto was filmed from the sky by a moving picture cameraman for the first time last week, when a photographer representing the Strand theater, Toronto, took views of the city from a Curtiss military aeroplane, which flew from the aviation camp at Long Branch, a suburb of Toronto.

Sawyer New President of Standard.

Toronto.—A. H. Sawyer, Toronto, formerly manager of Starfilms, Limited, Toronto, distributors of Metro features in Canada, has received the appointment of president and general manager of the Standard Film Service, Limited, a new Canadian film corporation, which will look after Metro interests in the Dominion in future. The previous company, Starfilms, Limited, was placed in the hands of receivers last spring.

Two Theaters Raise Salaries.

Hamilton.—Canadian Theaters, Ltd., the corporation which controls two of the largest theaters here, the Lyric and Temple, has announced an increase in wages for all employees of these houses, amounting to a raise of $4 per week for each person. The Lyric has been showing photoplays exclusively for several years.

Edel of Buffalo Goes to New York's Strand

Shift of Manager of Bison City's Strand Marks Change of Policy—Management of Big Metropolitan Showhouse to Separate Responsibility in Business Administration, Film Selection and Musical Staging.

By Joseph McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo.

BUFFALO.—The following interesting statement was given out at the Buffalo offices of the Mark-Strand Theater Company: "The business of the Strand theater, New York, has grown to such proportions that it is no longer possible for one man to handle the entire proposition, which embraces the business administration of the theater, selection of films and the staging of musical numbers."

In connection with the foregoing the Mark-Strand Company also gave your correspondent the information that B. A. Rolfe, who has had entire charge of all departments of the Strand, New York, will confine himself, for the present, to the staging of pictures and musical acts at that theater.

Harold Edel, manager of the Strand theater, Buffalo, has been promoted to the management of certain departments at the Strand theater, New York City. His jurisdiction will cover the selection of films and the business administration of the theater.

Carl Edouarde, the popular leader of the orchestra of the Strand, New York, has been granted a two-weeks' leave of absence for a well-deserved rest. With the exception of three or four days, he has been at his post daily ever since the opening of the institution. Ward Johnston will temporarily fill Mr. Edouarde's place.

Earl Crab of Chicago has succeeded Mr. Edel as manager of the Strand, Buffalo.

Harold Edel's original, aggressive methods at the Buffalo theater have been copied in many parts of the country. He has proved himself a master of showmanship and an adept in the selection of films of the highest standard. His beautiful lobby and stage effects, his courteous staff, his charming musical programs by an augmented orchestra and his artistic billboard announcements of current and coming programs have attracted wide attention. Mr. Edel is a Southern college man. His promotion will be noted with pleasure by his Buffalo friends.

Murphy to Book for Sherry.

R. T. Murphy has been appointed booker of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company here. S. J. Stoughton, general sales manager of the company, was a recent caller at this exchange.

They Just Can't Stay Away After That.

Robert W. Nelson has purchased the Bijou theater, Corning, from Samuel Clark, and is now personally conducting the house. Moving pictures and musical comedies are being featured. The following is an excerpt from a strong announcement which Mr. Nelson has just made to his patrons: "The public can rest assured that the rifraf that was objectionable will be entirely barred from this theater."

Bring Action for Delayed Films.

On account of an alleged failure of the Wells-Fargo Express Company to deliver films to the Princess theater, Corning, in time for use, a damage action has been brought against the company.

Popular Takes Wilcox Serial.

H. M. Warner of the New Film Corporation, who is touring the country in the interests of the Ella Wheeler Wilcox Serial, was a recent caller in Buffalo. He placed the New York State rights on this feature with the Popular Film Exchange of this city.

No Changes Follow Universal Purchase.

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal Exchanges, visited Buffalo last week, following the Universal's purchases of the Powers exchanges. A. A. Schmidt continues as district manager and F. S. Hopkins as local manager of the Universal Exchange here.

The Lyric and Family theaters, Buffalo, managed by Harold B. Franklin, are being renovated and redecorated. The latest projection will be installed at the Family.

Despite the extreme heat, Bruce Fowler, manager of the Olympic theater, is keeping his house open with good results. The place is cool and well located and is a favorite place for shoppers .

Not All Summer Dullness Due to Weather

Cutting Off of Fans or Stopping Ventilating Appliances in Case of Smaller Houses or Near End of Show Injurious to Business—New Fire Regulations—Notes from Louisville and Kentucky.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Starks Building, Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—While complaints are generally heard from exhibitors to the effect that summer business is dull, it is conclusively shown in some instances in Louisville that the exhibitors are not doing very much to improve summer business. Not only are some outskirt houses, but also some of the downtown theaters, are guilty of the penny wise and pound foolish idea that money is to be saved by cutting off electric fans, ventilating machinery, etc., when the house is half full, or toward the end of the last run. Two cases have been reported in connection with leading houses during the past few days. In one case the temperature and air were good between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon even with a well-filled house. About 5:30 the house was nearly empty, and to save a few pennies the management cut off the fans and ventilating equipment with the result that with a temperature of nearly a hundred outside the late-hour patrons of the afternoon run were forced to endure considerable discomfort. Another case was where a theater was beginning to get empty along about 10 o'clock in the evening. The fans and ventilation were cut off, and in addition employes went around and closed up all of the outside doors, leaving the house in anything but a pleasant condition for patrons. There is really no adequate excuse for closing doors or cutting off ventilation until the last patron is out of the theater and the good-night sign flashed. In some cases the fault is due to employes who are in a rush to leave the building the moment the last patron is out instead of staying an additional ten minutes in properly closing up and shutting off machinery. In order to get the elusive dime in hot weather the exhibtor can't afford to take such chances unless he wishes to see his house looking deserted from June until September.

Civic Movement Aided by Exhibitors.

Louisville.—Louisville exhibitors came to bat in great fashion in aiding the Louisville Board of Trade in its effort to finance the Louisville Industrial Foundation, a million dollar organization, which has as its object the advancement of Louisville's industrial interests. During a campaign lasting nine days Louisville business houses and individuals oversubscribed the million dollar fund by over $10,000. The moving picture exhibitors were quick to see that additional factories would mean more business, and nearly all of the leading moving picture concerns, including the Majestic Amusement Company, the Fourth Avenue and the S. & P., subscribed for one or more of the $100 shares.

Shelbyville Exhibitor Dead.

Shelbyville.—The body of R. M. Brown, owner and operator of Brown's opera house, was brought to this city for burial following his death at Hendersonville, N. C. Mr. Brown suffered an attack of double pneumonia in February, and in March went to North Carolina to recover his health. It was thought that he was getting along nicely until news was received of his death. Mr. Brown was 49 years old, and a native of Kentucky. Six years ago he disposed of most of his business interests in order to enter the moving picture business, opening the old Music Hall. Mr. Brown proved himself such an able manager that several concerns made a failure in efforts to start opposition houses in Shelbyville. He is survived by a son, Verton Brown, one brother and three sisters.

Fire Marshal Announces Regulations.

Louisville.—T. B. Pannell, the new state fire marshal of Kentucky, has announced a number of regulations for the prevention of fire. A public hearing was given on July 27 at Frankfort for the purpose of allowing those affected by the regulations to appear and make any protests which might be felt necessary. In these regulations are a number of sections relative to the equipment and operation of moving picture theaters. No protests being filed, it is understood that the regulations will be put in effect immediately. It is said that these regulations will have little if any effect on the first class theaters, which are properly conducted and operated, but will probably cause small country houses to make numerous changes.

Senators Hearing From Exhibitors.

Louisville.—A report from Washington is to the effect that Senators James and Beckham of Kentucky are receiving numerous protests from Kentucky exhibitors protesting against the proposed tax on moving picture theaters included in the pending revenue bill. It has been learned that the moving picture organizations of the state have also protested against the tax, alleging that many theaters will be put out of business. It is pointed out that it has been very hard to operate a five-cent theater profitably, and that not only the five-cent theater but the ten-cent house will be forced to increase the price of admission to cover any further taxation, thereby depriving many pood people of the enjoyment to be derived from the picture shows.

Louisville News Notes.

An automobile belonging to Charles Koch, manager of the Rex theater, was almost totally destroyed by fire a few days ago as the result of a leaky gasoline tank.

Joe Goldberg, manager of the Hippodrome theater, second and Market streets, with the aid of employes of the house, overpowered and held a heat-crazed man until the police arrived.

Simon Switow, nephew of M. Switow, of the Switow Amusement Company, has taken over the active management of the Crystal theater, one of the oldest of the five-cent houses.

A. C. Farrel, manager of the Louisville office of the Central Film Service Company, has arranged to make several showings of the first episode of the new forty-reel serial "Liberty," which he expects to receive shortly. J. R. Schnitzer, of the Indianapolis office, will be in Louisville to aid in making the display.

The Palace, a new negro theater at the corner of Eleventh and Walnut streets, the first negro house in Louisville built for theatrical purposes alone, will be ready to open inside of a few days. The management has announced that it will show "first run" Triangle, World, Lubin, Pathe, Mutual, Metro and Bluebird films.

Around the Blue Grass State.

New Castle.—The I. O. O. F., which has been operating the New Castle theater for some time, has closed the little picture house, as it was unable to meet expenses during the summer months. It may be reopened in the fall.

Eminence.—The management of the Eminence theater is very much pleased with the results of its efforts to keep the public cool during the summer. Early in the season business dropped off considerably, but a large exhaust fan was installed, and on the first night the "S. R. O." sign was hung out.

Campbellsville.—The new Star theater opened with its first performance on Saturday, July 29, to a full house. The old theater was recently closed, and the city was without pictures until the new house was completed.

Fort Thomas.—An open air moving picture show has been installed in the camp of the Second Kentucky Regiment, National Guards, which have been quarantined on account of smallpox. The regimental chaplain, Hugh Leith, of Covington, has had charge of the show, which was set up in a ravine, the screen being placed at the bottom, and the machine on the side of a hill.

Owensboro.—The management of the Queen theater closed the house on the afternoon of July 25, "Booster Day," at the ball park. Almost the entire business section of the city closed a half day in order to see a double header between the Owensboro and Dawson Springs teams of the Kitty League.

Auburn.—T. J. Vick is having a new moving picture theater erected by C. A. Waddle, and expects to get possession shortly. The theater will have an attractive front, a stage and dressing rooms, comfortable opera chairs, and two of the latest type machines. The building is something over 100 feet in length, and an exceptionally good house for a small town.

Sunday Showing Had Never Occurred to Him

When Roadman Foland of Kansas City Pathe Exchange Suggested the Idea to Small Missouri Town Cobbler-Exhibitor He Acquiesced Readily—Missourian Amazed at Sight of a Film Man.

By Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY.—The curiosity of many exhibitors in small towns as to what a film salesman looks like has been gratified the past few months by J. E. Foland, of the Pathe exchange, Kansas City. Incidentally, Mr. Foland is gratifying the curiosity of Manager Edwards as to where anybody could find more business.

Mr. Foland has made a still hunt for villages recently. Many of them he had to reach by long automobile rides. One week he made three towns, one of which was 12, one 14 and one 16 miles from the railroad. The largest had a population of 300. Each had a moving picture theater. And in each Mr. Foland was most heartily welcomed—and did business. In fact, that week he booked business in nine new towns; the previous week in five and the week before that in seven.

An example of the chances awaiting the fellow who can endure the travel of reaching these towns occurred in a village of Missoui. The owner of the theater is a cobbler. He was amazed at the sight of a film man. And he talked of his town and his business. Casually he mentioned that the town was well filled with people on Sundays.

"Why don't you get some of that business, then?" Mr. Foland asked.

He'd never thought of it. But he acquiesced readily when the suggestion was made to run a Sunday show, with "The Life of Our Saviour" to attract the churchgoing people.

Vancouver Citizen Objects to News Weeklies

Rushes Into Print With His Denunciation of Things American, With the Result That English Topicals are Substituted—Half Holiday Hits Vancouver Theaters—Romaine Fielding in Manitoba—West Canada News.

By E. R. Thomas, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—A hectic protest against the showing of American news weeklies in local moving picture theaters has just been made by a reader of one of the Vancouver papers, who rushes into print to revive the old agitation against American pictures and scenes. In his letter the outraged citizen complains that at a local theater on a recent evening, "the American flag was before us all the time —American soldiers and American school girls, and American sports, and American civic achievements." And adds that he will not attend again except as a member of a rotten egg brigade.

"The whole British Empire," he continues, "is palpitating with the greatest events in its history; official America is writing notes, and yet in a city that is being drained of its best lifeblood for a magnificent enthusiasm there is not a hint on the popular news screen to remind us of our hopes or sacrifices or national existence.

"I sat there and asked myself why we stood it, and the irritating answer came: Because we are too proud to fight the purveyors of our light entertainments, and there is no official person in the town who has energy enough to look after our interests. I believe the pictures we get are the easiest and cheapest to be got, and that this easiest way of making money is largely in the hands of Americans who do not care thirty cents about the travail and achievements of the British Empire."

Although it is realized a great part of this letter was written out of a vast ignorance of the subject, and the remainder out of a rabid anti-American feeling that is not shared by the majority of Vancouver theatergoers, the publication of the note has had the effect of practically stopping the exhibition of American news weeklies, and the substitution of English topicals.

Half Holiday Hits Theaters.

Vancouver.—Some complaint is being voiced by local exhibitors regarding the change in their business which has come about through the Saturday half-holiday law, which has just gone into effect here. This law requires all stores to close at one o'clock on Saturday afternoons, and as a result, there are vastly fewer people on the streets downtown on Saturday evenings. This has materially cut the attendance at some of the Vancouver houses, and the loss is not compensated for by a corresponding increase on Friday nights, when the stores are open until 9.30. It is pointed out that while under former conditions large crowds came downtown on Saturday evenings to do the week's shopping, and then to go to a theater, those who now come to do their marketing on Friday evenings naturally hurry home after this is accomplished, as they must be at work again on the following morning.

Hazza of Edmonton on Tour.

Vancouver.—John Hazza, leading exhibitor of Edmonton, Alberta, was a recent visitor to this city, in the course of a tour of the principal cities of the Northwest. This is Mr. Hazza's first visit to the coast, and his present trip will include Seattle, Portland and Victoria.

He reports business fairly satisfactory in Edmonton at present, and speaks in glowing terms of the eminently sensible standards set up by the Alberta moving picture censor. No trouble at all, states Mr. Hazza, is experienced in this direction. He also informed the World representative that the new Alberta ticket tax law has made no appreciable difference in attendance, and that the new arrangement is working quite satisfactorily. It is thought the government will soon change the regulations so as to allow the tax tickets to be dropped in the choppers along with the regular admission tickets, and thus save the trouble and inconvenience which has been noted in connection with the boxes supplied by the authorities.

With two Triangle productions and one Fox feature each week, Mr. Hazza opines that he is igiving a show that is not excelled by any theater in western Canada.

Railway Taking Scenics.

Vancouver.—Photographers for the Canadian Pacific Railway have been active in this vicinity during the past few weeks, and recently made a trip up the North Arm of Burrard Inlet to Indian River, where pictures were taken of the Spray of Pearls Falls, to be included in the company's campaign films which will shortly be shown in the east. Various other scenes were also made in the neighborhood of Wigwam Inn.

In Winnipeg, the C. P. R. has just put out a film dealing with the great irrigation systems of southern Alberta, and this will be sent throughout the west, following the company's "safety first" picture, which is now making its way toward the coast.

Calgary Kiddies Need No Tax Ticket.

Calgary, Alberta.—Local exhibitors have been given tacit permission to admit children to matinee performances without the tax ticket required by law, and this fact has served to bring out a protest from Edmonton picture men, who are inquiring why this concession should have been made to Calgary exhibitors and not to those of Edmonton. It is stated that for a time they were not even aware of the ruling which had been made by the authorities, as no notification to this effect was ever sent to them.

Winnipeg Has Ten Cinderellas.

Winnipeg, Man.—Violet MacMillan, picture star, recently played an engagement at the Strand theater here, and attracted considerable attention through the exhibition of her exceedingly small slippers at the three stores of a local shoe firm. The Strand management offered a season's pass to any woman who could wear the shoes comfortably, and by the end of the week has given out ten of the tickets.

Romaine Fielding Sighted in Manitoba.

During the following week Romaine Fielding, former Lubin director and player, opens at the Pantages in a sketch, starting a tour of the western time embraced by this circuit.

West Canada Notes.

Cranbrook, B. C.—Baldwin Brothers, pioneer exhibitors of this city, are reopening their house here, using Paramount service. Theirs is the largest house in town.

Winnipeg, Man.—Jack Allen is now on the road out of the Winnipeg office of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd. Jack is very well known to the exhibitors, having been booker under Manager Ben Bloom for the past three years.

Calgary, Alberta.—Max Allen, manager of the Monarch theater in Edmonton, was in town recently, visiting H. J. Allen. Max Allen is receiving the congratulations of his friends on his coming marriage, which is to take place in the near future.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Globe theater, leading picture house of the National Amusement Company, has just cut its admission price to ten cents.

Peace River, Alberta.—A benefit was given recently at the Empire theater, in aid of the Irene Cottage Hospital.

Portland Fights for New Censor Ordinance

Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association Crystallizing Public Sentiment in Favor of Larger Board and Right of Appeal to Municipal Court—Proprietor McDonald Applauded by Ministers When He Defends Theater Men.

By Abraham Nelson.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The motion picture men in the city at the time of this writing are in the midst of a campaign for a new censorship ordinance. The Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association is going at it right this time and public interest is being crystallized in favor of the motion picture as it has never been before. The exhibitors have the support of every newspaper in the city and the Evening Telegram, which had heretofore intimated that it favors the kind of censorship Portland has at present, has come out boldly for the picture men in their campaign for an appeal.

Petitions are being circulated at the theaters and among the business houses of the city and there is no lack of signers. Showings are being made by the picture men relative to the investment represented by the motion picture industry in Portland, and many of the influential men have promised the organization their support when the matter comes before the commission. Exhibitors and exchange men are giving their own time to the circulation of petitions. These petitions are not calculated to have legal weight, however, and are to be used merely to show the Commissioners that the theatergoing public is with the theater men.

The ordinance the motion picture men are asking the Commissioners to pass provides for a censorship of pictures. It calls for a board of fifteen members in place of seven as is now the law and provides for an appeal to the municipal court from the decision of the board when exhibitors feel aggrieved thereby. The exhibitors are making their strongest point on this appeal feature.

In getting the sentiment of the people on the censorship issue in Portland, the picture men have learned that there is a large number of people who express themselves against all censorship of motion pictures, and it is believed that if the matter is put to a vote censorship in Portland can be done away with entirely. The petitions and the proposed ordinance will be put to the Commissioners at their next meeting.

Opens Sunday, Arrested.

Dallas, Ore.—O. C. Smith, who recently opened the Orpheum theater here, was arrested because he ran a Sunday show. The ordinance relative to the subject prevents the opening of theaters on Sunday nights, but permits them to run in the afternoon. Smith was arrested after the first show at night. Both sides have determined to make a test case out of the arrest. The Orpheum theater is known as one of the most up-to-date houses in the valley and is enjoying fine patronage.

McDonald Talks to Ministers.

Eugene, Ore.—At the international conference of the Oregon ministers held here recently, the censoring of motion pictures was one of the principal subjects coming up for discussion. Dr. J. H. Boyd stated that the reason for the existence of local censor boards is that producers are not making the elimination ordered by the National Board of Review. Commenting on

Court Denies Wichita Vote on Sunday Shows

Declares Such a Proceeding Illegal and Grants an Injunction Against Plebiscite, Chiefly on Ground of Insufficient Notice—City Commission Under Ministerial Pressure, Refuses to Repeal Prohibitory Ordinance.

By Kansas City News Service.

WICHITA, KAN.—After a tremendous tangle, in which the courts were finally called upon, the plan of the moving picture exhibitors of Wichita, Kan., to secure a vote on Sunday shows, was defeated. The court held that the election would be illegal, and granted an injunction against the taking of the vote.

The Wichita situation has become much heated in the past few weeks. Pressure had been brought to bear from Ministerial Alliance and numerous other sources, on the city commissioners, to offset the contention of the exhibitors that the people wanted Sunday picture shows. The commission refused to repeal the ordinance prohibiting shows on Sunday. The exhibitors circulated petitions for a popular vote on the repeal; and signature were easily secured. The formalities seemed to have been all completed with—but at the last minute, even after the ballots for the vote had been prepared, the contention was advanced by the opponents that the law's requirement of 30 days' notice of the proposed vote had not been met.

The commissioners were disposed to go ahead and order the election anyway, as by that means a public expression of opinion would be secured, on which they could base a repeal of the ordinance—or its continued enforcement. One commissioner was quoted as saying that he expected the vote to be three to one for the repeal. The election was to have been held on the day of the regular primaries, August 1; the moving picture men had agreed to pay all expenses—chiefly the printing of ballots. At the last minute injunction proceedings were brought to prevent the vote, and the court granted the injunction, chiefly on the ground of the insufficient notice to the voters.

It is likely that the vote will be taken at a special election, or at the regular election for city officers next April.

Dr. Boyd's remarks, Portland exhibitors have pointed out that the Portland censors have entirely disregarded the rulings of the national body and cited instances where the local censors passed up its instructions entirely and ordered other eliminations than those requested by it.

A. H. McDonald, proprietor of the Rex theater, ably championed the theater men's cause and received much applause from the ministers during the course of his address.

"The most effective censorship is in the hearts of the patrons," said the Rev. G. H. Parkinson, of this city.

New House for Centralia.

Centralia, Wash.—H. Downie opened the Rose theater July 28, the opening show being "New York." B. J. Sperry, Portland manager for Pathe, was in Centralia a few days before arranging the service. The Rose theater had been closed for some time, but Manager Downie has remodeled the house and had it in fine shape for the opening. A new Simplex machine furnishes the projection.

"Kirk" Has No Complaint.

Portland, Ore.—A. S. Kirkpatrick, road man for Mutual, returned recently from Southern Oregon and Klamath Falls country. He says he had a most enjoyable trip and it is surmised that he booked many new houses.

Pantages in Films.

Seattle, Wash.—Alex. Pantages, owner of a vaudeville circuit of that name on the Pacific Coast, has joined with Ike Rosenthal to exploit "Civilization" in this territory. Ike Rosenthal was formerly the head of the Sutton Feature Film Company here. The new corporation is known as the Western "Civilization" Company and controls seven states on the Pacific Coast.

Among the visitors at the exchanges were W. A. Crank, road man for Metro, out of Seattle; Lew Cullins, The Dalles, Oregon; A. H. McDonald, Eugene, Ore.; E. R. Saunders, Illwaco, Wash.

Screen Club Takes Quarters.

Kansas City.—The Screen Club of Kansas City has taken quarters at 15 West Tenth street, upstairs, where ample space is available for the various activities that the club plans. There will be a large ballroom, which can be used for the general meetings of the club also. Two lounging rooms will be provided, a billiard room, a committee room, and other facilities. The club is paying particular attention to the remodeling of the quarters, and will furnish them adequately. It is desired to make them attractive for the men connected with the film business in Kansas City and also to attract there the film men, the exhibitors and others, who come to Kansas City from the territory. The membership campaign is being prosecuted vigorously.

"Our Van" Drops In.

H. H. Van Loan, publicity director of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., was in Kansas City recently, calling on R. C. Cropper, manager at Kansas City of the Midwest territory. Mr. Van Loan was bound for Albuquerque, N. M., where he will write the newspaper version of the new serial, "Liberty." He was to meet there his wife and the young baby, who will join them from the coast where Miss Cameron, as Mrs. Van Loan is known professionally, has been engaged. While in Kansas City Mr. Van Loan met for the first time George Bowles, who has been attracting some attention with his publicity work for the Universal.

Cropper Raised to District Manager.

Kansas City's increasing importance in the film business is evidenced by the advancement of R. C. Cropper, manager of the Universal Film & Supply Company at Kansas City, to district manager for the Universal for the Midwest territory, including the Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Oklahoma City exchanges, and five branch exchanges of these centers. A feature of the new arrangement is that George Bowles, in charge of the publicity of the Universal at Kansas City, will oversee publicity service from such of the exchanges as have not now publicity departments. Mr. Bowles will send the novelty stuff which he has been issuing from Kansas City to the various exchanges for their use and will give such other help to the entire district as may be asked.

Tell Emrich It's His Treat.

Monthly social sessions are being arranged for the salesmen and department heads of the Bluebird and Universal exchanges at Kansas City. One was recently held at the Pennant cafe, attended by ten men, and was highly successful and much enjoyed. W. B. Emrich was the hero of this occasion, since what he charges as a "shenanigan" was worked on him to provide the funds therefor. He was arbitrarily charged $10 for the presentation of his picture in advertising space of a local publication, and the money applied on the banquet. The Kansas City exchange had recently won two prizes for greatest increase in business, and Mr. Emrich was informed that it was his treat as a result of this winning.

Visiting Exhibitors.

Among the visiting exhibitors in Kansas City recently were Dale Hill of the Iris, Wamego, Kan.; A. Blank of the Garden, Des Moines, Iowa; Jake Schlank of the Hippodrome, Omaha, Neb., and Joe Fox of the Holland, Wichita, Kan.

Nathanson Entertains Fire Laddies.

Topeka.—Leo Nathanson, owner of the Cozy theater, recently made the firemen of the city guests of his show when Charlie Chaplin in "The Fireman" was the feature of the program. This was good education for the apprentice firemen, as Charlie showed just what one ought not to do to put out a fire. Mr. Nathanson also granted the same courtesy to the night shift.

Start Campaign in Favor of "Human Music"

San Francisco Federationists Conducting Propaganda Against Automatic Instruments—Appeal to Public in Advertisements, Asking Support for Houses Employing Orchestras—Judge Defends Moving Pictures.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—The musicians of San Francisco, through their protective organization, which maintains headquarters on Haight street, in the same building in which the Motion Picture Operators' Union is located, have been engaged for several weeks in a campaign of education having for its object the doing away with automatic music in moving picture houses. Considerable advertising space has been used in the leading daily papers and an appeal has been made to both the general public and to exhibitors. A list of prominent houses where orchestras are utilized to furnish music has been published and picture lovers have been asked to patronize these in order to enjoy film productions to the fullest. Attention is called to the fact that all the great productions that have been presented here, such as "Cabiria," "The Clansman" and "Ramona," have had the accompaniment of human music, and much of their success is attributed to this fact. The public is asked not to be deceived by stories of expense, the assertion being made that any house that can buy an automatic, and keep it in repair, can afford to have musicians.

Without doubt this movement toward better music in moving picture houses is being felt, but whether automatic instruments will give away to hand-played music remains to be seen. There are now more orchestras in local moving picture houses than ever before, but this is due largely to the increased number of large houses. Many of the old style automatic pianos and orchestrions are being discarded and splendid instruments, requiring a skilled operator, are taking their places. Many exhibitors do not believe that the use of these will be done away with, except in some of the large houses, but the musicians say they plan to keep up their educational work until human music is in general use in motion picture theaters.

Paramount Office a Fine One.

San Francisco.—The office of the Progressive Motion Picture Company on the sixth floor of the Pacific Building, through which the Paramount program is distributed in this territory, may be regarded as being among the most handsome, as well as the best arranged, of those maintained by any film exchange on the Pacific Coast. That it ranks high among those of the Paramount conducted throughout the entire country may be judged from the fact that it now holds the Efficiency Cup offered by this firm.

Formerly the space occupied by this concern was divided into a number of offices, but changes were made some time ago and partitions removed so that there is one main office, where the clerical work is done, a private room off one end for Manager Herman Wobber, and a similar room off the other end for his assistant, J. W. Allen. The very latest in office equipment and accounting system have been installed and the business is carried on in a highly efficient manner.

The films are stored in specially constructed steel vaults in rooms across the aisle and here are also rooms for inspection and for the carrying of posters and other advertising matter. The separation of the booking and delivery departments does away with much confusion and assists materially toward office efficiency, which is a feature of this exchange.

Judge Defends Moving Pictures.

San Francisco.—Moving pictures as a form of amusement and education were recently warmly defended by Judge Graham when an attorney in his court sought to cast a slur upon them. The incident arose when Mrs. Eline Stuhr applied for letters of guardianship over the five children of her sister, who is ill in a hospital. Her attorney set forth that the children were roaming about the streets and visiting "dissolute" nickelodeons. At this juncture the Judge took a hand in the proceedings. "I don't see how anybody can call the motion pictures dissolute, since they are one of the greatest educational agencies devised by man," he said, "and I certainly will not grant the application on that ground. I think the children should have a guardian, but it isn't my intention to order the guardian to keep the children away from the nickelodeons."

E. H. Kemp Adds Exhibiting Room.

San Francisco.—Edward H. Kemp, who handled the Motiograph projection machine in this territory, and who also does an extensive developing and printing business, has taken over another room on the fourth floor of the Commercial Building on Market street and has fitted this up for projection purposes. Not only will this be used to demonstrate the efficiency of the Motiograph, but it will also be used to enable customers to inspect printing work as it progresses. This is the second addition to the floor space occupied by Mr. Kemp that has been made during the past year.

New House Ready Soon.

Oakland.—The Reliance theater at Seventeenth street and San Pablo avenue will be opened at an early date and another fine moving picture house will then have been added to the already large list in the suburban city. This theater, which is being erected for A. J. Vanstrum, will have a seating capacity of 1,800 and will be a strictly fireproof structure. It is on the site of the old Rice Institute, but the old building has been practically rebuilt.

Pathescope Office Moved.

San Francisco.—The Pathescope Company of Northern California, of which T. W. Johns is manager, has moved its offices and display rooms from the third floor of the Bankers' Investment Building, at 742 Market street, to the second floor of the Kamm Building, 717 Market street. The new quarters are much more accessible to the general public and are larger, permitting of better facilities for display and demonstration. Considerable progress has been made in the introduction of the Pathescope since the office was opened a few months ago and the machines are becoming well known through being shown in many stores throughout the city, especially in house furnishing establishments.

California News Notes.

Santa Clara.—The Santa Clara theater, for some time conducted by J. E. Dowd, has been purchased by Hoots & McDaniel. The new owners closed the house as soon as it was taken over, and are remodeling it at a cost of about $7,500. A fine photoplayer instrument will be installed, and when the house is reopened it will be one of the most attractive to be found in the vicinity of San Francisco. Mr. Hoots has been interested in the moving picture business for the past ten years, while Mr. McDaniel has had four year's experience in this line.

Eureka.—The Pastime theater is again being conducted under the management of Pettengill & Pettengill, pioneer exhibitors of that city.

Brookdale.—The Forest theater has been opened for the summer season by George J. Ames, and a show is also being given twice a week at Boulder Creek, Paramount service being featured at both places.

Port Costa.—Ritzenthaler & Young recently made a business trip to San Francisco and while there booked the Paramount program.

Illinois Theater Happenings

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Ave., Chicago.

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL.—When changes to Redmon's Majestic theater have been completed the management expects to have the distinction of operating the largest ground floor theater in the state. It will cover an area of 240 by 130 feet. The addition, the contract for which has been awarded, will give 570 more seats, and Manager Harry Redmon thinks that the business in sight warranted the increase.

Price Settles Right Down in McLeansboro.

McLeansboro.—Clifford J. Price has acquired a new theater and also a bride. Mr. Price, who formerly operated the Star theater, at Effingham, has purchased the Elite theater here and soon after his arrival he and Miss Florence Mirgon, of Effingham, were married.

Galesburg's Elite Closes.

Galesburg.—The Elite theater has been closed. The Elite was placed on the unfair list some time ago by the local Trades Assembly because it did not employ union labor.

Newspaper for Home Censorship.

Elgin.—The Elgin Courier has come out against any censorship except that of the home. With the high standard maintained by local exhibitors it thinks that care upon the part of parents and a word of commendation now and then to the local showman will bring about an almost ideal condition in the local photoplay business.

Selig Sends Cameras to India.

Monmouth.—Will Nicol, of this city, has been making arrangements to take a trip with his show through India, and recently was in Chicago to secure passports from the British consul. He announced that the Selig company had planned to send two cameramen with him for the purpose of securing films in India.

Urges Plebiscite for Sunday Question.

Urbana.—The Sunday picture show question in Urbana has reached that stage where further agitation is likely to hurt both the town and parties interested if it is not handled carefully. The Courier very sensibly suggests that the only fair way to settle it is to hold a special election.

Blaschke Enlarges the American.

East St. Louis.—The old American theater building, at 319-321 Missouri avenue, has been leased to Carl Blaschke, an exhibitor of Little Rock, Ark., who will convert it into a modern moving picture and vaudeville theater to be known as the Royal. It was planned to open the latter part of August and for a while at least is will be given over to photoplay. As soon as the upper floor of the building is available a lease will be taken upon it and it will be converted into a balcony, giving a house with a seating capacity of 1,500.

Two Houses for Rorer.

Dixon.—Manager Rorer of the Family theater has signed a lease for the Dixon Opera house for the coming season and will control both theaters. The new house probably will use some theatrical attractions.

600-Seat House for Rockford.

Rockford.—Evald and Bert Johnson will erect a moving picture theater on Fourteenth avenue, between Sixth and Seventh streets. It will be 41x80 feet and will seat 600 persons.

Barach Succeeds Logan

By A. B. Harrison, Box 389, Dallas.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—Nat Barach, of Atlanta, a well known and popular film man throughout the South, has been appointed manager of the Dallas exchange of the Southern World Film Corporation to succeed R. H. Logan, who recently resigned.

Mr. Barach has been in the film business for about three years and most of that time has been spent in the employ of the Southern World Film Corporation as traveling salesman, having traveled out of the offices at Pittsburg, Cleveland, Chicago, Kansas City, Dallas and New Orleans, and since the first of the year has been connected with the Atlanta office, from whence he came to Dallas.

During 1915, Mr. Barach was connected with the Fox Film Corporation at Dallas, in the capacity of traveling salesman, and it goes without saying that he has many friends throughout the States as well as in Dallas proper, who have given him a hearty welcome.

Mr. Barach states it is his intention to continue the good policy already installed in the Dallas exchange as well as to keep the office force intact. He took charge of the office July 24.

Nashville Has Week's Orgy of Unborn Stuff

Censors, After Denouncing Picture as "Morbid, Indecent and Degrading," Cut Out Two Hundred Feet and Permit Its Showing—"Where Are My Children?" Passes Without Alteration, but With Insistence on Age Limit.

By J. L. Roy, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—When the Strand theater opened on Monday morning with a five-reel abortion production made in New York (advertisement for which The Moving Picture World had refused), members of the Nashville board of censors were promptly on the scene, and after a review of the picture drew up and presented to the mayor a report in which it was stated the picture was "morbid, indecent and degrading." While admitting a powerful lesson was taught, the censors were of the opinion that this was not sufficient to justify its toleration, as expressed by them. On receipt of the report Mayor Ewing, upon whose request the investigation was undertaken, dispatched Chief of Police Alex Barthell to the Strand with orders to stop the presentation of the picture.

The board of censors then spent the afternoon at the Strand and proceeded to slash up the film to such an extent that it was hardly possible to follow the thread of the story. Over two hundred feet of the offensive scenes were removed, after which the reels were patched up and a report was made to the mayor that the picture would be permitted to pass after its impromptu abbreviation.

On Monday night a committee of twenty representative citizens were invited to view the production and render opinions as to the moral value of the play, and when a vote was taken it was found that the house was divided, with some women voting that the picture be allowed to continue. The chief of police then advised Manager Roy Shelton that the picture might be shown, providing that no person under 17 years of age was allowed to enter.

Mr. Shelton placed the film back on exhibition late in the afternoon and employed a band to advertise the fact, with a crowd of boys carrying banners through the uptown streets. The picture held over for a solid week's run, which was undoubtedly due to the amount of publicity it had received through the press and otherwise as a result of the censorship proceedings.

Pass "Where Are My Children?"

Nashville.—Immediately after the board of censors had acted on the foregoing picture the mayor issued instructions for the board to examine "Where Are My Children," which was booked at the Princess for the following week. Accordingly a copy of the film was secured and a private exhibition held at the Princess for the benefit of the censors and a committee of invited citizens. A full discussion was had as to the moral principles involved, after which the censors, in direct contrast to their action of the day before, allowed the picture to pass, without cutting out a single scene. The only provision made was that no person under 18 years of age be permitted, which requirement was strictly adhered to by the management during the week's run of the picture.

Operators Off War Path.

Nashville.—The absence of striking operators about the streets with banners urging the people to stay out of certain theaters, following the walk-out of some months ago in Nashville, is quite noticeable, and to all appearances these men have given up their efforts to divert patronage to the houses which granted their demands. It will be remembered that the operators stepped down from their booths at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, leaving blank screens all over the city. Upon refusal of one string of Nashville houses to reinstate the strikers, certain of the men took turn-about in parading the downtown streets with large banners urging people to keep out of the theaters controlled by this company.

It is hoped harmony will prevail from now on, as outbreaks of this nature tend greatly to injure the high prestige which the whole moving picture industry now enjoys.

"The Evil Thereof" at Knoxville.

Knoxville.—"The Evil Thereof," the Famous release, recently barred by the Chattanooga board of women censors, broke all records at the Queen theater, at which time no protest whatever was entered. The management issued a stringent order regarding children, and none was admitted under any circumstances while the picture was being shown.

Sidelight Publicity.

Nashville.—A novel mode of publicity was introduced here when President Tony Sudekum of the Crescent Amusement Company removed the sidelight lenses from his auto and substituted two large glass plates, illuminated from behind, on which were inscribed "See Fathers of Men—Princess." The plates can be changed at will, and when the car is on the streets it carries with it a silent bid for patronage.

Vendome Lobby Used for Posters.

Nashville.—The lobby of the Vendome, Nashville's largest playhouse, is being utilized for moving picture advertising during the closed season. This house, which is situated in the heart of the city, is at all times conspicuous with posters of forthcoming productions to be offered at the Strand, Knickerbocker, etc.

Broussard Encounters Opposition in Senate

Militant Louisianian Calls Attention of Congress to Fact That Exhibitors in District of Columbia Already Are Paying Six Varieties of Impost—Says Five-Cent Show Is Disappearing and Ten-Cent May Also.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth St., N. E., Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There is a great deal of opposition to the proposal of Senator Robert F. Broussard, of Louisiana, to do away with the proposed tax on motion picture and other theaters, as contained in the so-called general revenue bill, and obtain the same results with respect to obtaining funds with which to carry on the preparedness program by maintaining a duty on sugar and other commodities.

Senator Broussard has served notice on the Senate Finance Committee that he intends to fight the tax on theaters when the bill comes up in the Senate. He told the committeemen recently, when appearing on behalf of the motion picture exhibitors, that in the District of Columbia the latter are already paying six taxes, enumerating these as the theater tax, building inspectors' tax, realty tax, personal property tax, income tax, and corporation tax. If the proposed measure becomes a law with the odious provision intact, there will be a seventh tax imposed upon the picture playhouses, and Mr. Broussard said he would naturally believe that the exhibitors in other cities were similarly burdened.

He declared that increasing taxation is in part responsible for the disappearance of the five-cent show and that if the Federal and the local governments continue, the ten-cent show will also soon be a thing of the past. And he further pointed out that such taxes as these were flarebacks, not meeting with favor anywhere along the line.

He urged in place of these small tax provisions the adoption of an amendment proposed by him providing for the suspension of what are known as drawback privileges under which an importer can bring materials into this country, improve them, and upon exporting them to another country have returned to him the duty paid upon the original importation. His particular interest is in sugar. This is brought into this country in the raw state and the proper duty paid. It is then refined and exported abroad, whereupon the duty paid upon the raw sugar is returned on the refined product. He estimates that $10,000,000 would be saved to the Government in this way and there would be no need for taxing the motion picture.

Slips and Falls; Wants $5,000.

Suit has been brought in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against the Hippodrome Amusement Company by one Mattie L. Sisson, a boarding house keeper, to recover damages to the extent of $5,000 because of alleged injuries occurring on February 12, when, while the plaintiff was endeavoring to leave the Hippodrome theater, at 808 K street, Northwest, over an inclined pavement, she slipped and fell against the side wall. She claims that the accident was due to the wet and slippery condition of the walk or pavement and that the company was negligent in permitting such a condition. According to the papers filed in the court, the injuries sustained by the plaintiff were quite numerous.

Friedman's Jump Pleases Washington.

Exhibitors and exchangemen of Washington were very glad to hear recently of the promotion "suffered" by Henry E. Friedman, one of the best known and best liked traveling film men that ever pulled out over the Southern. He was formerly employed as assistant manager and salesman in the North Carolina and Maryland territory of the World Film Corporation here. When Clarence W. Bunn, who was manager of the office, went to Chicago to assume the management of the Pathe office in the "Windy City" Friedman went along as his assistant, and he made such whirlwind strides that he soon found himself jumping over the high buildings and in Minneapolis, himself a Pathe manager. And everybody's glad. The whole of Washington wishes him luck in his new position.

Exchangemen Co-operate for Benefits.

Practically all of the exchangemen of Washington co-operated with Secretary of Interior Lane in his effort to raise funds for the destitute families of members of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, by furnishing a program of motion pictures. The Government donated the use of the Pension building for this purpose and every evening last week a show was given, the whole being under the auspices of the Home Club of the Interior Department, of which Secretary Lane is the president. An admission charge of ten cents for adults and of five cents for children was made, and while the figures are not available, it is said that quite a large sum was realized.

Senning Extends Poster Department.

Manager Carl F. Senning, of the Washington office of the Fox Film Corporation has just placed an order with local contractors for an extension of the racks in his poster department. The upper floor of the building is devoted entirely to the poster department and it is contemplated that 360 additional bins will be provided.

Mr. Senning recently installed a convenient system in this department, making possible quick deliveries of all paper. As soon as possible after their receipt in the department all posters are folded just as they otherwise would when being packed to be sent out to some theater. These are then numbered and placed in the rack with the lowest number at the bottom. In this way an inventory can be taken in a very short space of time and Mr. Senning is also able to learn immediately of the amount of paper he may have on one or any number of subjects. Another feature of this method is that it tends to conserve space and keeps the posters in far better condition than if handled as they usually are.

Hy Art Comfortably Situated.

The Hy Art Master Plays Company, formerly located at 1311 H street, Northwest, is now located in what are perhaps the most attractively decorated offices in this city, in the Barristers Building, 635 F street, Northwest. With the removal of this business to its present location comes the return of "Johnnie" Payette to Washington. He is one of the favorites among the film folks of this locality and it was a matter of regret among them when he went out on the road for long trips. He broke into the business some few years ago at the Rhode Island theater, of which he was manager, and he later joined the General Film Company, becoming its assistant manager here, and at times in charge of the Baltimore branch.

When Arthur S. Hyman, the then manager for the General Film Company, severed his connection with that organization to organize the Hy Art Master Plays Company, of which he is now the vice-president and general manager, he took Mr. Payette with him as his assistant, and the latter is now in full charge of the exchange, Mr. Hyman devoting a considerable part of his time to the outside business.

The other officers of this company are Gibbs L. Baker, a lawyer and former prosecuting attorney of the District of Columbia, president; Harry Buckley, treasurer, and George R. Mayo, secretary.

Beattis Returns From Vacation.

Lawrence Beattis, manager of Loew's Columbia theater, has returned to Washington after an absence of several weeks. When he left town he went to spend his vacation visiting his mother in Memphis, Tenn., later going to St. Louis, Mo., where he has a brother. Before returning to Washington, however, he went to Toronto, where he relieved the manager of the Loew house in that place during a three weeks' vacation. During his absence Mr. Kline, Manager Beattis' assistant, was in charge of the local theater.

J. Leo Yates Ill.

It is with a great deal of regret that the exhibitors and exchangemen of Washington learned recently that J. Leo Yates, manager of the Washington Film Exchange, which markets the Universal product, is seriously ill at his home in this city. Mr. Yates holds the friendship of every one in the motion picture business in the territory served by his exchange. He is a manager of the type that carries through that which he promises, and he is always "on the level." It is the hope of all that Mr. Yates will have a quick recovery.

NEWS OF IOWA THEATERS.

Corning.—L. S. Fleming of Arispe, Iowa, has purchased the Lyric theater from Peregrine Brothers.

Trades Automobile for a Picture Theater

Tired of Steady Program of Tragedy Indianapolis Man Converts Acquisition Into an Exclusive Comedy House—George Now Happy as the Big Boss of the Funny Show—Other Indiana News.

By the Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS.—"George F. Kreitlein, motion picture magnate and automobile supply man." Last week it was G. F. Kreitlein, auto supply man, and the appendage had been given within recent days. For the first time the story of the leap from autos to the moving picture world is herein told.

A few days ago George met a man with a motion picture show and a hankering for an automobile. Just at that particular minute George had the same affliction backward—he was tired of plunking down a dime every time he wanted to see a film show and he wanted to see them often. Comedy, by the way, was his line. The auto business afforded him all the tragedy he desired.

This man that George met was profuse in extolling the virtues of his motion picture house at 440 Massachusetts avenue. Likewise, Kreitlein waxed eloquent as to the virtues of his automobile and its total freedom from the aches and pains which many are likely to give.

The upshot of it all was that Kreitlein is now the owner of one moving picture show with the one brand idea, an idea which George some years ago injected into the auto business by handling one brand of car and no other. George immediately changed the name to the Funny Show, and exhibits none other than comedy pictures.

It is, by the way, the only moving picture theater of the kind in the city.

Appeals to the upper courts have been perfected and it is said the cases will be carried to the highest courts of the state. Petitions are in circulation asking the city authorities to permit Sunday opening. They have not been presented to the city authorities.

Supreme Features Incorporates.

Indianapolis.—The Supreme Features Company has been incorporated to do business in the state with a capital stock of $10,000. The directors are named as Joseph I. Schnitzer, Henry H. James and Earl W. Penrod.

Free Marion Shows.

Marion.—Outdoor picture shows on certain nights of the week, in connection with a band concert, provide entertainment and instruction for a great number of adults and children. The shows are well attended and are given at the expense of the city. They do hurt the theater owners, but no kick has been forthcoming.

Mrs. Croop Resigns as Manager.

Does It Pay to Keep Open in the Summer?

That's the Question Detroit Exhibitors Answer—There Seems to be Agreement that Closing Down Has Advantages, but There Is Always Fear of Lack of Unanimity Among Exhibitors and Also Customers Not Coming Back.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit.

DETROIT—July was the hottest month of the year and one of the hottest in many years so far as Detroit is concerned. Despite this fact, only a few theaters closed, and those which remained open sustained slight losses. Business really held up better than expected during the hot spell. And right here is the logical place to rehash an interview which the World representative had with a number of Detroit exhibitors. The writer asked these exhibitors the following question:

"Does it pay to keep your theater open during the hot weather, or would it be better to close?"

One exhibitor expressed himself thusly: "I would close down in a minute for at least a month in the summer if everybody else in the territory would do the same thing. I honestly believe it would be better for the industry if we all closed down. It would give people an opportunity to think of other things, we would have a chance to look our houses over carefully as exhibitors, and then when we reopened our houses would be fresh looking and people would welcome our shows."

Another exhibitor said: "We keep open because we are afraid that if we closed people might get out of the habit of coming and we would have a hard time to get them back."

Not one, but dozens, of other exhibitors when asked the above question said they would not hesitate to close, and believed it best to close, providing the exhibitors as an organization would all do the same

Two Popular Exchange Managers.

After many days we succeeded in getting two popular exchange managers in the Auto City to pose for photographs to appear in the World. Herewith are the reproductions:

No. 1 is George W. Weeks, recently appointed district manager of the Universal exchanges in Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Indianapolis. Mr. Weeks is just as friendly and pleasant as his photograph indicates—he is known as "the prince of good fellows."

Geo. W. Weeks.

A. I. Shapiro.

No. 2 is that of A. I. Shapiro, better known as "Shap" to his intimate friends. He was recently announced as the permanent manager of the Triangle Film Corporation in Detroit. He has done splendid work since taking hold and is increasing his list of friends as fast as he increases the weekly receipts for his firm.

Grennell Has Had Experience.

Fred T. Grennell, now publicity manager of the Detroit Universal, has had an extensive experience both as an advertising and newspaper man. He has been employed on several local papers and recently was city editor of the Detroit Free Press. For several years he was on the road with different theatrical attractions. More recently he has developed the local publicity field, being press agent for the Majestic, the largest Detroit picture playhouse; the Orpheum, the leading popular priced vaudeville and picture theater, and the Knickerbocker, the big picture enterprise in the east end. He has also handled the advertising for the Norwood, Fine Arts, Majestic in Wyandotte, and other smaller Detroit theaters. All of the local publicity given the Screen Ball some months ago is credited to his enterprise. Fred understands just the kind of publicity that will be read by the public.

Simons Has the Goods.

We beg to acknowledge the August program of the New Family theater of Adrian, Mich., operated by E. M. Simons, who is president and general manager of the theater. It contains some really interesting news matter. One article is headed "Meeting Mary Pickford (Herself)" and it gives a splendid description of the way in which Mr. Simons met Miss Pickford at the Chicago convention recently and his impressions of the "little star." The magazine contains twenty-four pages and is splendidly illustrated throughout, with photographs and stories of the plays and stars that are booked ahead. We reiterate what we said once before about Mr Simons—he is one of the livest and most wide-awake exhibitors in Michigan. His ideas of doing things are always along metropolitan lines..

Some House, That New Madison.

Speaking of the new Madison theater, Broadway and Grand Circus Park, Detroit, for John H. Kunsky, the press agent says: "Despite the intense heat, the progress of the new Madison is not halted in the least. The wonderful foundation is completed. The Madison theater will except anything that has ever been attempted in this part of the country. It is not a question of money, but quality, style and comfort. The lobby leading through the theater from the Park entrance will be of solid marble, enhanced by costly ornamental work of the finest design. There will be a roomy main floor and balcony and finely appointed reception rooms, smoking rooms and a grand promenade. C. Howard Crane, architect, states that the Madison will represent his supreme effort in theater construction." The Madison will open some time in the fall.

Kunsky Has Star Up His Sleeve.

Although John H. Kunsky will not divulge the name of the star, he has admitted to the World correspondent that in the near future he will bring to Detroit a prominent film star whose appearance will be made at his theaters, presumably the new Madison. Mr. Kunsky says it will be "a new star in a new play."

Brewer of Owosso Calls.

The World office was visited the other day by E. S. Brewer, manager of the new Strand theater in Owosso, Mich. This house was opened on July 6. It seats 600 people, has a policy of daily change, with prices at 5 and 10 cents. The Strand has a rather unique front, very attractive, and in a future issue we shall take pleasure in showing photographs of it.

Detroit Has Outdoor Pictures.

Outdoor motion pictures are being shown by the City Recreation Commission in Detroit on the city playgrounds and will be continued until Sept. 1. The pictures include comedy, dramatic and educational subjects, and are projected with a Power 6A machine. The General Film Company furnishes free the comedy and dramatic films, while the educational films are furnished by the Department of Commerce and Labor at Washington.

Perry New Pathe Salesman.

C. W. Perry has been appointed one of the city salesmen for the Pathe Film Exchange. He is a former exhibitor, having operated the Voyons theater in Lowell, Mass., for the past three years. He sold the house in May. He is not new to the Pathe organization, as he formerly did special work for the company in the New England states.

Changes at Detroit Universal.

Joe Deiner, former booker at the Detroit Universal Exchange, has gone to Cleveland to do booking for Bluebird Photoplays. He is succeeded at Detroit by Al Mertz, former booker at the local exchange of the General Film Company.

Standard Has Big July Business.

J. C. Fishman, manager of the Detroit exchange of the Standard Film Service Company, reports that July was the biggest month since the inauguration of the exchange. Since he has taken hold—five months ago—the Michigan business of the Standard has increased 400 per cent. The big favorites right now are Mutt and Jeff Comedy Cartoons and the Jungle pictures.

Anglin Company Selling Stock.

Stock of the Margaret Anglin Picture Corporation is now being offered for sale in Michigan, the Michigan Securities Commission having granted permission for such action. It is the first motion picture corporation in Michigan to which permission has been given for the public sale of its stock.

Fine New House for Bay City.

The Bay City Theater Company, Bay City, Mich., has been organized for the purpose of erecting a new downtown theater and business block. Howard L. Shaw is president, John McNair Ealy vice president, George E. Wedthoff secretary and treasurer, and Fred B. Williams general manager. The capital stock will be $25,000. The house will be on the east side of Washington avenue on property 225x100 feet. A. S. Munger, of Bay City, is drawing the tentative plans. It will seat 1,050 persons on the first floor and about 500 in the balcony.

Fairbanks Beats 'Em All in Detroit.

So enormous was business at the Majestic theater, Detroit, on Tuesday evening, August 1, that it was necessary to stop selling tickets for the 9 o'clock show. The attraction was the latest Triangle release—Douglas Fairbanks in "Flirting With Fate." In reference to Mr. Fairbanks we want to say that within a few months he has built up a tremendous patronage in Detroit. It is safe to say that Mr. Fairbanks stands to-day—in the eyes of Detroit theatergoers—as the "one best bet" for high-class motion picture houses. As one exhibitor said, "A Fairbanks picture means you crowd your house."

Bijou Theater Now Open.

The opening of the Bijou theater, at 36 Monroe avenue, operated by Wesley Schram, who also has the Monroe theater, took place August 5. It seats about 350 persons.

The Family Is Getting Bigger.

The Family theater on Huron avenue, Port Huron, Mich., is to be enlarged. Bids are now being asked on the work. The addition will be 50x100 feet in size.

Film Men and Exhibitors Battle on Diamond

Minneapolis Theater Owners Wallop Exchanges for Once Anyway—Johnson Fans Nine Men—St. Paul Finds Children's Matinees Popular—Kimball & Cobb Open Laboratories—New-Fangled Infant Epidemic.

By G. Carroll Johnston, 802 Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—The first annual picnic and outing of the exhibitors and exchange men and women at Parker's Lake, Minn., Wednesday, August 2, was the one big event of the week hereabouts. This outing was arranged for the purpose of bringing the exhibitor and exchangeman closer together, and it succeeded. It was expected the exchangemen would outnumber the exhibitors about three to one, but the attendance figures showed that there were only a few less exhibitors than exchange employees, and several theater owners from the smaller towns throughout Southern and Central Minnesota attended.

The $1 ticket included railroad fare, admission to baseball games, dancing and "eats," and more than one picnicker admitted he had eaten more ice cream than he "ever did in his life before." The large supply of pop was exhausted early in the afternoon and thirty gallons of ice cream lasted only until 6 o'clock. Sandwiches, cakes, salad and pickles were greatly in demand and the eagerness and splendid appetites displayed by the film men would have led many to believe they had been fasting for two days in advance.

The merrymakers, led by a band of ten pieces, started from the Produce Exchange building at 1 o'clock, and in a special train went to the lake. Shortly after arriving at the picnic grounds, while some plunged into the depths of the lake others swarmed around the food stands and the dancing pavilion. At 2.30 the Mutual Exchange baseball team lined up against the Produce Exchange building aggregation on the diamond, and despite the fact that it was 95 in the shade, the two teams played five fast innings, with a result that the Mutuals were victorious 7 to 3.

Following this game the exchange and supply men lined up against the exhibitors aggregation. The exhibitors won after a brilliant rally in the second inning. J. L. Johnston, pitching for the winners, fanned nine men and allowed two hits. He weakened somewhat in the fifth, but a double play and a strike out when the bases had been filled twice because of a hit, two walks and two errors, kept his opponents from counting. John May and Ralph Bradford pitched for the exchange men. Wild Bill Egan, Fred S. Meyer, Buzzy Izzy Schlank and R. Schlaifer took turns in umpiring the games. H. E. Friedman, H. Margoles, Manie Gottlieb, Fred Meyer, A. Schwartzbein, Harry Breilein, W. H. Stafford and Sam Dworsky participated in the vaudeville entertainment. The arrangements for the outing were in charge of W. H. Stafford, Mutual; Manie Gottleib, Favorite Features; Harry Rowe, New Film Corporation; L. V. Calvert, New Garrick theater, W. J. Egan and J. L. Johnston.

Children's Matinees Popular in St. Paul.

St. Paul.—Children's matinees have made a big hit with moving picture theatergoers in St. Paul. Special matinees for juvenile followers of the silent drama have scored at the Park, Dale, Bluebird and Elk theaters. Owing to the success which these bills have met in the Minnesota capital city several Minneapolis, Duluth and other city theaters have put on special afternoon shows for children. J. B. Reisman, Dale theater, St. Paul, was one of the originators of the idea in these parts.

Andress Opens a Regular Place.

Minneapolis.—Hugh C. Andress, manager of the International Film Service exchange, which has had temporary quarters in the Lumber exchange, has opened permanent headquarters on the sixth floor of the Produce Exchange building.

Delegates Return Happy.

Minneapolis.—Having procured a national league charter at the recent Chicago convention, the Minnesota delegates to the Windy City meeting returned home beaming with joy. The Gopher delegation got what it was after the second day of the convention, and had it not been that Thomas Furniss, Duluth, declined to run, the Minnesotans could have elected one of their number national president. Minnesota has been the mother state of the film industry in the Northwest and a power in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, but to jump into the national league and rush to the front came as a surprise to many, and seems sufficient to make the North Star Staters jubilant. The Minnesota delegates to the Chicago convention were James Gilowsky and C. W. Campbell, St. Paul; Thomas Furniss, Duluth; David G. Rodgers, Henry P. Greene, D. W. Chamberlain and C. E. Van Duzee, Minneapolis. All of these men took an active part in the discussions at Chicago and made Minnesota's entry into the league a brilliant one.

"Civilization" Opens August 11.

Minneapolis.—Harry Rathner and Myron Conhaim of the Supreme Feature Film Company, Minneapolis, have arranged to open their latest acquisition, "Civilization," at the Minneapolis Shubert theater, August 11. The elaborate prologue idea used by Thomas Ince in his New York Criterion presentation will be followed by the Supreme, and over a hundred people have been engaged to appear in it and make up the symphony orchestra for the production. "The Birth of a Nation" is now running at the Shubert to good houses.

Minneapolis.—The International Film Service, Inc., which has had temporary headquarters in the Lumber Exchange, will move to spacious quarters in the New Film Exchange shortly, according to Manager H. C. Andress.

Minneapolis.—The Peerless has added the Hans and Fritz comedies to its list of releases each week. The Peerless also handles the Mutt and Jeff comedies.

Mastbaum Talks of His New Film Activities

Live Philadelphia Exhibitor, Vice-President of the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, Declares His Success with Brenon Productions was the Impelling Factor Leading to New Association—Garrick Spends $12,000 on Improvements.

By the Philadelphia News Service, 326 Real Estate Trust Building.

PHILADELPHIA.—During the past several years Stanley V. Mastbaum, managing director of the Stanley Company, this city, has established his standing as one of the most prominent film men in the United States and easily the controlling factor as far as the photoplay houses of Philadelphia are concerned, more than fifty moving picture theaters coming under his direct care and supervision. The recent announcement that he has branched out as a manufacturer and producer will have interest for his friends. As the Moving Picture World has already printed, he figures in the formation of the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, and at the meeting held for the final organization he was elected vice-president. In this position he will have a voice in the selection of plays and scenarios and in the engaging of players for the new company. His rare executive ability and wide knowledge of what the public desires in the play line through his Stanley experience should make him an invaluable aid to his associates. These are Herbert Brenon and Lewis J. Selznick.

Mr. Mastbaum was laconic and much to the point in answering the question as to how he became interested in the new corporation. He said: "Whenever one of Mr. Brenon's productions has played at houses which I have booked they have always been assured of handsome financial profits. I have the utmost confidence in his plans and ambitions and his ability to carry them out with proper and sufficient business and financial backing. I regard Mr. Brenon as one of the directors of to-day.

"Mr. Selznick has been my close friend ever since I introduced myself to the moving picture world and I greatly admire his clear opinion and his ability to seize an opportunity and to push it. I am more than proud to be associated with such men in a new enterprise which cannot help but be successful financially and a source of keen personal satisfaction as well."

At an expense of almost $12,000 five additional exits and a large fire escape have been constructed at the Garrick theater, Norristown, Pa. The improvements have been under way for the past four or five weeks and were only recently completed. On Thursday, August 4, the management arranged to give half of the gross proceeds of the sale of seats for both the afternoon and night performances for the benefit of the Milk and Ice Fund, which is doing so much to relieve the sufferings of the little tots in this city.

Pictures Aid Suffs.

The Baltimore suffragists are quite an up-to-date, live-wire bunch, for through the activities of Mrs. B. J. Byrne, the idea of spreading the women's rights slogan through the medium of the moving picture has been evolved. A complete outfit for moving picture projection, which can be folded into a small-sized box and arranged with adjustments so that it can be attached to an automobile for street purposes, has been made for them by a firm in New York. Another adjustment is arranged so that a screen can be attached to the auto and yet be several yards away. The machine has been fitted up with a special lens for close-up work.

Echo Brightens Up.

B. Rosenbaur, manager of the Echo theater, 124-6 East Fort avenue, has completely renovated this house. It now presents a gala appearance. The entire front and interior have been painted and redecorated and a new motor-drive has been installed.

Thirty-four Baltimore Houses Closed.

There is a rumor current in the downtown district of Baltimore that the services now being used by the larger theaters are due for a change. As a result of this change of attitude on the part of several managers, the heads of the several exchanges which supply this city with film have their weather eyes peeled and are extremely on the alert. Thirty-four of the moving picture theaters of Baltimore have closed their doors to the public, and from all appearances some of them will never appear bright again under the same managers. This makes quite an inroad on the 107 houses here.

Liberty Brightens Up.

John English, who bought on June 9 and now manages the Liberty theater, 5 North Liberty street, has had the lobby and exterior of his house repainted with a fetching green, giving the theater a spic and span appearance. In the early fall Mr. English states several other alterations and improvements will be made.

Weber Takes Richardson's Tip.

In accordance with the suggestions made by F. H. Richardson, Editor of the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World, to Frederick Clements Weber, manager of the Gertrude McCoy theater, when he visited Baltimore recently, that he darken the walls of his projection room, Mr. Weber has followed out the suggestions by painting all the walls of this room black.

"Submarine" Business Brisk.

For the past several weeks the business with the Mutual continued picture, "The Secret of the Submarine" has been so brisk that Victor L. Abbey, who has been handling this film in this territory, has been obliged to spend two days a week in Baltimore to attend to it.

Dixie Changes Hands.

The Dixie theater, 312 West Baltimore street, has been sold by William Fait to the Dixie Amusement Company. According to the latest reports the house has been playing to good audiences.

Picture Theaters With Delinquents.

The presentment of 415 parties has been brought about by the Grand Jury due to the fact that the extra license fees required by act of Hugh A. McMullen, State Controller, and passed by the last Maryland Legislature, were disregarded by them. Among these are listed several moving picture parlors. Some gordian-knot problems will probably be the lot of the State's Attorney and the Attorney General to solve from time to time, as the act's provisions are unusually broad.

The McHenry Will Measure 65 by 121.

The arrangement of the plans for the McHenry theater, which is to be erected in South Baltimore at Cross and Light streets, show that this theater is to be built very similar to the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, owing to the irregularity of the plot. The entrance, which is to be 18 feet wide and run back 90 feet to the main building, will probably be on Light street. The main building will measure 65 by 121 feet.

Quick Work by International.

It is reported that many towns and people in the state of Maryland felt the shock caused by the munitions explosion in New Jersey on Sunday, July 30. If any of these same people were in Baltimore on Monday, July 31, they could have seen what caused it all by going to the New theater, where manager L. A. DeHoff was showing the Hearst International News pictures with this feature. The following exchange men from Washington were present at the reopening of the New theater: Fritz B. Whatne, manager of the International Film Service; H. C. Wales, manager of the World Film Corporation, and H. I. Rosefield, New York representative of World Film.

Bennett Takes Pictures.

J. Howard Bennett, former owner and manager of the New Pickwick theater, must have felt the call of the camera lately, for he got out his paraphernalia and went around "shooting" scenes and doings during the recent Elks' convention which was held here. He also caught a good bit of the parade. This film was booked by G. L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson theater, Baltimore street, at Gay, for Monday, July 31.

All Texas Watching Fort Worth's Battle

If Exhibitors Lose Out in Their Fight for Sunday Opening Fear is Expressed Whole State Will Close—The Eleven Houses Doing Business Are Arrested Each Time They Show on Sabbath.

By E. E. Belcia, 902 West Second Street, Fort Worth.

FORT WORTH, Tex.—In the spring of this year an election was held here to determine if there would be Sunday opening of picture shows. The picture show men won it by about 1,200 majority. Owing to very inclement weather on election day there was not a big vote polled and it is presumed that had there been the majority would have been much larger. After winning the election there were still some of the exhibitors who had cold feet about opening, as the election was not authorized by law and could not be, but was more to find the sentiment of the majority of the people. The business men of Fort Worth noting that matters were getting into such shape as to jeopardize their business also took matters into their own hands a few weeks ago, and after several closed meetings at which nearly all the prominent business men of the city were present it was decided the shows should open, which they did on the first Sunday in July and it is understood the business men of the city are standing behind them solid.

One of the shows, the Phillips Egypt, has not yet opened on Sunday. The Strand is also closed on account of fire, but will run on Sunday as soon as reopened. The first picture show Sunday opening case has been tried in Judge Jessie Brown's court. Pierre Levy, manager of the Hippodrome theater, was the first one to be tried. Judge Baskin applied for dismissal on the grounds of the election, but the court ruled the election invalid and the case was then tried before a jury. At first the jury disagreed, but after being out an hour the second time returned a verdict of "Not Guilty" much to the gratification of the majority of those present.

As the shows here now have been open five Sundays and there are eleven shows in the city running on Sunday, there is a total of fifty-four cases yet to be tried in Judge Brown's court, and eleven new cases are added each S nday.

Much interest is created over the State in Fort Worth's Sunday opening, because should the shows have to close again it is said that every show in the State of Texas will have to close Sunday; also that the blue laws will be enforced to the letter everywhere, making it impossible to buy cigars, cold drinks, or anything but drugs on Sunday. This law was passed over forty years ago and not much attention has been paid to enforcing it elsewhere except on the picture shows, and the managers feel it is unfair to enforce the law against them and not against other lines of business; that if it is enforced against them that it is high time it was enforced everywhere and to the letter so that the legislature would not delay longer in repealing it and passing a more up-to-date act.

Altering The Aladdin

Manager Simpson Lowers Floor to Sidewalk Level—Other Michigan News.

By Frank H. Madison.

BAY CITY, Mich.—Manager Simpson of the Aladdin theater, who has been battling with a heating problem, believes he has solved it in a seating scheme which is being installed while the house is closed six weeks for changes. At present the rear of the floor is five feet higher than the front and is above the sidewalk level. The floor is to be dropped to the sidewalk level and constructed in the form of an arc with a pitch of three-fourths of an inch to the foot. The seats at the front will be set so that every patron views the screen at the right angle and there will be no obstruction by the person in front. In addition to this change the capacity will be doubled by moving the rear end of the building thirty feet and adding 500 chairs. In each of the rear corners will be placed balconies which, equipped with heavy rugs, wicker chairs and other luxuries, will be reserved at a slight extra charge for parties. The entire house will be redecorated.

Catholic Parishes Active.

Grand Rapids.—After making a protest which resulted in the withdrawal of "War's Women" at the Orpheum theater, the Federation of Catholic Parishes of the Diocese of Grand Rapids, at its fourth annual convention here, passed a resolution which called for the appointment of a committee to co-operate with the manufacturers of films to procure a higher moral standard of general production and a larger supply of appropriate films for children, for a survey of the motion picture entertainments in the Grand Rapids diocese, each parish appointing a committee to co-operate in the work. Each member of the federation was asked to communicate with the local congressman and urge the support of H. R. 15462.

Around the State.

Perry.—Charles Taylor now has full possession of the Perry opera house, having purchased Mr. Wyman's interest, who had purchased from H. Able.

Holland.—The Knickerbocker theater, erected here several years ago by the ill-fated Tiemmen Slagh, will be sold at auction at the courthouse at Grand Haven September 1. Slagh was killed in a fall while he was adjusting the sign on the new theater.

Manistee.—The steam yacht Dolphin, owned by Dr. Fasher, Chicago real estate man, arrived here with the Burr McIntosh film company aboard. The party has been cruising along the shores of Lake Michigan, taking scenes in which Burr McIntosh plays the leads.

Traverse City.—An ordinance has been introduced before the city council calling for the prohibition of Sunday moving picture shows.

Iron Mountain.—A. E. Brauns, a merchant of this place, has awarded the contract for the construction of a moving picture theater, 60 by 120.

Grand Rapids.—Motion picture shows in parks have been resumed by C. H. Mills, supervisor of playgrounds. The films are shown in a different park every night and in four weeks make a circuit of the pleasure resorts.

ATLANTA NOTES.

ATLANTA, Ga.—The Scenic Film Company of Atlanta, large manufacturers of animated films for advertising purposes, and who hold contracts with practically every theater in Atlanta, is broadening the field of operations. It has appointed D. D. Marcus its representative in Philadelphia, from which point he will cover the entire eastern territory. The company has already secured contracts with picture houses in cities of the east.

Here's another picture player to add to the Atlanta list, Miss Thyrza Ware. At present she is spending her vacation with her family in Atlanta. She will return later to Jacksonville, to join Kalem. She has played in a number of pictures put out by that company. Her latest picture was "The Stenographer's Strategy." She has also appeared with Rose Melville in her famous "Sis Hopkins" films. Miss Ware is a Georgia product. Her early schooling was at the Calhoun and Boulevard grammar schools of the city. She is a graduate of Cox college in voice. She also attended the girls' high school here and Brenau.

Joe Marientette, southern manager of the World Film Corporation, with headquarters in Atlanta, is making a business trip through Louisiana and Texas this week.

WISCONSIN.

Madison, Wis.—Two small boys have blamed moving pictures for their setting fire to a barn, and the local press is again agitating the local censorship idea. Mayor Sayle, it is said, refuses to consider the plan of a volunteer censorship board because of the inefficiency which would result after the first enthusiasm has died out. Miss McGovern, chairman of the social service department of the Madison Woman's Club, who is interested in the move, said that the mayor was in favor of a paid board of three members if the common council would authorize it. She also said she found the exhibitors to whom she had talked willing to co-operate in every way to improve programs.

A petition asking for the creation of a board of censors has been submitted to the mayor. Mrs. Louis Kahlenberg, a prominent club worker, wants a paid board if possible, with one member a woman, but if that is not feasible she wants unpaid censorship with members selected from the leading civic organizations.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mitchell, S. D.—Passage of the ordinance prohibiting the Sunday moving picture shows brings the matter within the province of the state's attorney, and it is thought that at the fall election party lines may be forgotten if a division of the candidates upon this question can be obtained.

Sioux Falls.—A "Girl Week" was offered by the Colonial theater, the program including features starring Billie Burke, Mae Marsh, Ruth Roland, and other young favorites.

Huron.—Roy Ramsdell has purchased from G. H. Lynde the Lounge theater, which he owned until two years ago. It reopened July 29 after several changes, including the installation of a ventilating system. Lynde will be connected with the theater as operator.

Northeastern Ohio League Opens Campaign

Names Its Committee on Political Action and Organization—Will Fight Censorship and Boost Membership—Installs Officers—Marguerite Snow and Jim Cruze With Kimberley—Shurtleff Goes from V-L-S-E to Pathe.

By Hubert Persons, 410 Standard Theater Building, Cleveland.

CLEVELAND.—The fight on the Ohio censor law and a campaign for new members are to be undertaken by a special committee of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. This committee, of which William J. Slimm is chairman, was elected at a meting of the local league in its rooms in the Republic building August 1. The committee bears the title of the Committee on Political Action and Organization. Besides Chairman Slimm the members are Samuel Bullock, George Heinbuch, William Simpson and D. L. Schumann. Sessions are being held daily until the committee complete a program for ratification by the league as a body.

At the same session recently elected officers were formally inducted into office. They are Benjamin J. Sawyer, president; Adolph Maher, treasurer, and Charles A. Megown, secretary.

Candidate Opposes Ohio Censorship.

Cleveland.—"I do not believe in the present form of moving picture censorship. There is too much regulation of picture theaters as contrasted with other buildings."

This is what Chris S. Baxter, Cleveland commissioner of buildings and a candidate for election as state representative, told members of the Northeastern Ohio Moving Picture Exhibitors' League in an address in the League rooms August 1.

"I am with you men in your censorship fight," he added. "Hereafter you will have some one on the inside working for you."

Several other legislative candidates who are avowed foes of censorship will be invited to address the League.

A majority of the members of the League have offered the use of their screens to candidates pledged to repeal the censorship law, but the League as a body has deferred going on record for candidates until after the primaries.

Sullivan Joins Reserve.

Cleveland.—William A. Sullivan, former Thanhouser player, is the latest addition to the producing staff of the Reserve Photoplays Company of this city.

Sullivan will work with Johnny and Emma Ray next week in "Casey Goes Shopping," an elaborately staged comedy which the Reserve Company is undertaking. This production will be more elaborately presented than anything the Reserve players have thus far turned out. A complete department store will be set up in the new studio on the sixth floor of the Wilshire building.

In one of the scenes, Johnny Ray in the title role, will take a wild ride in an overhead parcel carrier, while a jealous husband of a girl shopper with whom he has flirted takes pot shots at him with a pistol.

The Reserve company is soon to announce a new edition of comedies, all high class, and in which special attention has been paid to scenic effects.

Kimberley Engages Snow and Cruze.

Cleveland.—The Kimberley Feature Film Company has put Cleveland on the moving picture map by engaging Miss Marguerite Snow and James Cruze to work for two months in a five-reel feature. The couple, who recently played the leads in "The Million Dollar Mystery," were free until October, when they are under contract to begin work for a big syndicate headed by S. S. McClure. Until that time they will work for the Kimberley Company at its studio, 1791 West Fifty-seventh street.

Miss Snow and Mr. Cruze were engaged by George G. Kimberley, head of the company, and La Verne Baber, producing director, while they were in New York completing arrangements for the five-reel feature now being made. Some of the picture has already been taken, action being laid in New York Harbor and Ellis Island. The other scenes will all be taken in the Cleveland studio or in several selected locations about this city.

The aspirations of many Cleveland girls and young men who had hopes of appearing in Kimberley productions have been dimmed by the announcement from Director Barber that he will use no amateur talent.

"Only players trained to the camera will be used in our productions," Mr. Barber says. "We want an all-star cast as far as possible and cannot use amateurs."

Shurtleff Goes Over to Pathe.

Cleveland.—C. E. Shurtleff, Cleveland manager of the V-L-S-E exchange, is to be the new manager of the Pathe exchange, according to an announcement just made here. A. M. Holah, Mr. Shurtleff's assistant, will go to the Pathe exchange with him. This change follows the resignation of J. R. Johnson as Cleveland manager of Pathe. It has not yet been announced who will succeed Mr. Shurtleff, but it is understood the Dallas (Texas) manager will be brought here.

Midland Announces Its Plans.

Cleveland.—H. P. Angel, secretary of the Midland Film Company, announced the purchase of a 150-acre tract near Rocky River for studio purposes. According to Mr. Angel, present plans are to construct a series of buildings, including a covered studio, laboratories, scene dock and other things necessary.

Two parcels of the tract purchased by the Midland Company have been set aside, it is announced, for park and boulevard purposes. These will be given to Cuyahoga county, but will revert to the company in ten years if the county commissioners fail to use it for the purpose specified. The Midland Company is said to have paid $75,000 for the entire tract.

"An Ounce of Gold," a novel written by A. M. Ingraham of this city, is soon to be filmed by the Midland Company.

Incorporation of New Film.

Cleveland.—The New Film Company, a Cleveland concern, has just been incorporated at Columbus. It is capitalized at $10,000. Incorporators are H. S. Brown, R. J. Levy, L. M. Opper, Charles Morrison and Charles Rosenblatt.

Alhambra to Spend $20,000.

Cleveland.—More than $20,000 is to be expended by the Almabra moving picture theater for improvements during the next few weeks. City permits have just been issued for the installation of a balcony. A new $10,000 Austin pipe organ is also to be put in place and the entire house redecorated and newly furnished. A ventilation system which will force refrigerated air through the house is also to be installed.

Third Cincinnati Producing Company Quits

Owner of Majority of Stock of International Film Products Company Asks for Its Winding Up and Dissolution—F. J. Lamping Buys Theater and Airdome—"Quo Vadis?" Comes Back.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI.—The third moving picture concern in the producing field to go into liquidation within the past few weeks was placed in the hands of a receiver a few days ago, this being the International Film Products Co., with a studio at Clifton and Dixmyth avenues. Suit for the purpose was filed by Edward H. Thompson, owner of a majority of the stock in the company, who asked that the affairs of the corporation be wound up and dissolution accomplished. A similar suit was filed by Mr. Thompson in June, 1915, but matters were adjusted and no receiver appointed. In the present petition, however, it is declared that the objects of the corporation have entirely failed and that the plant has been abandoned and closed. The company's work was confined principally to news and advertising films, although it had ambitious plans for an extension of its field along novel lines. Thaddeus A. Nolan was appointed receiver without opposition. With the Veritas Photoplay Company and the Highland Film Corporation both in bankruptcy, this leaves the local field in about the same shape it was a few years ago, before the boom in moving pictures had induced the numerous attempts at the game which have since taken place.

Lamping Buys the Forest.

Cincinnati.—The property of the Forest Amusement Company, which consists of the Forest theater and airdome, on Forest avenue, in Avondale, has been purchased by F. Joseph Lamping, peculiar interest attaching to the deal not only on account of the prominence of the Forest, but by reason of the fact that Mr. Lamping is the owner of the Arcade theater, just around the corner from the Forest property, in Reading Road. McMahan & Schaengold have leased the Forest and operated it for some months, and it is understood that their lease extends to October, 1917, with extension rights. However, it is believed Mr. Lamping will be able to secure possession of the house for the coming season. The Forest ranked as one of the leading photoplay houses of the city immediately on its construction, about two years ago, by prominent business men who desired another good theater in Avondale for their own pleasure, and has been fairly successful in operation. By its acquisition Mr. Lamping acquires a virtual monopoly of the business in that immediate vicinity, with two big houses.

Quick Work by Pathe.

Cincinnati.—By extra rapid work on the part of the Pathe organization Cincinnati theatergoers were enabled to see moving pictures of the damage done in and around Jersey City by the terrible explosions of munition-laden cars and barges within thirty-six hours after the event took place.

Clifton Theater in the Courts.

Cincinnati.—Litigation of several sorts is now harassing the management of the Clifton theater, owned by the Clifton Amusement Company, on Ludlow avenue, Clifton. The house has for some time been in the hands of Jerome Jackson as receiver, and suit has now been filed on behalf of the Provident Savings Bank & Trust Company to foreclose a mortgage of $10,000 on the real estate and building occupied by the theater. Permission of the court in which the receivership was obtained was necessary for the filing of the suit, and this was duly granted. Foreclosure and the sale of the property seem due to follow in logical order, so that the exact status of the property during the profitable fall and winter season remain to be determined by the courts.

"Quo Vadis?" Comes Back.

Cincinnati.—The great seven-reel Kleine production, "Quo Vadis?" which was the sensation of the photoplay world a few years ago, occupied a profitable week at the Alhambra theater beginning on July 30. It will be recalled that the picture commanded high prices, theatergoers paying as high as $2 a seat to see it when first released. It is not surprising, therefore, that it drew heavily at the Albambra at the usual ten-cent admission charge maintained by that house.

Cincinnati Has a Three-Reeler.

Cincinnati.—The Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, which bids fair to be the sole survivor in this city of the several ambitious producing concerns started, has released what is said to be the first three-reel subject ever made in Cincinnati. The picture covers the activities of the International Rotary Convention in Cincinnati during the week of July 16, and it is said the demand for it for exhibition in the various cities represented has been so great that the four prints made have already been sent out. Every city in the country of any size had a delegation.

Young Player Killed in Jump from Machine

David Dicter, Enacting Role for Milo Pictures Corporation of Baltimore, Fractures Skull in Leap from Automobile—Had been a Member of Stock Company but Three Days

BALTIMORE.—As the director filmed his jump David Dicter, twenty years old, an actor, leaped from a speeding automobile, August 2, near the studio of the Milo Pictures Corporation, on the Frederick road, sustaining injuries which resulted in his death. Dicter, who lived on Collington avenue, in this city, had been rehearsing the part for two months and was engaged to begin work the beginning of the week. Up to that time he had been on probation. Yesterday he took the role of a tramp.

The characters were assembled at the studio about noon. The auto in which the characters were riding proceeded out Frederick road. Acting according to the lines, Dicter jumped from the speeding machine, intending to land on his shoulders. This scene was to have been one of the features.

Instead of landing on his shoulders the young man fell heavily on his head. The directors stopped the camera and with the aid of the other players lifted the unconscious youth to an automobile.

Dicter was taken to the studio and about 2 o'clock was removed to the Hahnemann General Hospital, where it was declared he had a fractured skull. Death resulted at 4.45 o'clock. The coroner will hold an inquest.

The Milo Pictures Corporation is a recently formed institution with offices located on Gay street, this city. Dicter had been on the stage, but decided to enter the silent drama on account of an off season in his work.

Pittsburgh Screen Club Takes to the Woods

Several Hundred Film Men Forget Business and Hold Outing—Franklin to Have Thousand-Seat House—Rex Under New Auspices—Death of Mrs. C. C. McKibben—Pitt to Show "Civilization."

By Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—The first summer outing of the Pittsburgh Screen Club at Wexford Park on Sunday, July 30, was a big success from every standpoint. It was a gala day for the moving picture men of the Smoky City, who turned out in good force with their friends. Between three and four hundred took advantage of the outing to escape the heat of the city and spend a pleasant day in the woods and all enjoyed themselves immensely. Entertainment and refreshments were provided in abundance. Dancing was a popular diversion throughout the afternoon and evening. A baseball game betwen teams backed by M. Feitler and G. J. Schweitzer was won by the former by a score of 7 to 2. Al. W. Cross and Max W. Herring officiated as umpires. The affair was ably arranged and carried out by the Summer Outing Committee, consisting of Charles Seltzer, chairman; Max W. Herring, P. A. Mansfield and John Long. The success of this first social gathering to be held during the summer months was such as to encourage plans for future affairs of the same kind.

Thousand-Seat House for Franklin.

A new thousand-seat moving picture house is being erected at Franklin, Pa., on the site of the Orpheum theater, which was discontinued some time ago. The old building has been razed and work on the new theater is going forward rapidly with the expectation that it will be ready for opening by October 1. F. J. Dion, the builder, is owner of both the old Olympic and the Princess theater in Franklin and is a well known figure in the exhibiting business of western Pennsylvania. The cost of erecting the new house will be about $25,000.

Rex Opens Under New Auspices.

Under the name of the New Regent theater, formerly the Cameraphone theater, at 1600 Fifth avenue, the latest addition to the chain of theaters operated by the Rex Amusement Company was opened to the public in an auspicious manner several days ago. The house had been overhauled and redecorated in record time at an expense of about $3,000 and now presents a very attractive appearance. Among other pleasing improvements is an orchestra of eight pieces. All indications are that the New Regent will prove a fine proposition under the new management, as it is being conducted on the same high basis as the other Rex theaters the Orpheum, the Rex and the Victor. J. Solz is house manager of the New Regent.

Fifty-cent Prices in 950 Town.

The success that can be attained by an up-to-date moving picture house in a small town is exemplified to an unusual degree in the Rex theater, conducted by Theodore Mikalowsky, at Masontown, Pa. The Rex is a 300-seat house, with standing room for 100. Despite the fact that Masontown has a population of but 950, the attractions offered are of the largest and best type obtainable and always show a fine return. Big features are used exclusively and the prices range as high as 50 cents.

Treasurer Shearer Fixes Up.

I. W. Shearer has completed the renovation of his Wilbur theater, 719 Homewood avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. The house is a model of comfort and attractiveness, embodying the results of many years experience and the personal attention of its owner. Mr. Shearer is a well known exhibitor and is treasurer of the Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania.

Black Lick's House Nearly Ready.

The theater of J. J. Palmer at Black Lick, Pa., is being rapidly completed and is scheduled to open about September 1. The house will have a seating capacity of 300 and will be up-to-date in every particular.

Manager McKibbin Loses Wife.

The deepest sympathy of the film interests is extended to Manager C. C. McKibbin, of the Pittsburgh branch of the Triangle Film Corporation, in the death of Mrs. McKibbin, who passed away Sunday, July 30, at Chautaqua, N. Y., following a three days' illness of pneumonia. The body was taken to New York City and the funeral was held from the home of Franklin Bien, father of Mrs. McKibbin. The sudden death of Mrs. McKibbin proved a shock to Pittsburgh film men and a host of friends, especially in the Triangle Exchange, where she was much loved and respected.

Mrs. Smith Buys Olympic.

The Olympic theater at Monaca, Pa., has been sold by Frank Adams to Mrs. A. J. Smith, a well known exhibitor of that section. Mr. Adams has purchased Harvey's theater, at New Brighton, from Edward Harvey, having taken possession of the house on August 1. Mr. Harvey owns the Grand theater at Wodlawn, and will hereafter devote his entire attention to that house.

"Civilization" for Pitt Theater.

Manager William Moore Patch has arranged for the showing of "Civilization" at the Pitt theater, Penn avenue and Seventh street, for an indefinite run beginning September 1.

Kornblum Looks Over the Big Town.

M. J. C. Kornblum, publicity manager of the Rowland & Clark theaters, Pittsburgh, Pa., has just returned from a brief stay in New York City, where he visited the Metro offices and studios, as well as other producing plants and several of the leading theaters. Mr. Kornblum saw several of the early episodes of the "Crimson Stain Mystery" the serial to be released soon by the Metro. It wil be shown in the various Rowland & Clark houses in this city.

Stout Building a New House.

A theater is being erected at Ridgeway, Pa., by William Stout, owner of the Orpheum theater at that place. The house will have a seating capacity of 450 and is to be strictly modern throughout. The latest equipment has been contracted for. The Orpheum will probably be closed after the new house has been opened, as Mr. Stout plans to devote his personal attention to the new undertaking.

Miss Sachs Engaged.

Miss Jesse Sachs, the popular cashier of the World Film's local office, is to be married early in the Fall. Miss Sachs was the first employe of the exchange in Pittsburgh and is said to know every exhibitor in this territory. The branch will lose a valuable and trustworthy worker when Miss Sachs leaves.

AMERICAN.

THE POWER OF MIND (Three Parts—Aug. 10).—The Cast: Dr. Bolling (George Gerhart); Clinton Wayne (Edward Coyen); Nadine Powers (Lizette Thorne); Randall Powers (Charles Newton); Cripple (George Field). Directed by Thomas Ricketts.

Dr. Hubert Bolling and his young partner, Clinton Wayne, are together in consultation. The doctor advances a theory to the effect that seemingly hereditary tendencies are developed only when the child realizes the traits to which the parent is given.

To this theory young Wayne takes exception.

Nadine Powers, the young girl to whom Wayne is engaged, is the daughter of Randall Powers, a wealthy man, whose source of income is ostensibly from certain investments in the West.

At this time a series of daring thefts and bank robberies take place in the city and are seemingly the act, or at least are under the supervision of one brain. Detectives are assigned to the case and eventually a clue is discovered.

Dr. Bolling is an intimate of Powers. Powers shows him his strong box and tells him that, should anything unexpected happen to him that he, Bolling, will become the guardian of Nadine and will find all necessary papers in the box. Bolling agrees to Powers' request to care for Nadine under such circumstances.

The detective bureau's trail leads directly to Powers as the master mind, but he is not apprehended before he has had ample warning. Realizing that the game is up and rather than serve a prison term, he commits suicide. Wayne is visiting at the house when Powers shoots himself and at the same time he and Nadine find the body the detectives enter. Nadine, unknown to Wayne, hears enough of their conversation to acquaint her with her father's past.

Dr. Bolling takes charge of affairs. Wayne explains to him what he has learned of Powers' life and they determine to keep the matter from Nadine. She, however, has learned sufficient. She is horrified with the knowledge that she is the daughter of a criminal and the thought preys upon her.

The effect of Nadine's secret thoughts is reflected in the temptation to steal, which grows gradually stronger. Eventually she succumbs to kleptomania, steals from a store and then though not caught, undergoes bitter remorse.

"It is useless for me to battle against the inevitable. I am the daughter of a criminal and have inherited the instincts of one," she tells Wayne. Despite his pleadings she insists upon breaking their engagement.

Dr. Bolling's aid is sought by Wayne. He listens to Wayne's statement and when it is finished tells him the whole affair is absurd. Powers' papers have been examined and he has learned that Nadine was adopted by him. Wayne hastens to Nadine with the news.

Nadine recovers from the effect of her morbid fancies. Wayne and she are happily married and Dr. Bolling resumes his practice. Wayne, however, visits him one day and cannot help remarking that his wife's case has proven beyond a shadow of a doubt the correctness of his theory upon inherited characteristics. "If Nadine," he says, "had really been Powers' daughter, no power upon earth could have saved her." Dr. Bolling gravely admits Wayne's statement, but as he leaves he turns to his colleague, who has overheard the conversation, and tells him that, while he can never tell Nadine or Wayne, the papers in his possession prove Nadine to have actually been Powers' daughter. He shows the certificate of Nadine's birth.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 48, "Delaware Water Gap and a Trip Through the Pocono Mountains (Aug. 9).—Since Baedeker has called Delaware Water Gap one of the fifteen scenic marvels of the United States it was only natural that the Gaumont company should include it in its interesting series of American points of interest, See America First. The view from some of the numerous promontories along the mountain paths has few equals east of the Rocky Mountains. One of the prettiest pictures taken was of the Delaware river as it is seen for miles winding its way to the sea. The entire region abounds in beautiful mountain brooks, falls and cataracts. The slopes are heavily wooded, and there are lavish displays of mountain laurel and rhododendron. These make for beautiful screen pictures, and full advantage has been taken of them. Joined with the Delaware Water Gap in popular interest is that interesting playground known as the Pocono Mountains. It has also been pictured for this Gaumont release. The salient features in these 300 square miles of scenic beauty have been culled for screen review.

REEL LIFE NO. 14, "Ancient Asiatic Architecture"—(Aug. 6).—Interesting pictures of ancient Asiatic architecture, showing famous temples and tombs, which have occupied the attention of historians and archaeologists for hundreds of years

Another division of this interesting educational subject takes the spectators on a visit to the largest duck farm on Long Island. As nearly 5,000 ducks are shipped to New York from this place, the magnitude of the farm can well be imagined. The duck is shown from the egg until he goes to the market and to the manufacturer of feather beds.

MUSTANG.

THE COURTIN' OF CALLIOPE CLEW (Two parts—Aug. 11).—The cast: Calliope (Frank Borzage); Prudence (Anna Little); Dr. Matthews (Charles Newton).

Dr. Matthews, professor of philosophy in a small New England college, is dismissed, and though heart-broken he and his daughter, Prudence, start in a prairie schooner for the West. At St. Jo, which in 1850 was the outfitting point for the great west, they meet Calliope, so named because of the vast carrying quality of his lungs. He accompanies them on their journey. On the way west, it falls to Calliope's lot to do them many little services, which, on account of the native modesty of Pru and the innate manhood of Calliope, are necessarily surreptitious.

They lose one horse and Calliope saves the other from the hands of a thievish outlaw, compelling the latter to give up his own for the use of the immigrants. Later Dr. Matthews, spent with the exactions of a trip for which nature never intended him, dies, and is buried by Pru, alone in the wastes of the desert. In her great loneliness she feels the protecting presence of Calliope, who is always a little behind, yet ever in sight, and at length, in a moment of dread, when she seems but a little speck in vast expanse of the world, a note reaches her by way of a limb stretched across the trail, offering her the heart and hand and home of Calliope. The love situations are purely psychological, as the characters barely meet face to face, yet a love interest pervades the entire story, culminating in the complete surrender of Pru, to the happiness of Calliope.

CUB.

JERRY AND THE COUNTERFEITERS (Aug. 18).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Daisy (Claire Alexander); Hank (George George); Father (Louis FitzRoy); Constable (Gordon MacGregor); Waiter (Arthur Mund); Bill (Ray Lincoln); Hotel "Fixture" (Jefferson Osborne); Counterfeiters (Joseph Von Meter, Harry Jackson and Dave Allen).

Jerry, pursued by the police, makes his escape by boarding a train. The first stop is a small town, and as Jerry alights to view his surroundings he is detected by a conductor and turned over to the constable. About to be imprisoned, the prisoner gets possession of the "law's" club; beats the constable, and, locking him in a cell, escapes.

Jerry is attracted by Daisy, who is strolling through the fields with Hank, her sweetheart. Jerry's eyes begin to work and Daisy is a victim. This aroused Hank, who subdues the mischiefmaker only to be the unfortunate one in the end, when Jerry crashes a brick over his head. As Hank recovers, Jerry is forced to flee.

Jerry's speed carries him into the hills and he comes across a band of counterfeiters. He is admitted into the band when it is decided that he is not dangerous. But the huge stacks of new currency tempt Jerry and he is caught in the act of storing a lot of it in his pockets and ejected from the camp.

Government officers searching in the district for the money "floaters," come across Jerry. They are about to arrest him when he reveals the hiding place of the counterfeiters and offers to lead the men to the place. A raid follows and the entire band is taken away, leaving Jerry in possession of everything.

CENTAUR.

DESTINY'S BOOMERANG (Aug. 19).—The cast: Jasper Lyle (Frederick Montague); Mrs. Lyle (Mary Talbot); Margaret (Margaret Gibson); William Carlton (William Clifford); Karl Von Koenig (Victor Rottman).

Margaret Lyle is the daughter of a retired soap manufacturer who is ambitious to shine socially. William Carlton, a wealthy young bachelor, has courted Margaret persistently, but Margaret's father does not approve of his attentions. Margaret thinks she loves William and her mother is friendly. William proposes, is accepted, but the ambitious old man refuses permission. Karl Von Koenig, a German, is in destitute circumstances and, failing to receive a long expected letter, has become despondent and in desperation decides to end his troubles. He leaves a note in his room to the effect that he is unable to get home to fight for his country and as the only employment he can obtain is in a munition factory, he prefers death to making bullets to slay his own brothers, and proceeds upon his way.

William leaves the Lyle home feeling that he has been insulted and humiliated. He is startled by the stopping of his car. He goes to the assistance of his victim, none other than Karl, painfully but not seriously injured.

Karl improves rapidly, but he has forgotten his past. William takes him to his home when he is able to leave the hospital, feeling he is responsible for Karl's future.

The soap manufacturer spends much of his time in his library and his wife discovers that his favorite book is "The Titled Families of Europe." When Margaret and William learn this they hit on a plan to hold the old man up to ridicule and thereby perhaps amenable to their determination to wed. Once decided on, the plot quickly develops and Karl, in gratitude for William's kindness, agrees to help.

The plan is to introduce Karl as a German nobleman, have him court Margaret and propose marriage and then give the facts as to Karl's real identity to the newspapers, whereupon the plotters figure that Margaret's father will readily agree to a hasty marriage between Margaret and William and thereby attract the attention of the press away from the old gentleman and his bogus count.

The plan works without a hitch. Count Karl is enthusiastically welcomed by Margaret's father and after a brief courtship is accepted as a prospective son-in-law without delay. As arranged between the conspirators, Karl is to leave town as soon as this result has been accomplished. Margaret and Karl realize the joke is really on them, for during the many meetings which occurred, while the bogus courtship lasted, they had become very fond of each other.

Margaret's father next morning reads of the hoax perpetrated upon him and is furious with rage.

Karl arrives at the station and is surprised to meet Margaret, who tells him she intends to go with him, as she considers she is his promised wife with her father's consent. Karl tries to remonstrate with her, but Margaret will not be denied and the young couple board the train and ride off together.

Margaret's family and William are shocked when they receive a wire informing them of Margaret's marriage to Karl. The father now realizes that the joke is on William instead of himself and wires his forgiveness. Afterward it develops Karl is none other than Count Von Koenig.

BEAUTY.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN, THE CAVE MAN Aug. 9).—The cast: Billy Van Deusen (John Steppling); the Black Beauty (Carol Halloway); Rechinald Rite (John Sheehan); the Chauffeur (Dick Rosson).

Poor Billy! Every place he went, every time he lingered, every time he thought—he saw the face of the fair one. That is the condition of mind that Billy was in when he sat in his spacious den and wondered. Billy's soliloquies were brought to an end by the abrupt entrance of his friend, Rechinald Rite, a delver into the history of the past. To Rechinald did Billy tell his troubles, and as he paced from one end of the room to the other, eventually coming to the window, he stopped short. "There," he fairly yelled, "look!" And Rechinald gazed out of the window and saw the Black Beauty.

Billy floundered, but Rechinald smiled. He took one of the books from under his arm and showed it to Billy. It was a treatise on the tactics of the cave man, and as he showed Billy a full screen illustration of Man and his Mate the thing became animated and Billy got an idea of what he was going to do to the Black Beauty, who so mysteriously had worked her way into his heart.

The Black Beauty was outside of Billy's apartments on the evening that he decided to find out once and for all if the Cave Man was a wise guy. The Black Beauty was right behind him. Billy led her a merry chase and then with a sudden swoop he turned on her, captured her and threw her into an automobile. Not stopping to see if he was stealing or borrowing the machine, he started out for a little place in the wilds. And he got here! But the Black Beauty put up an awful fight. Billy was there like a duck—he had to be on the edge of the lake, and although he hated to, he had to get rather rough and carry the beautful one to a little log cabin.

Here he told her that he would not longer stand for the mysterious gaze and the naughty shadowing. She had taken his heart by storm and mystery and now he would force her to marry him or he would know the reason why. She, instead of becoming tempestuous, merely smiled and proceeded to idle away her time writing on a small note book.

Finally Billy locked her in a cabin and went away to think it over. When Billy returned to the cabin he found it empty. As he sat by the little desk in the cabin he chanced to look at a blotter. With the aid of the mirror he fathomed its secret. The Black Beauty was a sob sister getting "atmosphere."

TOO BAD, EDDIE (Aug. 13).—The cast: Eddie Torr (Orral Humphrey); Tad Pole (Joe Massey); Rettina Coyne (Jo Taylor); Silas Coyne (Hugh Bennett).

Eddie Torr was the proprietor of one of those small town newspapers that take interest in everything but finance. Eddie's general assistant, printer, proofreader, secretary, janitor, etc., was Tad Pole, who had grown thin in the service—waiting for his salary. Eddie asked Tad to wait until he married the daughter of the town banker.

Bettina, Silas Coyne's daughter, was not young. But daddy had decided that Bettina should marry brains and future. Bettina was socially inclined and had a leaning toward Eddie, the editor. Of course Eddie could give her all the necessary publicity that would make her a small town society matron.

Eddie was beset by numerous creditors. Eddie had been too chivalrous to enter a woman into the matter of finance, but necessity forced him, so he flashed Bettina's pictures and announced that soon he would be the spouse of the wealthiest girl in town. The creditors were dubious. Bettina was coming down the street. One of the creditors suggested a scheme that would prove whether their accounts were good, so they all withdrew into a side room while Eddie greeted Bettina.

Bettina came in with a smile and an item for the Morning Scare. Eddie had never made an advance toward the girl and perspiration beaded on his brow as he gazed toward the other room and realized that the success or doom of his credit lay behind those watching walls. Eddie stalled, but he convinced his creditors there was something in his claim and induced them to take small advertisements.

Tad saw the banker reprove his daughter for being with Eddie. Failing to get any promise of money, the printer, while Eddie was asleep, issued a paper that reflected his feelings, among other things, stating the alleged alliance was off. Eddie was awakened by a large party in the late morning, the banker at its head. Eddie announced the paper was dead and departed the town.

VOGUE.

SOME LIARS (Two Parts—Aug. 13).—The cast: Boss of His House (Rube Miller); His Wife (Gypsy Abbott); Boss of Her House (Eva Thatcher); Her Husband (Ben Turpin).

Ben's wife is the boss of her house. Rube is the boss of his house and dominates his wife, a very timid woman. Upon leaving for work, both men are cautioned about coming home late, but they meet, proceed to a saloon and partake of about ten drinks. They clean out the saloon and start home, but after gazing in Ben's window, and seeing their wives throwing knives at a crayon drawing on the wall, decide the saloon is a safe retreat. The bartender has by this time summoned aid, and with the assitance of a few policemen, they manage to chase Rube and Ben to a pier, where they remove their coats and jump in. The cops find their coats and also Ben's address in one of the pockets.

The officer returns the coats to the wives and tells them he believes the owners are drowned. However, Rube and Ben are rescued by the motorboat squad and are sentenced to thirty days for dirtying the water. They return home, where their wives are in mourning, but are afraid to enter the house. While pondering as to what they should do, they read an article in a newspaper of a rich man losing his memory after inheriting a large sum and disappearing. His wife, finding him after thirty days, completely restores his memory. Rube and Ben, on reading of this extraordinary case, plan to be a couple of nuts. An officer, seeing them acting queer, runs on to them and in the course of the argument, their wives come from the house and the officer is dismissed.

But now they must explain to their wives. Rube starts an excellent tale of how they were walking along the street and, hearing a commotion issuing from a house near by, they rushed to the window where they say they saw two thugs endeavoring to rob a rich man and his daughter. After describing many wonderful adventures, Rube's continuity gets tangled, so Ben takes up the story and tells the wives another version. It is a good yarn, but Ben's wife is suspicious, and asks questions. This takes them off their guard. At this moment, to cap the climax, an officer enters with a massage from his captain to the effect that if Rube and Ben pull any more stunts they will receive another thirty days, whereupon the wives are assured that their story has been false and proceed to give Rube and Ben a good mauling.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE (Chapter No. 13—Two parts—Aug. 14).—The cast: Olga and Morton, who were captured by the bandits, are taken to their den. There Olga discovers Burke's copy of Robinson's Philosophy, which one of the bandits found in the mountains. This copy contains a notation on the flyleak as follows: "To obtain the secret of my invention, read every seventh word on page 61, my copy of Metallurgy."

Olga realizes that she has but to get a copy of Metallurgy to discover the secret. She and Morton escape from the bandit's den. Their escape being discovered, the bandits follow. Olga and Morton discover one horse. Morton snatches the book from Olga, mounts the horse and escapes. The bandits follow. Olga hides and works her way back to the city. Hope is suffering untold misery as the day for his approaching marriage nears. Hook is put to desperate straits to support Cleo.

Mahlin and Satsuma search the mountains for the lost copy of Robinson's Philosophy. They are captured by the bandits. Mahlin discovers that the chief of the bandits belongs to his secret society. In a conversation, the chief tells him that Olga and Morton had escaped with the copy of Robinson's Philosophy. Morton, in fear of Olga, seeks obscure quarters while he is searching for Burke's copy of Metallurgy. Olga is warned that her employees are still waiting for her to obtain "The Secret of the Submarine." Cleo, driven desperate by the sacrifice Hook is making, leaves him.

The day before Hope is to be married, he overhears Inez Mahlin telling a friend that the news of her having spent the night alone with Hope in the mountain cabin has never become public, but, hearing he has been left a fortune, she has used it as her lever to lure him into a marriage. Hope denounces her, breaks off the engagement and makes preparations to return to Cleo. He receives the following from the Naval Defense Board:

"The United States is facing a critical situation. A foreign government has defied us. The President has asked the length of time it will take to mobilize our Army and Navy. The government agents have reported that the search of the mountains for the lost Philosophy is unavailing. The Chairman states that the U. S. is not in a position to fight and that without the secret of the submarine is not sufficiently prepared even to defend the honor of its beloved flag.

Hope, filled with renewed zeal, states that he will leave at once to devote his life and fortune to its recovery.

Andrew Slocum sends Andy, his son, to Winkle's factory to spy on the latter's secrets. Many who have been buying the Winkle pickles are taken ill. Mrs. Winkle suggests a partnership. Frank Clendon); Fred Probert, Jr., age 7 (Jack Curtis); Edith Probert, age 5 (Runa Hodges); Fred Probert, Jr., age 21 (Harry Spingler); Edith Probert, age 19 (Bliss Milford); Tom Martindale (Rudolph Cameron).

Fred Probert, an inventor, devotes all his time to his factory in experimental work. Mrs. Probert has never uttered a complaint. Probert makes an engagement to take her to the theater, but is delayed at his factory. Mrs. Probert, fearful of their being late for the performance, telephones him and is informed that he cannot possibly neglect his work. He suggests that Edward Martindale, a widower and friend of the family, take her in his place. Martindale accepts the invitation.

After the theater Martindale bids her good night, and later stealthily returns to Mrs. Probert's boudoir. Martindale, opening the door, sees the object of his quest and stealthily kisses her. In the meantime Probert returns home. With her eyes still unopened, Mrs. Probert imagines the kiss is one from her husband and expresses delight at his early return. Probert sees her and Martindale in a compromising attitude, and charges her with unfaithfulness.

Misjudging his wife, Probert institutes a suit for separation, and a separation agreement is signed. Probert takes possession of the boy, the wife having the custody of the girl.

Fourteen years pass. Edith Carroll Probert is nearing the completion of her education. Fred Probert, Jr., is near the end of his college course. While at college he has become the bosom friend of Tom Martindale, the son of Edward.

Mrs. Probert's fortune has been failing and she purchases with her remaining funds the famous gambling house known as the "House of Mirrors." It is there she meets her son, who is introduced as "Mr. Brown," and his friend, Tom Martindale, who is introduced as "Mr. Jones." The daughter, intending to surprise her mother, and unknown to her, calls at the "House of Mirrors" during an evening when the two boys are present. They both fall in love with her. Fred wears a ring which his father gave him and which had been given to Mr. Probert by his wife. At the time when young Probert proposes to the daughter and asks the mother's consent to the marriage, she recognizes the lad as her son.

The father, trying to break up his son's relation with the notorious "House of Mirrors," determines to call upon the proprietor and is shocked to see his own wife. He charges her with an attempt to ruin the boy's life, as she had tried to ruin his. She swears that she has never been unfaithful. Probert, impressed by her oath, visits Martindale, determined to get the truth of the events which had occurred years before. Martindale tells him he could have listened to the truth that night and that while he (Martindale) was a blackguard, Mrs. Probert was entirely innocent of any wrongdoing.

Probert returns to the "House of Mirrors" with his boy, and a general reconciliation takes place.

Then scenes are shown in the cities, showing the wonderful changes brought about in the last few decades. They now have electric light, street cars and all modern conveniences, beautiful parks and temples. The markets are not so modern and one can still see ancient conveyances.

The opera house is a magnificent structure built in classic style. Native workmen are shown hauling stone. Here labor is so cheap that it is less expensive than horses or steam.

L-KO.

THE MOTHER-IN-LAW (Two Reels—Aug. 16).—The cast: Billie (Billie Ritchie); Lucille, his wife (Lucille Hutton); His Mother-in-Law (Margaret Joslin); Her Best Beau (Harry Todd).

Billie's life was not a happy one; his mother-in-law interfered with things. One morning Billie desired to sleep a little longer than usual, but mother-in-law prevented. She tried to get Lucille to leave him, but she had hopes of reforming Billie and suffered in silence. Ma gave Billie a good deal of punishment.

Billie thought if he got somebody else for her to abuse she would probably allow him to live his life as he chose to live it. He succeeded in baiting a man and finally got her married to him, but still all was not well. When ma absolutely refused Billie admittance to the house this was the last straw. He would die, thought Billie, but not without satisfaction first. He hired a gang of thugs to do their worst with ma and pa. Gaining entrance to the house through the window, they tied the happy bride and groom to their beds and then pulled the house down the road to the railroad tracks. Billie had succeeded in overcoming an engineer on an engine and, running the thing at the rate of ninety miles an hour, proceeded on his way. In order to save themselves the two had to make a wild jump from the top of the house. When the crash came, happiness is an inadequate word to explain Billie's feeling as he looked back and saw the cause of all his troubles underneath a pile of wreckage. Billie in his glee started to climb to the top of the engine, and not thinking sat on the steam pipe, which blew him sky-high. An eagle picked him up and flew away.

JOKER.

SOUP AND NUTS (Aug. 19).—The cast: Hammanda (Gale Henry); Lillie (Lillian Peacock); Frank (Milburn Morante); Capt. Salt (William Franey); Heine (Charles Conklin). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Allan Curtis.

Lillie, the daughter of Hamanda, is beloved by Frank, but Hamanda strongly discourages this attachment. Captain Salt loves Hamanda and is coming to call upon her when Frank, endeavoring to escape the wrath of Hamanda bumps into him. Captain Salt suggests that Hamanda and Lillie take a trip upon his ship and so avoid the nuisance—and, likewise, give him an opportunity of pressing his own suit. Hamanda agrees and the sulky Lillie is dragged away.

Their departure is seen by Frank, who hides on the back of the machine until they arrive at the wharf and, having no money, uses a boat which he finds to take him out to the ship. As he attempts climbing upon the deck, he sees Heine, the mate, and falls into the water in trying to escape him. He hides in a boat, and here Lillie brings food, but he is so ill he is not able to eat it.

The crew plot against Salt; and just as that worthy is assisting the idol of his heart at the rail, they tie the two; Lillie sees this and with the aid of Frank rescues the pair—thus winning the good will of the discomforted couple and so Hamanda's consent to their marriage—and poor Heine and the crew are made to walk the gangplank, which in "land" language means a dip in the ocean.

THE BATTLE OF CHILE CON CARNE (Aug. 14).—The cast: Lem Forby (Eddie Lyons); Senorita Tamale (Priscilla Dean); General Siesta (Lee Moran). Written by Charles J. Wilson, Jr. Produced by L. N. Chaudet.

Lem notices that a messenger arrives with a letter for the General, and, according to his correspondence lessons, that is one important thing—to obtain all important documents. With the Senorita he plans to get them.

The General with his guitar starts out to call upon the Senorita; she tries to obtain the papers and get the General to show them to her; then Lem, who has hidden in the rooms, takes the papers and runs, closely pursued by the General and his army.

Lem and the Senorita are nearly captured, when the Senorita offers to change clothes with Lem; this is done and the General with his army, catching a glimpse of them, decides that he will follow the girl and leave the army to capture Lem. He nearly captures what he supposes is the girl, but Lem manages to elude him and escapes across the border where the guards will not allow the General to come. The army appear with the girl and her identity is learned. Lem grows jealous but is not allowed to cross the border. Lem recalls the document and shows it to the guard, who disgustedly translates the message which Lem had thought so important as a message stating that they had found a new recipe for chile con carne.

They are in the Land of the Golden Harp, where the shrill notes of the flageolet are unknown. After much pleasure and happiness, and against the admonition of the Good Fairy, who tells him that the music from his flageolet will awaken the old Fury of the Forest, Joe forgets and starts a tune on his favorite instrument. Immediately the old Fury appears and all Fairyland disappears. Joe and his little companion are found by the searchers. Episode 13 left Peg and the doctor in the hands of Marcus and his band of ruffians. While trying to escape, Dr. Lund was shot and fell limp on the bed.

It is fortunate for Peg and the doctor that the circus people arrive in time to save them. Just as Peg is about to be overcome they all arrive and succeed in driving Marcus away. Dr. Lund proves to be but slightly wounded, so they all go home.

The next morning old Dr. Lund is not feeling as well as usual when Mrs. Lund comes to give him his medicine. He is suspicious. When the doctor sees his wife trying to poison him, he gets out of bed and starts to strangle his wife. The exertion proves too much and he falls over dead.

When Dr. [illegible] and Peg come in and learn of the old man's death they are heartbroken. Peg is about to leave him when she sees Marcus and his assistant come in. They talk to Mrs. Lund in the next room, and as Peg warily creeps to eavesdrop she hears Mrs. Lund say, "This will leaves everything to his only child. Peg is the rightful heir and must be gotten out of the way." Peg manages to get away undiscovered.

Mrs. Lund's next move is to give Marcus a letter, putting him in full charge of the circus. He goes to the tent and insolently tries to boss the company and actually insults Peg in her dressing-room.

During the afternoon performance, when all the performers are in the ring, Marcus breaks open Peg's trunk to see if he can find Flip's letter.

Peg has another of her fits just as she is about to perform in the ring. She rushes about, attacking the spectators and performers, and finally goes to her dressing-room. Here Flip tries to quiet her, but she viciously turns on him and almost chokes him, when she falls exhausted to the ground. Here Marcus finds her prostrate body and he and his assistant carry her off.

ADVENTURES OF PEG O' THE RING, NO. 15 (Final Episode—"Retribution").—Marcus and his assailant seized the opportunity to abduct Peg. They rush her to the local office of the circus, which is closed because of Dr. Lund's death. Here they leave her gagged and bound and then go to report to Mrs. Lund and to give her the letter found in Flip's trunk.

The villains might have accomplished their purpose if Dr. Lund, Jr., had not come down stairs just at that moment and overheard them telling where they had put Peg. Rushing to the office, he is chagrined to find everything locked. He decides to climb up to the room where Peg was confined. Marcus sees him, but as he tries to push the doctor out, the latter, clinging to the sill with one hand and grabbing Marcus with the other, pulls him out of the window himself.

As he is untieing Peg Marcus comes back and tries to shoot him and in the struggle that ensues Marcus is knocked unconscious. His man attacks the doctor and a fight takes place. Wires pull lose and there is a short-circuit which ignites some old rubbish standing in a corner. The flames mount higher. At last Dr. Lund succeeds in choking his opponent into submission and he then proceeds to untie Peg.

The whole staircase is a mass of fire. Peg and the doctor are forced to make their escape through the window. They reach the street safely and then the doctor takes Peg to his office, where he performs an operation with an X-ray apparatus to remove the effects of Peg's strange inheritance. They then rush to the doctor's home, where the will is to be read.

At the doctor's house Mrs. Lund is very happy, as she thinks she has at last succeeded in getting rid of Peg. Imagine her surprise when Flip, her son, and Peg walk into the room. But she produces the letter which was found in Flip's trunk.

"This letter left by Peg's mother shows that she has no claim on my late husband's fortune," she says triumphantly.

"I had that letter made to mislead you," says Flip. "This is the real letter and it proves that Peg is the first and only child of your late husband and rightful heir to his entire fortune."

Mrs. Lund is crushed. Dr. Lund asks Peg to forgive his mother for all the wrong she has done her, and Peg willingly agrees to do this. Then she accepts the doctor's proposal of marriage.

Soon after all the circus people arrive to congratulate the couple on their new-found happiness.

RED FEATHER.

A YOKE OF GOLD (Five Parts—Aug. 14).—The cast: Jose Garcia (Emory Johnson); Luis Lopez (Alfred Allen); Padre Amador (R. Morris); Castro Arrellanes (H. Skinner); Carmen (Dorothy Davenport).

In the days of '49 some of the aristocracy of old California contrived to gather unto themselves more than their share of the precious yellow metal which abounded.

There were those among the populace who resented this state of affairs. Luis Lopez was one. Smarting under the yoke of the aristocracy, Lopez determined to champion the cause of the people. Accordingly, he set about to enlist the aid of others and chose Jose Garcia for an ally. Jose finally agreed to wage a campaign against Don Ortega and Don Mendoza.

Jose set out for the home of Don Ortega, whom it was agreed that he should rob. Lopez chose Don Mendoza as his prey. It was agreed between Lopez and Jose that the gold which they hoped to gain would be devoted to the uplift of the oppressed.

Jose's destination lay across the desert. Stopping to slake his thirst, he was horrified to find that he had lost his canteen. He found instead a crucifix which his priest had secreted in his pack-saddle. Tearing it off, he flung it with anger into the sands and passed on.

Senor Arrelanes, another aristocrat, with his daughter Carmen were traveling in the same direction, intending to visit their cousin, Don Ortega. They found the crucifix and later came upon Jose, exhausted. They bore him to the home of Don Ortega, where Carmen nursed him back to health.

Lopez reached the home of Don Mendoza and asked for lodging. In the night he crept into the living-room and stole the bags of gold which his hosts had deposited in a chest. Surprised by Mendoza's wife, Lopez set upon her. Mendoza came to the rescue and drove Lopez out.

Jose had fallen a willing victim to Carmen, and vowed to himself that he would not be guilty of robbing those who had befriended him. He set forth on his return to Santa Barbara to meet Lopez. Lopez threatened that he himself would take the money.

During the night Jose stole Mendoza's gold from beneath Lopez's pillow and hastened away to warn Ortega. Discovering Jose's absence, Lopez quickly gave pursuit, vowing to kill the traitorous Jose.

Jose arrived in time to warn Ortega so that when Lopez arrived he fell into the trap laid for him. Carmen at last prevailed upon Lopez to forsake his evil ways. And so when Carmen had yielded to the pleadings of her impetuous lover, Jose, Lopez stood nearby to share their happiness, and later returned to Santa Barbara, there to spend the remainder of his days with the gentle priests at the Mission.

A TEMPORARY TRUCE (Two Parts—Aug. 15—Biograph Reissue, No. 73).—The cast: Prospector's wife (Blanche Sweet); Mexican Jim (Charles H. Mailes); his wife (Claire McDowell); Indian chief (W. Chrystie Miller); his son (Robert Narron).

Mexican Jim, a good-for-nothing of the mining camp, spends most of his time in the tavern of the little town. On this particular day, having drunk up more than usual, he quarrels with Jack Hardy, a young prospector. Jack, under other circumstances, would have disdainfully ignored Jim's drunken garble, but he felt in none too good a humor, for things were not prospering with him, and his young wife was growing homesick for the East. Hence Jack's temper was on tap and he made Jim the laughing stock of the town by giving him a walloping. Jim vows to get even; but how? He carries off Jack's wife and leaves a derisive note for Jack, and another at the saloon, to the effect that the joke is turned. Jim has forcibly taken Jack's wife as far as an old deserted well-box in the hills, when Jack, who started after them, comes up and opens fire. Jim has the advantage, for he is sheltered by the well-box, and furthermore, Jack is careful for fear of hitting his wife. This warfare does not last long because of an outbreak among the young Indian braves, who have started out to avenge the death of one of their tribe at the hands of a party of drunken cutthroats, so Jack and Jim form a truce to fight the common enemy. The finish of the story is unique, and the production as a whole is one of the most convincing western stories ever made.

LIFE SAVERS (Aug. 17).—The cast: Plump (Babe Hardy); Runt (Billy Ruge); Miss Aqua (Ray Godfrey); Neptune (Dad Bates); Old Maid (Helen Gilmore).

Though Plump and Runt had yet to save the first life, it was through no fault of theirs, for the one with his antediluvian flivver and the other with his leaky old boat spent the days hoping that someone would give them the opportunity they so anxiously longed for. The visit of the beautiful young diver, Miss Aqua, accompanied by her manager, caused the break between our heroes. Each fell for her charms and sought means to humiliate the other. Love and jealousy occupied all their thoughts. First one, then the other would be favored by the diver's smiles, until, driven almost crazy, Runt decides to get rid of his fat rival by digging a hole under the water, and enticing there his hated one-time pal. A kittish old maid is the first victim, and poor Plump, attempting to rescue her, himself falls in and the two are buried in the ocean bed. The victor now escorts his loved one into the water, thinking to gloat over his rival's destruction, but, remorse seizing him, he aids in the rescue of the almost choked Plump. The diver now gives an exhibition of her powers and, pretending to be overcome, the two gallants dash to her rescue by boat and flivver. The flivver arrives first, but explodes, throwing its occupants high in the air and upsetting Runt, who is now over the spot in his boat. However, their united efforts bring the charmer safely to land, where, to their horror, they are met and thanked by the lady's husband. Once more, their best intentions foiled, Plump and his pal cool their fevered and disappointed brows beneath the salty waves.

COMRADES (Aug. 18).—The cast: Pokes (Robert Burns); Jabbs (Walter Stull); Landlady (Helen Gilmore); Her Daughter (Ethel Burton).

Comrades in many a midnight burglary and cellmates in the prison where they are spending their summer vacations, Pokes and Jabbs have formed a friendship that seemed unbreakable. When their sentences are served Pokes tells Jabbs that henceforth he will follow the path of honest living. Scornfully, Jabbs parts from his old comrade, and hies himself back to the old surroundings. Pokes, however, seeks shelter in a boarding house to which he has been attracted by the charms of the landlady's daughter. Pokes, by his manner, quickly wins the smiles of fair Ethel, much to the disgust and envy of the other lodgers, especially two young men who have also sought to charm the capricious damsel. In order to secure revenge upon the man who has not only stolen away from them their share of the meals and the affections of Ethel, the two roomers plant a dummy in Pokes' room and succeed in convincing the latter that a robber has entered the room. Frightened nearly to death after alarming all the other boarders of the boarding house and scaring them also, Pokes is induced by the two schemers to call the police. While seeking police assistance, Jabbs, who has reverted to his old profession of housebreaking, has entered the room of Pokes and sought shelter in the closet. Pokes returns with a worthy representative of the law, who, after exposing the dummy, berates Pokes for having sought to ridicule him. Pokes, left in the room with the dummy, discovers Jabbs hiding in the closet and also learns that in the Ethel, discovering the loss of the necklace, gives the alarm and the policemen and others immediately suspect Pokes of the theft. Pokes has been struggling desperately in his room with the villain Jabbs for the possession of the necklace and succeeds in wresting it from the latter, after, which he hurls his old partner in crime out through the window. When the policeman rushes in the door, Pokes is in the act of admiring the necklace, preparatory to returning it to Ethel. However, circumstantial evidence causes it to look black for Pokes, and quickly realizing this fact, the would-be hero dives out through the window and away before the law can again fasten its grasp upon him.

VIM FEATURE COMEDY.

THEIR DREAM HOUSE (Aug. 16).—A bad real estate man sells a phoney house to a young couple. They are delighted with it until things begin to happen. The water won't run until after they have turned on every tap; then it runs too much and floods the house before they are aware of what is happening. The gas works on the installment plan and then won't behave. Things go from bad to worse, until the house starts to leak in a heavy storm. Hubby steals a big umbrella from the real estate man's buggy and comes home. The wind blows the door shut, and when he kicks it the panel bursts, being made of paper. With the umbrella the couple are sheltering themselves as best they can when the roof of the house blows away and they are engulfed by the rain. What happens afterward is left to the imagination.

LUBIN.

A LESSON IN LABOR (Two Parts—Aug. 15).—The cast: John Seward III (L. C. Shumway); Eleanor Janeway (Velma Whitman); Terry Walsh (George Routh); Mrs. Janeway (Adelaide Bronti); John Seward II (Melvin Mayo); Walsh's old father (Sidney Hayes). Written by Robert E. Rinehart. Directed by Paul Powell.

John Seward 2nd brings his son, John 3rd, up to take charge of Seward mills and continue the Seward system of "every cog must show its profit." The young man is affianced to Eleanor Janeway, daughter of a rich mother. The elder Seward dies and the first order of the new Seward head is to discharge all employees over 50. This discharges Walsh, one of the most respected workmen in the place.

Walsh's son, a capable young fellow, plots a reckoning and kidnaps Seward and his fiancee, Eleanor, from Seward's yacht. Walsh takes Eleanor and Seward to a lonely shore of an island and there at a first physical encounter beats him into a state of semi-slavery. He works his young master in a fashion of work Seward never realized existed. Seward is injured and Walsh takes care of him. In turn Walsh is injured just as the searching party finds Seward and his captor.

Seward, however, has learned the lesson of work. He tells the searchers that he left the yacht as an experiment. Walsh is not arrested. Back at the mill Seward rescinds his order. The old man returns to work and his act, together with the experience on the island, creates in him and Eleanor a feeling of mutual respect and love they would not have enjoyed except for the drastic methods of Walsh.

THE GERM OF MYSTERY (Three Parts—Aug. 14).—The cast: Dr. John Comstock (Guy Oliver); Alexander Daniels (Frank Clark); Letitia (Fritzi Brunett); Mrs. Bennington (Lillian Hayward); Clifford Ainsley (Frederick Freeman). William Robert Daly, director.

Dr. John Comstock is a specialist on poisons. Alexander Daniels, inventor and manufacturer of "dynite," has a beautiful daughter, Letitia, with whom Dr. Comstock is in love.

Dr. Comstock shows Letitia and Mrs. Bennington, an old friend of the Daniels family, his exhibit of a Karakut spider from Mongolia, whose poison is sure death.

Clifford Ainsley, Daniels' partner, is in love with Letitia, and proposes to the girl with the consent of her father. Letitia rejects Ainsley. She says, "You know that the formula for making 'dynite' rests with father and myself. I suspect you want to marry me in the hope of getting the secret."

Daniels dies suddenly in the night, and a scientific detective is summoned. He discovers that Daniels died from poison of a Karakut spider, and suspects Dr. Comstock.

Letitia discovers that there are tons of unprepared materials in the mixing room of her father's factory. Fearing spontaneous combustion if the materials are not mixed at once, she repairs to the laboratory to prepare the secret formula. There she is bound and gagged by a mysterious assailant, who attaches wires to the time clock used by the watchman, so that when he registers his time, an electric spark will enter the laboratory and cause an explosion.

The detective and Dr. Comstock arrive at the factory just a minute before the watchman will register his time. They search for Letitia and finally come upon her lying helpless on the floor. The wires are broken just in time to prevent a terrific explosion.

Mrs. Berrington had discovered a paper which she had given to the detective, who arrests the butler. The detective informs Mrs. Berrington that the paper she had found was the butler's undoing; that he was the chief plotter representing interests anxious to secure the secret formula.

Dr. Comstock is thus exonerated.

A BEAR OF A STORY (Aug. 19).—The cast: Tom Wilson (Tom Mix); Vicky Williams (Victoria Forde); Sid Jones (Sid Jordan).

Tom, a cowpuncher, is engaged to marry Vicky Williams, a ranch girl. Vicky has a girl chum who owns a pet bear, and she tells Tom that he must get her a bear. With his friend, Sid Jones, Tom soon discovers bear signs. Tom enters a bear hole; the bear also enters, and Tom makes his escape just in time.

Finally the bear is treed. The limb on which bruin is hanging is sawed off, and the bear falls to the ground, where it is lassoed by Tom and Sid.

Vicky, in the meantime, has been playing with her girl friend's pet bear and it bites her finger. When she sees Tom and Sid approaching with the bear, which they finally captured at the risk of their lives, she tells them she don't like bears, doesn't want one, and leaves. With an expression of "Can you beat it?" Tom and Sid fall to the ground in a faint.

MYSTERIES OF MYRA (Episode No. 15—"The Thought Monster"—Two Parts—July 31).—This episode deals with a Thought Monster, a sort of Psychic Frankenstein, created by the Black Order, and sent out to destroy both Myra and Alden. It finds them at a seance in Alden's laboratory. This Monster is a huge powerful creature. But his disposition is sort of like a child, in that he is easily distracted from his purpose. He starts to smash up things in the laboratory, and to kill Myra. Alden can't lick him, but gets him to turn his attention to him. Alden retreats into another room, hides and finds his pistol. The Monster, following, and bent on murder, sees his reflection in a mirror, and forgets what he is after. Alden points his gun, and orders him to hold up his hands. The Monster turns on him. Alden fires and hits the Monster, who is hurt, but not weakened by the bullet. Alden retreats into a third room, and locks the door.

The Monster's fist bursts through the panel. Alden shoots and the fist is withdrawn. The fist smashes through the other panel, and Alden sees there is no hope of overcoming the Monster by force. As a last resort, he sets the hypnotizing wheel in motion, and hides while the Monster tears down the door. The Monster sees the hypnotizing wheel, and can't resist examining it. The wheel hypnotizes him, and Alden steps out and makes hypnotic passes, and gets him under his control. He orders him to return and destroy the Master, who made him. The Monster goes off to do so, while Alden returns to the terrified woman.

Meanwhile, the Master and Varney at the Black Order home, put on two robes with hoods, which cover them all but their faces. The robes are covered with glittering bits of glass or metal, and they bear on their left arm shields which are covered with a mirror. In their right hands, they hold a large electric flashlight of peculiar shape. These flashlights, the Master explains, give a destructive ray and the cloaks and shields are a protection against the deadly ray.

The Master tells Varney that his plan is to destroy the Monster as soon as his work is done. The Monster, after bursting his way into the Main Council Chamber, by tearing the great wheel out by its roots, and killing the Black Order member on guard, reaches the Master's den, and overhears his death sentence. He catches Varney alone, hurls him the whole length of the room to his death, strips him of his cloak, shield and deadly light apparatus, puts them on, and advances on the Master, who sees him coming. The Master puts out the light. Then follows a duel in the dark, lit only by the brilliant light beams from the flashlights.

At last, the Monster gets careless and receives the light in his face. He rushes in, before his death, and manages to give the Master a little. The Master pushes a switch, which summons his followers, who carry him to die in the prison chamber of the Vampire woman whom the Master has held prisoner, because she would not yield to his love.

THE STRONGER LOVE (Morosco—Five parts—Aug. 14). The cast: Nell Serviss (Vivian Martin); Jim Serviss (Edward Peil); Tom Serviss (Frank Lloyd); Rolf Rutherford (Jack Livingston); Mrs. Jane Rutherford (Alice Knowland); Orel Kincaid (Herbert Standing); Peter Kincaid (John McKinnon); Widow Serviss (Louise A. Emmons).

On Thunder Mountain lived Nell Serviss, a wild flower of surpassing beauty. The Servisses were "at feud" with the Rutherfords, who lived on the other side of the mountain. Jim Serviss, a cool, clear-eyed young mountaineer, was the leader of his clan, and between Jim and Nell Serviss was a sort of mountain betrothal, for Jim loved Nell with all his heart and soul. Tom Serviss, his vicious, worthless brother, also loved Nell and persistently annoyed her with his attentions.

One day a handsome stranger from the city, that distant fairland, came into this little world and went to live with the Rutherfords. A humorous acident made Nell and the newcomer acquainted. Each day the stranger would wander over the mountains examining the rock and chipping it with a little hammer. His actions puzzled the "moonshining" mountaineers, who suspected him of being a "revenooer."

Nell Serviss and the newcomer became close friends and this friendship soon grew into something deeper and stronger. Learning of his search for radium ore Nell showed the stranger a rich deposit near the Serviss "mooonshine" still. Shortly afterward, on the night of the dance in the school-house, the still was burned by the revenue officers. The newcomer was suspected and the Servisses started in the morning to "get" him.

Nell dashed through the forest to warn her friend, with evil-minded Tom Serviss in pursuit. But her friends the mountains punished Tom in their own fashion and Nell arrived at the Rutherford's cabin in the nick of time. Rutherford then faced Serviss, and in a sacrifice few women have ever been called upon to make little Nell of Thunder Mountain humiliated herself that another might be saved and by so doing triumphed in "The Stronger Love."

PUBLIC OPINION (Lasky—Five Patrs—Aug. 17). The cast: Hazel Gray (Blanche Sweet); Dr. Henry Morgan (Earle Foxe); Mrs. Carson-Morgan (Edythe Chapman); Phillip Carson (Tom Forman); Gordon Graham (Elliott Dexter); Smith (Raymond Hatton).

Hazel Gray, a young nurse, is in love with Phillip Carson, son of Mrs. Carson-Morgan, a philanthropist. Phillip, having quarreled with his step-father, leaves home, secures a position, and lives at the same boarding house as Hazel. Called home by his mother's sudden illness, Phillip manages to have Hazel called on the case. Her recognition of the doctor as the man whose trickery she discovered in time to save her own honor, is concealed from Phillip, but her stay is rendered almost unbearable by the doctor's forced attentions.

Mrs. Morgan dies suddenly and in terrible agony, from arsenical poisoning. Suspicion points to Hazel, proof of her knowledge of the location of a bottle of arsenic being established by Morgan. Her former supposed relations with the doctor appear as a reason for the crime. Phillip's testimony is against her, but Gordon Graham, a wealthy young man who is on the jury, is at once impressed with the girl's innocence, and succeeds in securing a verdict of "not guilty." Throughout the trial the spirit of the poisoned woman endeavors to point out the guilty person. The weight of public opinion, however, falls heavily upon the girl, sensational newspapers doing their share to increase it, until Hazel can find no place to stay. Finally Graham takes her to his sister's home where he declares his love for Hazel and an unshaken belief in her innocence.

Smith, a dope fiend, refused drugs by Dr.

THE SHINE GIRL (Gold Rooster—Five Parts—Aug. 27).—The only sunshine that penetrates a basement is five feet of cheerfulness—the Shine Girl. While shining shoes with her little hands she polishes the grouchy and brooding souls with her cheerful word and happy smile. Then comes the day when a cloud temporarily eclipses her sunniness. Her heart torn by the poverty of a sick neighbor, she steals a loaf of bread and is taken to the Children's Court. A rising young judge sits upon her heavy offense, but his square jaw is softened by a pair of kindly eyes, and he not only pardons but develops deep interest in her. He takes her to his mother's home in the country where she can have some real sunshine and eventually the little orphan is adopted.

While home the Judge meets again the sweetheart he has never forgotten, now unhappily married. The old love is revived, and forgetting the justice he practices, he plans to flee west with her. The Shine Girl discovering the intentions of her hero who is about to totter from his pedestal at the risk of losing her sunny paradise of a home, bravely sets out to stop them. She heads off a message to the woman, and going to the station herself, reminds him gently of the words that went with her pardon, "It isn't square to steal what belong to someone else," and asks him "Is it square to steal another man's wife?" Saved by her at the brink of a great unhappiness, he returns to the city and tries to forget.

With next apple blossom time he returns to find his Shine Girl budding into womanhood and with the passing days love awakens within the hearts of both and before he returns again the Shine Girl promises to be his for "keeps."

THE DEVIL'S NEEDLE (Aug. 13).—The cast: David White (Tully Marshall); Rene (Norma Talmadge); Wynne Mortimer (Marguerite Marsh); Wm. Mortimer (F. A. Turner); Hugh Gordon (Howard Gaye); Frits (John Brennen); Buck (Paul Le Blanc).

William Mortimer, a man of stern unyielding principles, is exceedingly proud of his daughter, Wynne, particularly when she announces her engagement to Hugh Gordon, his junior partner and a man after his own heart. Wynne visits an art exhibition with her father, however, and there meets David White, a famous artist. She is strongly attracted to him and accepts an invitation to visit his studio. Other visits follow the first and Wynne finally consents to pose for an unfinished picture on which White is working.

The growing attachment between White and the society girl rouses the jealousy of Rene, an artist's model who is in love with White, and also the jealousy of Gordon, who follows Wynne to the studio on one of her trips and forcibly takes her home. But the attachment is too deeply rooted to be thus easily broken, and the meetings are soon resumed. During the temporary break, however, White is tempted to try the cure for the blues that Rene uses so persistently with the result that he is soon a habitual user of drugs.

Wynne finally marries the artist and is disowned by her father. Rene, too, gives herself up to a wilder debauch with drugs than ever before and on White the habit grows steadily.

His downfall is rapid and complete, and Wynne is finally forced to leave him and beg for the protection of her home. When her former lover urges her to divorce her husband, however, she declares her intention of standing by him in his hour of greatest need. White overhears her declaration and determines to rid himself of his habit that she may feel free to leave him and not be held by any feeling of duty.

White disappears, the better to fight his habit. Wynne tries to locate him and Rene, seeing her alone in a dangerous section of the city, follows to warn her away. Wynne is set upon by gangsters and is finally saved by White himself, who has been told of her danger by Rene, who, through his whole career of disgrace, has kept close watch over him, feeling that she herself is responsible for his downfall.

Completely restored in health and the master of the dread habit which all but ruined him, White offers Wynne her freedom. He points out that there is no longer need of her standing by him now, but she finds she loves him for his own sake and not through pity and they are reunited. Rene, remorseful for the damage she has already done to the life of the man she really loves, promptly obliterates herself from the scene and from his life.

SHELL FORTY-THREE (Aug. 13).—The cast: William Berner (H. B. Warner); Adrienne von Altman (Enid Markey); English Spy (Jack Gilbert); Lieut. Franz Hollen (George Fisher); Helen von Altman (Margaret Thompson); Baroness von Altman (Louise Bronnell); German Secret Service Agent (J. P. Lookney); German Commander (Charles K. French). Directed by Reginald Barker.

"Shell Forty-Three" is a unique narrative of cunning in the European war. It concerns the adventures of a young man of mystery who possesses papers which prove him to be the correspondent of a big American newspaper; others establishing him as a German secret service agent, and still others vouching for his commission as a lieutenant in the English army. The secret of his mission is not divulged until the last scene, when the veil of mystery enshrouding his identity is lifted and he is shown in his true light.

H. B. Warner plays the role of this human enigma in a particularly impressive manner and carries out the mystery idea with almost uncanny cleverness. The romantic elements of the story are handled most capably by Enid Markey, who, as Adrienne von Altman, plays, at times and unwitting ally to the man of mystery and at other times proves an almost unsurmountable stumbling block to the fulfillment of his mission.

There are no end of remarkable lighting effects employed in the story and some of the mechanical devices employed by the man of mystery are truly marvels of ingenuity.

In many of the big scenes of the story, virtually all the accoutrements of modern warfare are shown in action and as an elaboration of the wonderful spy system employed by all the contending forces in any great national struggle, the story is particularly interesting.

GEORGE KLEINE.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER (No. 8 of Series 2—"Active Service"—Aug. 9).—Musty springs up through the ground into the town of "While-U-Wait" and soon finds the village is aptly named. He first visits a restaurant where meals are served "while-u-wait" and one doesn't have to wait long either. A chicken dinner is shot into our hero's anatomy by means of a giant hypodermic and "a side of peas' is administered with a gun. At a cleaning establishment Musty is run through a cleaning and pressing machine, clothes and all, and although the process almost kills him his clothes are pressed all right, all right.

Even wives are provided in short order in the town of "While-U-Wait." Quality is sacrificed to speed, and Musty finds he has picked a lemon in the garden of love. Consequently, he gives his bride the slip, after they had a wedding photograph taken, which is spoiled by the too vigorous explosion of the flashlight powder.

Musty is not satisfied merely to run away from his unpulchritudinous better half. His soul craves divorce. He sees a sign offering to furnish corespondents "While-u-wait," and picks out the prettiest one. He then hires Hemlock Jones and his dictagraph to get evidence against himself. This accomplished, he hires a "while-u-wait' lawyer and gets a "while-u-wait" separation. He then waves good-bye to the fair corespondent and blithely backs out of town. Upon reaching the city limits the earth suddenly swallows him, and Musty leaves the town of "While-u-Wait" as unceremoniously as he came.

THE ALIBI (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Aug. 7).—The cast: Enid Chamberlain (Betty Howe); Arthur Mansfield (James Morrison); Walter Slayton (Paul Scardon); President Chamberlain (Robert Whitworth); Jarboe Edward Elkas). Author, George Allan England. Director, Paul Scardon.

To help his father out of serious financial difficulties Arthur Mansfield, assistant cashier in a bank, makes a false entry in his book, but then, when he comes to take the money, his nerve fails him and his honest character revolts against the robbery. Tearing the page from his book, he rushes to the desk of Slayton, the cashier, explains the whole matter to him and begs leniency. Slayton, himself, heavily in debt because of indiscreet speculation, sees in Mansfield's confession a chance to get out of his own difficulties, and, although promising Mansfield that he will take care of him, plots to use him for the furtherance of his own ends.

He keeps the page containing the false entry and that night, disguised, goes to the bank. His key readily admits him and he goes hastily to the vault, where, while he is removing the amount necessary to help him out of his difficulty, he is interrupted by the approach of the watchman, who, on his round, had found signs of another's presence in the bank.

In a trap, Slayton hides behind the door of the vault, but the watchman comes right toward him, and, fearing discovery, Slayton draws his revolver and fires. The watchman topples over, dead, and in insane dread of the consequences of his crime, Slayton works feverishly to remove all traces of his guilt. He replaces the page with the false entry in Mansfield's book, pries his own desk open with Mansfield's letter opener and throws it upon the floor—a button which Mansfield had torn from his coat that afternoon he places on the dead body.

Slayton is the first examined by the Coroner's jury, and during his examination he succeeds, by reference to the false entry, and other evidence which he has scattered about, in casting suspicion on Mansfield. The latter is taken into custody, a verdict of guilty is soon found against him and he is sentenced to life imprisonment. Enid, daughter of the bank president, who had been engaged to Mansfield, is forced by her father to sever connections with him, but still retains her faith in his innocence. When Mansfield has been in prison for a few months, Slayton visits him out of curiosity, but the burst of anger which Mansfield exhibits sends him away in panic, fearing lest the convict escape and seek vengeance. In a very short time, Mansfield does escape, and going straight to Slayton's house, where, the next day, the latter is found dead. The papers proclaim Mansfield as the murderer and a large reward is offered for his capture. Mansfield turns up the next morning at the District Attorney's office, and presents Slayton's signed confession proving that he was innocent of both crimes. He is reinstated to his former position in the bank, and also claims the position he has always held in the heart of faithful Enid.

Gray). Scenario written by Wallace O. Clifton. Directed by Harry Revier.

Through a real estate purchase Daniel Gaynor acquires all rights in the waterway leading from Moose River to the mill. The original owner has never made use of his rights, but Gaynor, whose one thought is to get power, refuses to allow logs to be floated down the river running through his property. The men resent this injustice, and there is a fight between Gaynor and Bill Jackson, Bill representing the lumbermen. The ruthless way in which Gaynor deals with the men loses for him the sympathy of his one friend, Mary Alden, a widowed school teacher, with whom he is in love. The loggers are forced to sell their output to Gaynor, getting a poorer price for it than ever before. He in turn sells it to the ship company in the city at a lower figure than they have ever paid. Gaynor has had to get the assistance of the sheriff and deputies to protect his interests, and he has won the victory only after many brutal fights. Delighted with Gaynor's executive ability, the firm offers him the position of general manager, at a large salary, and he goes to the city. Mary Alden refuses to accompany him as his wife, for she does not believe that happiness can be built on a foundation of injustice.

At the shipyards Gaynor continues in the high-handed way he has begun. He cuts wages, speeds up the work of the men to a cruel degree, and in other ways makes himself a tyrant. So successful is he that in ten years' time he is president of the company. Bessie Alden, Mary's daughter, comes to the city to seek her fortune. She meets Dick Grant, who is employed in the office of the ship building firm, and they are instantly attracted to each other. They are married, and Dick goes to Gaynor and asks for a raise in salary. It is refused. Dick's old grandmother falls ill, and he finds his added responsibilities more than he can manage. A child is born, and Dick is at his wit's end to provide comforts for the child and Bessie.

About this time Gaynor's health fails and he is obliged to go to the woods to recuperate. This facilitates the carrying out of the plan that has tempted Dick, and he takes a certain sum out of the cash box each week, telling Bessie Gaynor has increased his salary. Returning to his old home, Gaynor finds himself thoroughly hated. He is beaten and thrown into the river, but is rescued by Mary. He begins to realize that his power has not brought him the real things of life.

Dick's theft is discovered by his superior in the office, and reported to Gaynor on his return. He goes to Dick's house, telling the detective to follow later. Bessie surprises him by thanking him profusely for her husband's raise, and telling all it has done for them. The baby climbs up into his arms and pats his face. Bessie tells him the child has been named for him. It is the first affection that has been shown Gaynor for many long years, and it overwhelms him. When the detective comes, he tells him there has been a mistake, and that there has been no theft. Then, having established the happiness of Dick and Bessie, he goes to Mary Alden and finds happiness for himself.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

THE SECRET OF THE SWAMP (Five parts—July 31).—The cast: Major Burke (George Hernandez); Emily Burke (Myrtle Gonzalez); Allan Wait (Fred Church); Deacon Todd (Frank McQuarrie); Chet Wells (Val Paul); His Mother (Mary De Cella); Deacon's Housekeeper (Lule Warrenton); The Sheriff (Jack Curtis).

Chet Wells, with his invalid mother, rents a piece of property from Deacon Todd for the purpose of demonstrating Chet's ideas of "scientific farming." Major Burke and his daughter, Emily, are near neighbors. Emily is engaged to marry a wealthy young man of the neighborhood. The girl's neighborly kindness to the invalid, Mrs. Wells, brings her into frequent association with Chet, with the result that the young people become fond of each other without openly expressing their mutual regard.

Chet is unable to make the farm pay, and when Deacon Todd demands his rent the young man cannot pay. During the argument Mrs. Wells arises from her bed and the excited conversation between Todd, the sheriff and Chet gives her such a shock that she falls to the floor, fatally stricken. Chet swears vengeance upon Deacon Todd whom he blames for hastening his mother's death.

Finally compelled to vacate, Chet sells his chattels and goes away to seek his fortune. Deacon Todd moves into the house Chet has vacated and there soon arises an enmity between Major Burke and the miserly old deacon. Trouble climaxes when the major sends a charge of shot in the direction of Todd, because he has discovered the deacon letting his cows into the major's corn.

Todd disappears the night that Chet returns. Suspicion is directed toward Chet because of the threats he had made to "get even" with the deacon. Major Burke is conscience-stricken when he sees a flock of buzzards hovering over a nearby swamp and fancies that the dead body of his "victim" is the attraction for the vultures. Taking assiduously to drinking for the purpose of quieting his conscience the major is overcome by the stuff and sleeps.

Chet enters the major's house to call upon Emily and hears the major talking in his maudlin slumber, revealing the facts in the shooting of Todd. By the same method of transmission Emily has also learned from her own father's lips the truth of "the deacon's demise." When officers come to Burke's house and accuse Chet of the crime the young man admits that he is guilty, and tells the officers to search the swamp for Todd's remains. Chet's heroism in submitting himself as a victim to her own father's action greatly stirs Emily's latent admiration and, forgetful of her obligation to marry another, the girl easily surrenders her heart to Chet and proceeds to assist him from his dilemma. Chet is locked in the rickety neighborhood jail and Emily releases him, giving him opportunity to decamp and begging him to take her along to be married.

Thus matters arrive at the conclusion of the film, but the exact manner in which the story ends is not revealed. Suffice it to say that the "surprise finish" changes the whole nature of the story from tense melodrama to boisterous farce, ending in the "biggest laugh" ever produced by a moving picture.

LOVE'S LARIAT (Aug. 7—Five Parts).—The cast: "Sky High" (Harry Carey); "Skeeters" (Neal Hart); Allan Landers (William Quinn); Goldie Le Criox (Olive Fuller Golden). Written by George Marshall and W. B. Pearson. Directed by George Marshall and Harry Carey.

While the boys of the Diamond A are in the frontier town of Coma celebrating one of the regular pay days, a telegram is brought into the saloon for Edward G. Landers. After quite a bit of figuring, "Sky High" finally states that he was given that name, but that he had almost forgotten it. The dispatch announces that "Sky's" uncle, in the East, has passed away, leaving him the bulk of a large fortune. A provision to the will states that he must reside in and take personal care of the estate for one year. "Sky" does not like the idea of going alone and decides to take the entire bunch of his pals along with him.

Allen Landers is the other heir of the uncle, and he will benefit if "Sky" fails to carry out the mandates of the will. Landers decides to work "Sky' out of his rightful inheritance, and in accordance with this scheme, enlists the services of Goldie Le Criox, an actress. Goldie is to win the heart of the simple Westerner, and then throw him over. They hope that the disappointment will cause "Sky" to return West without complying with the will. When Goldie is presented, the girl makes quite a dent in "Sky's" impressionable heart. He finds himself growing deeply in love with her. "Sky's" impetuous wooing has quite won Goldie and when he suggests that they "hitch up" she agrees. At last, the day of a reception arrives and the guests assemble.

Landers calls Goldie aside, and tells her that she has done her part fine, and now is the time to quit. "Sky" by accident overhears their talk. He quits the spot in a rage and fails to hear Goldie tell her cousin that she has played too long and now "Sky" is willing to have her and she will gladly take him, as it will be for love. Determined to get even with the plotters, "Sky" confronts the cousin and their argument leads to a fight. In the melee, Goldie is struck with a flying missle and rendered unconscious. When Goldie revives she finds herself in "Sky's" arms.

BETTINA LOVED A SOLDIER (Five Parts—Aug. 14).— The cast: Abbe Constantin (George Berrill); Mrs. Scott (Frencella Billington); Bella (Zoe DuRae); Bettina (Louise Lovely); Paul de Lacardens (Douglas Gerrard); Jean Reynaud (Rupert Julian); Pauline (Elsie Jane Wilson).

Over 400,000 lines of paid advertising have been used to stimulate motion picture interests among the readers of the Chicago Herald—

The Chicago Herald publishes more about Motion Pictures than all other Chicago papers combined. But aside from its daily reviews, its full-page directory and news matter, it has done more to develop readers' interest in Motion Pictures than any other paper.

Over 400,000 lines of paid advertising have been utilized in a comparatively brief period to convert its readers into Motion Picture fans.

Campaign after campaign has been launched to make into "every-nighters" the casual fan. The Moving Picture Manufacturer who follows the lead of 280 Chicago Exhibitors and advertises his Pictures in the Herald, can cash in on that tremendous publicity, utilize the tremendous lineage he has not paid for to intensify the returns on his individual campaign.

Why the Chicago Herald is Supreme in Motion Pictures:

It has the largest daily program directory in the world—336 theaters.

It has published over 400,000 lines of paid advertising to stimulate the interest of its readers in Motion Pictures.

It prints more about Motion Pictures than all other Chicago papers combined.

It has appropriated $27,000 annually for gathering in new "Movie" fans as readers.

It has a remarkable following for its criticisms, due to the unimpeachable integrity of its unbiased and competent daily reviews.

It has the exclusive rights to the articles of Louella O. Parsons, famous, sincere and popular.

It has printed more Motion Picture stories, including serials, than all the other Chicago papers combined.

It has the first and only "Exhibitors' Aid Department" to help the Exhibitor of the Chicago territory to rent good films.

It has 69% of the Chicago Theaters advertising in its columns every day and Sunday.

It has the rest of the Chicago territory Theater Managers reading its Daily Directory to see what is showing and where.

American of great wealth, who has a sister, Bettina, a girl of seventeen, who is equally as rich. Bettina has had numerous offers of marriage from penniless noblemen. Foremost among her suitors is the foppish Paul de Lacardens.

The priest has a nephew, Jean Reynaud, a lieutenant in the cavalry, who in all respects except birth is a son of the good old man. When the Scotts arrive their first duty is to visit the Abbe. He learns that they are good Catholics and he is almost paralyzed with surprise when they give him money to distribute to the poor.

Jean had never met such women before and for the life of him could not decide which of the two was the more beauitful. The women delight in Jean's honest simplicity, and it is not long before Jean decides that Bettina is to him the more beautiful. About this time Paul de Lacardens arrives and renews his conquest of Bettina's fortune.

Jean discovers that he adores Bettina, but looks upon her money as a barrier between them. Bettina discovers at the same time that she is in love with Jean, but she waits for him in vain.

There is a ball at the castle. Jean decides to leave the following morning, and to see Bettina just once more he goes to the ball. Here the girl presses herself upon the modest lover, but this only increases his discomfiture. Paul asks her for a waltz and she lies to him, telling that she has promised to dance with Jean. She confesses her lie to Jean, but he will not dance with her.

Jean says a hurried goodby to Bettina and leaves her, but Paul follows from a nearby hiding place. Jean refuses to quarrel with Paul, who thinks he is afraid. Paul doubles his insults and even goes as far as to invite Jean to fight him.

Jean is still calm but firm in his refusal, but when Paul mentions the names of Bettina and Mrs. Scott and casts an unworthy aspersion upon Jean's motives, Bettina runs from her hiding place and bids Jean fight him. They fight with sabers beside the castle wall and Paul is defeated and completely crushed.

Bettina awakens at an early hour the following morning and decides that she will go to the road and wave goodby to Jean. She goes out into the drizzling rain and instead of finding Jean, she discovers three thugs who have been hired by the vindictive Paul to horsewhip Jean. Bettina hurries to the vicarage, confesses her love for Jean to the Abbe, and the priest commands Jean to marry her.

WORLD EQUITABLE.

A WOMAN'S WAY (Peerless—Five Parts—Aug. 7).—The cast: Howard Stanton (Carlyle Blackwell); Marion (Ethel Clayton); Oliver Whitney (Montagu Love); Nina Blakemore (Edith Campbell Walker). Scenario by Frances Marion. Directed by Barry O'Neill.

Marion Livingston, daughter of General Livingston, boss of the Elsinore coal mines, rescues Jack Stanton, a young superintendent of the mines, from a mob of miners led by Jim Saunders, who were enraged at his having ordered them to work after it had been found that the mine is dangerous. Jack's brother, Harold, a young district attorney, comes to visit him and falls in love with Marion. They are married, come to New York and Marion is introduced into society, with which she is bored. The only one who appreciates her is Oliver Whitney, a friend of Howard.

As time passes, Howard and Marion drift apart. Howard is infatuated with Nina Blakemore, a fascinating woman of the world, who, unknown to him, has broken his brother Jack's heart, casting him aside to marry Marney, who she believed to be wealthy, only to discover prior to their wedding that he, at the end of his resources, was marrying her under the impression that she was a wealthy widow.

Nina and Howard are in an auto accident, but both escape injury. The next day the papers come out with the news of a pending divorce between the Stantons, hinting at a mysterious, unknown woman. Marion, madly in love with her husband, determines, if any woman is clever enough to take him from her, to meet her on her own grounds. She gives a dinner party two days later and invites Nina as her honored guest. Jack arrives with his wife, Myra.

Marion completely outshines Nina at the dinner. Nina comes face to face with Marney at the dinner, Jack Whitney, an old flame of hers, and Howard's brother-in-law, Morris, who carried on an affair with her previous to his marriage to Howard's sister, Belle. Confronted with her past amours, Nina finds the situation very difficult. Howard learns of their past relations with Nina and the indignant men believe he has invited her there to put a hoax on them.

The reporters break into the house and threaten to publish the news that Nina Blakemore was the woman in the automobile accident, but Marion saves the situation by feigning an affectionate friendship between Nina and herself and this sends the reporters away satisfied. After Howard has asked Whitney to see Nina home, there is a reconciliation between Marion and Howard, when he asks her to forgive him.

THE SUMMER GIRL (Peerless—Five Parts—Aug. 14). The cast: Mary Anderson (Mollie King); Bruce Haldeman (Arthur Ashley); Smythe Addison (Dave Ferguson); Katheryn Green (Ruby Hoffman); Mr. Anderson (Harold Entwistle); Mrs. Anderson (Dora Mills Adams). Scenario written by Frances Marion. Directed by Edwin August.

Mary Anderson, daughter of wealthy parents, while in the country, hides her real identity behind a ragged dress she is wearing when she meets Bruce Haldeman, a poor artist, and introduces her laundress to him as her mother. Bruce comes to the laundress' cottage every morning, where Mary awaits him, to paint her picture and grows to love her. Mary's mother learns of her escapade and, highly indignant, brings her back to the city.

Bruce learns Mary's real identity from the laundress and is heartbroken. Mary enlists the services of her father and provokes him into taking her one night to Bruce's studio, where she sees his model. Misconstruing the meaning of her presence there, she tells Bruce when she arrives that she hates him. Bruce, heartbroken, is about to destroy her portrait but his model, who secretly loves him, intervenes, saves it, sends it to the Art Institute under Bruce's name and enters it in the prize competition, and lastly, goes to Mary's father and explains all to him.

Mary's father decides to make a test and after he has gathered about him Addison, persistent suitor of Mary's favored by her mother for social reasons, Bruce, and Mrs. Anderson, he tells them that through unexpected business reverses, he is penniless and must marry his daughter off to secure a son-in-law to support the family, which information provokes Addison into withdrawing his suit. Haldeman, however, is happy now that the barrier of wealth is removed.

The model telephones in that Bruce has won the grand prize at the art exhibit, which makes him a rich man. Mr. Anderson then warns Bruce to be careful in his decision, now that he has achieved fame and fortune, but Bruce in answer clasps Mary to him, as Mr. Anderson confesses to his wife that the tale of poverty was only a ruse to test his manhood.

THE RAIL RIDER (Brady Made—Paragon—Five parts—Aug. 21).—The cast: Jim Lewis (House Peters); "B," the enigma of the D. & O. (Bertram Marburgh); Bill Carney (Harry West); Theodore C. Barker (A. Harrington); Mildred Barker (Zena Keefe). Directed by Maurice Tourneur.

For ten years the men of the D. & O., a short line, have been at the mercy of "B," supposedly Barker, president of the road. The line itself is run from the executive offices in New York, far distant, and none of the men have ever laid eyes on "B," yet the smallest transgression—accidental or otherwise—of the road's rigid and economical discipline results in a telegraphed order from "B," decreeing the fine, suspension or other punishment for the offender. Latterly, it has amounted to almost persecution and the men are on the verge of a strike.

The climax comes when 48, the passenger train driven by Jim Lewis, goes off the rails on a soft spot and ties up the whole system for a day. When 48 finally limps into Welisdale, the eastern terminus, "B's" decision is waiting for Lewis—two week's pay as a fine and six months' probation on a yard engine. The punishment starts a riot. The men agree to send Lewis to see Barker.

Lewis calls on Barker. Barker receives Lewis, and instead of the hulky, brutal man he expected to find, Barker is an elderly, kind old gentleman, with a charming family. Mildred, his daughter, impresses Lewis. At last, Lewis, much bewildered, accepts an invitation to dinner with the family.

In the morning Lewis learns that "B" is Brown, the manager. With a card from Barker he seeks an interview, but learns the manager has decamped, taking all the negotiable funds of the road. Lewis, thinking of the girl he met the night before, asks for and gets the job of running down "B." After considerable detective work he locates a man he has reason to believe is his quarry. With the aid of a bellboy, he gets a tip on the departure of the suspect and as the fleeing man enters a machine Lewis grabs him. There is a fight, which ends in Lewis' victory.

Jim Lewis returns in triumph to New York with the stolen goods locked in a brand-new bag, and reaches Barker's house in the early evening, just as a group of D. & O. magnates are deciding that the road is gone and done for. Jim is the sort of stuff the road needs in its executive offices, and Barker states that he is to come in to New York to be trained. Jim parts with Mildred on his way out, but to their mutual satisfaction it is only "au revoir." The future is rosy for Jim Lewis, and the boys of the road have gained more than they hoped when they sent him to see "B."

Take Temptation Out of Your Ticket Booth

Every ticket seller wants to be honest. And she will be if you don't put temptation in her way. Remember she's human and the control which every human being has over his or her will power varies. When you allow temptation to inhabit your ticket booth, you are inviting losses. You can guard against them—you can save money—you can remove temptation from your ticket booth by installing

CAILLE
Ticket Office Devices

The Caille Ticket Seller automatically registers every ticket sold. This register is under lock and key. The theatre owner holds the key. There is no way that the ticket seller can get at the register. Every ticket sold is accounted for. It removes temptation and discourages dishonest efforts between the party in the booth and the ticket taker.

A Battery of Two Ticket Sellers

Delivers Tickets Separately

Whether a patron buys one ticket or five the Caille Ticket Seller delivers them to him cut off separately, but stacked together like a deck of cards. Tickets delivered in this way cannot lay across the knives in the chopper. They will drop through instantly.

Handles Tickets of Different Denominations

The Caille Ticket Seller is built in sections. When it is desired to sell tickets of different denominations, additional sections are added. Each section has its individual motor for direct or alternating current.

Caille Ticket Choppers

They tear tickets to shreds. There is no possible chance to use them again. These machines are built for foot, hand or electric operation.

Our Lightning Change-Maker

computes and pays the difference between the amount tendered ($1.00 or under) and the price of admission. Simply press one key and the machine does the calculating and instantly delivers the change direct to the patron in a saucer-like receptacle. Saves time, prevents errors and disputes.

Send for Catalog

describing the complete Caille line. Also, our simple Theatre Ledger Systems, Ticket Boxes, Tickets, etc.

Old Methods Give Way to New

A New Invention Revolutionizes an Industry.

A basic patent has just been granted by the United States Patent Office covering a new machine for the projection of moving pictures.

It can be manufactured at a cost that will make competition by any standard machine on the market impossible.

It works upon an entirely new principle—that of manipulation of the light, as opposed to the manipulation of the film in present machines.

Its principal feature is its simplicity, coupled with the small amount of precision work needed.

It has no shutter and the movement of the film is continuous; thus eliminating all the mechanism of the intermittent movement.

The projected picture is flickerless, owing to the fact that the shutter is eliminated, thus allowing a greater percentage of light to reach the screen.

A demonstration by a working model will be given responsible parties by appointment.

Westinghouse Motion Picture Equipment

Westinghouse Motion Picture Equipment

enables you to produce clear, steady pictures which please your patrons.

This equipment is compact and easily installed.

There is nothing complicated in construction or operation.

They give constant voltage over a wide range of load which is very important for "fading in" as it enables the operator to "warmup" his second arc without affecting the brilliancy of the first.

The services of Westinghouse engineers are available to assist in the solution of your problems.

Westinghouse Motion Picture Equipments were awarded a Medal of Honor, the highest award granted in this class, at the Panama Pacific International Exposition.

All Eyes on a Line

A NEW CHAIR

That Enables Everybody to See and Be Comfortable

Press Catch

Tilt Forward

Push Back

Can be changed from an adult's chair to a child's chair by pressing the catch and raising as illustrated. Returns to adult's position and locks just as easily.

It provides a child with a seat proportioned to his body, a foot rest the right height and puts the child's eyes on a line with those of adults, enabling him to see without annoyance to others or discomfort to himself. The offers theatre owners something for which there is a real need. Fortunately it is not an extra expense but an added source of profit because it—

"All eyes on a line" FOCO Adjustable Chair

Does away with the free kids.

Increases the patronage of children; also the adults who come with children.

Attracts patronage of adults who won't now attend because of discomfort of holding children on their laps.

Attracts patronage from theatres not equipped with Foco chairs.

FOCO Chairs cost new only a few cents more than ordinary chairs. Made in all sizes and finishes. Old chairs can be converted into Foco Chairs at considerably less than the cost of new chairs. Leading chair companies are licensed to make Foco Chairs and can supply you.

Write for booklet showing reel of actual chairs in use.

"The Best is always Cheapest in the long run"
"An inferior article is dear at any price"

One ruined film, one "little breakdown," one interrupted performance, costs more than the difference between a "Simplex" and an ordinary projector.

The following testimonial is no "Chestnut" but right up-to-the-minute and proves what we say about "Simplex" Projectors.

Circleville, Ohio, July 26, 1916.

Precision Machine Co., New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: We are using a pair of Simplex Projectors, one motor driven, with thorough satisfaction. Our old machine (Serial No. 695) we purchased from Mr. Dwyer, Columbus, O., in May, 1913; with the exception of one intermittent sprocket we have placed no repairs whatever on this machine, and it has been operated daily since that date.

I attribute this perfect record to buying a 14-Karat Projector in the first place, and thereafter keeping it cleaned and oiled. Circleville will always have a consistent Simplex advocate in

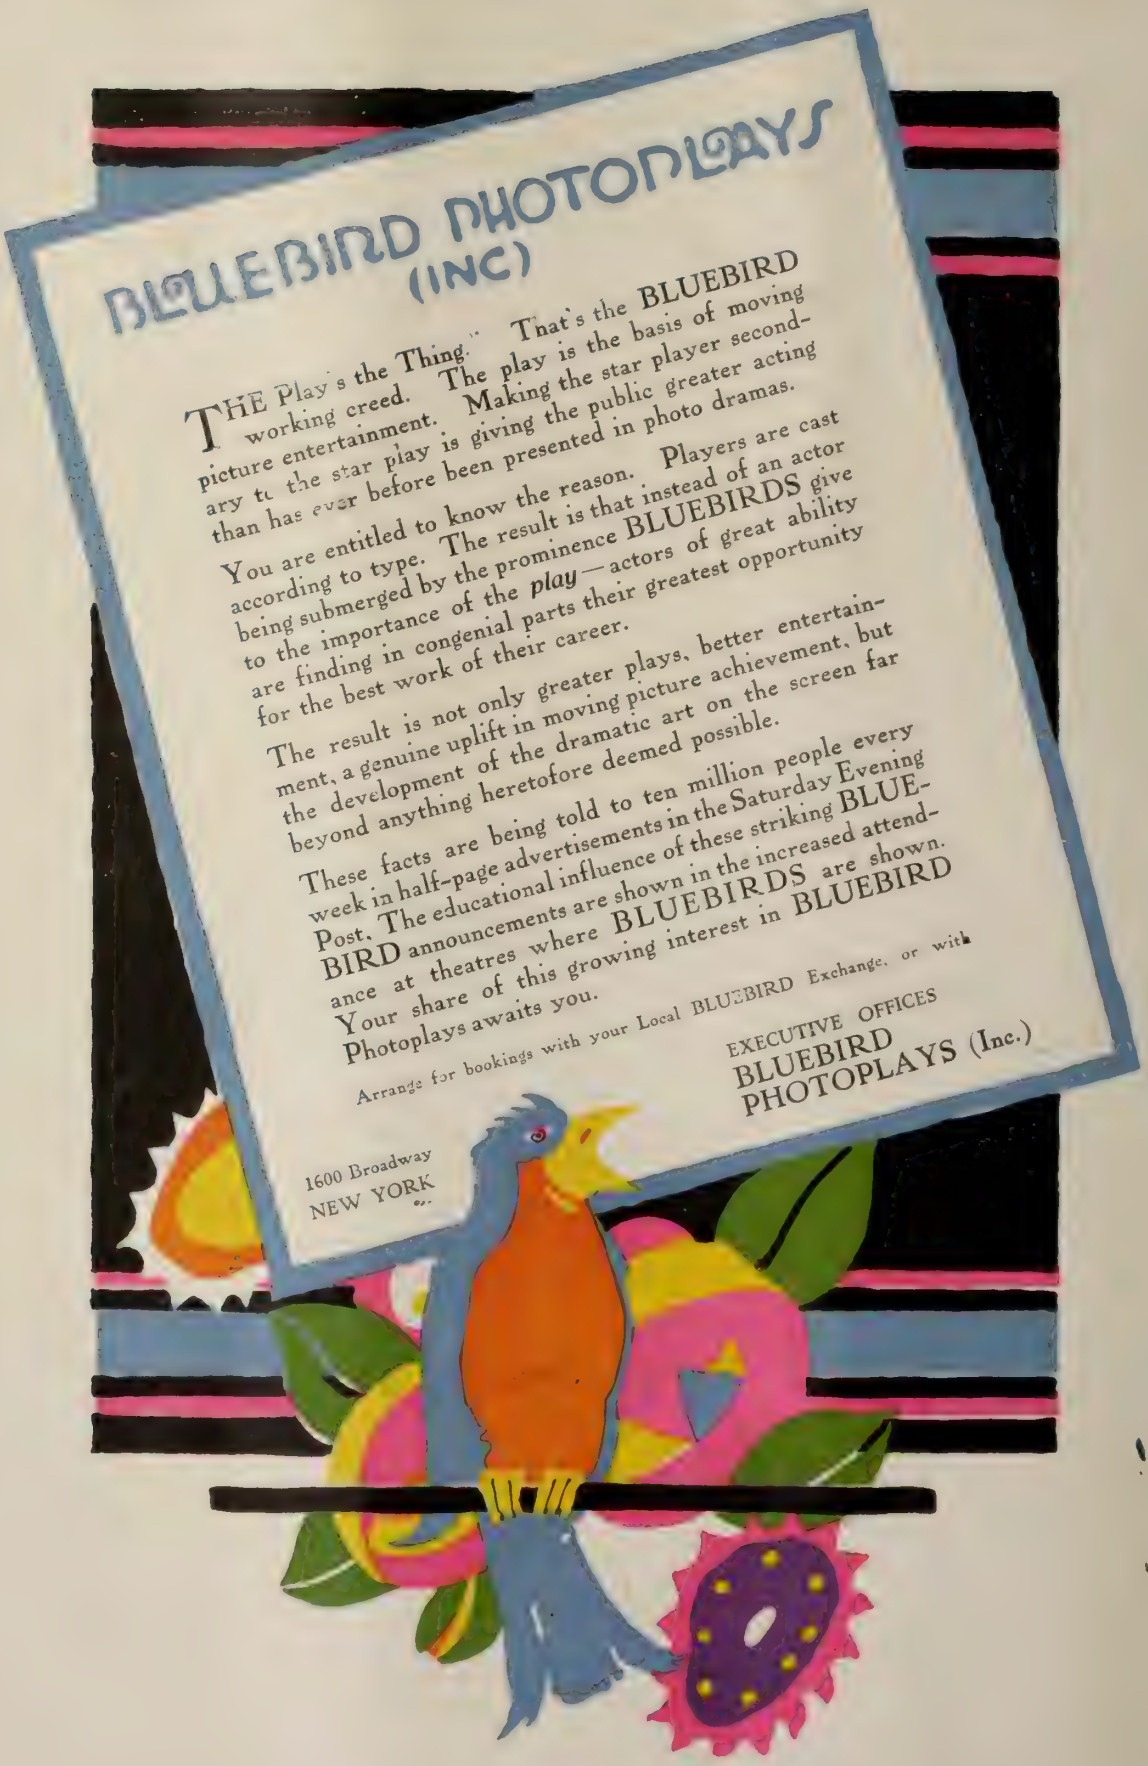
WITH MYRTLE GONZALEZ, VAL PAUL AND GEO. HERNANDEZ

A ROMANTIC DRAMA OF THE GREAT OUTDOORS WRITTEN AND PRODUCED BY LYNN REYNOLDS



BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS (INC)
"THE Play's the Thing." That's the BLUEBIRD working creed. The play is the basis of moving picture entertainment. Making the star player secondary to the star play is giving the public greater acting than has ever before been presented in photo dramas.
You are entitled to know the reason. Players are cast according to type. The result is that instead of an actor being submerged by the prominence BLUEBIRDS give to the importance of the play—actors of great ability are finding in congenial parts their greatest opportunity for the best work of their career.
The result is not only greater plays, better entertainment, a genuine uplift in moving picture achievement, but the development of the dramatic art on the screen far beyond anything heretofore deemed possible.
These facts are being told to ten million people every week in half-page advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post. The educational influence of these striking BLUEBIRD announcements are shown in the increased attendance at theatres where BLUEBIRDS are shown.
Your share of this growing interest in BLUEBIRD Photoplays awaits you.

PARAMOUNT, the giant flywheel, insures the transmission to the exhibitor of the finest photoplays produced in the world.

FAMOUS PLAYERS, LASKY, MOROSCO AND PALLAS the governor of the engine, guarantee the balance and uniformity of these photoplays, because—each producer is competing, on the same program, with the three greatest producers in the world besides himself.

The PARAMOUNT flywheel carries the power of this program, undiminished, from its creation down to the exhibition of today in your theatre.

That flywheel and that governor guarantee you the two greatest photoplays of each week and the 104 banner productions of each year.

PARAMOUNT PROGRAM

The Public's Demand Is

Pioneers in the feature production field, "Famous Players" and "Lasky" photoplays revolutionized the motion picture industry by appealing to a new, a larger and more intelligent public.

They furnished entertainment of a degree theretofore unknown.

They made possible higher box-office prices.

They were the inspiration which led directly to the building of the finest theatres in the country.

"Famous Players" and "Lasky" productions have been unique in never failing to maintain a standard of public entertainment, so much better than competing producers, that the brand names have attained a degree of popularity unrivalled in the history of the amusement world.

The public's ever-increasing demand for these photoplays has created a condition of solidarity in exhibiting.

"Famous Players" and "Lasky" productions are staple necessities to every motion picture theatre.

PARAMOUNT PROGRAM

The Exhibitor's Necessity

It was evolution which brought about the presentation of "Famous Players" and "Lasky" photoplays on the same program.

Each brand, standing for the highest ideals, each studio dedicated to the cause of bigger, better, cleaner motion pictures, naturally sought the same channel of distribution—on the Paramount Program.

It was Necessity yielding again to the power of Demand—the demand of the exhibitor.

Another great, epoch-making step forward occurred in the merging of the Famous Players Film Company and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and the formation of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

It means a guarantee that the future of "Famous Players" and "Lasky" photoplays is to be more brilliantly successful than the past—that both great studios will profit immeasurably by a merger of the best efforts, ideas and ideals of each.

Thus is the public best served.

Gentlemen:

I wish to go on record now as thoroughly endorsing the new order of film booking as offered by your company to all exhibitors, known as "THE OPEN BOOKING POLICY."

This, I believe, is the only fair policy to exhibitors and is certainly a relief from the old order of things, which is still in vogue with a number of other companies, i.e.: "TAKE WHAT WE GIVE YOU--GOOD--BAD or INDIFFERENT."

Your way of doing business certainly shows your confidence in the merits of your pictures, also your absolute fairness in pricing your pictures according to the box office value of such pictures and gives every exhibitor a chance to use just those pictures which he knows his patrons will pay real money to see.

I also wish to state my appreciation for the fair treatment accorded me by your representatives and wish you every success with your honest method of doing business--the Open Booking.

Very sincerely yours,
CRYSTAL THEATRE,

Arthur D. Bachr

The best thing on the Strand bill is "His Rival," with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. The short plays which the Drews have been doing for the last year represent just about the best work being done for the films, as they show the wide possibilities of picture farce which is not mere knockabout.

FOR YOU

"THE YELLOW MENACE" produced by the Serial Film Company is the first serial that has had to face the unbiased judgment and criticism of independent exchange buyers the country over. Before the picture was offered to you we showed it to exchange men from every part of the United States and Canada and asked them to back their opinion of "The Yellow Menace" with real money.

The simple statement that the entire United States and Canada are sold out, big deposits placed in our keeping, and contracts signed calling for hundreds of thousands of dollars must surely mean more to you than all the praise we could bestow upon "The Yellow Menace."

"CUSTOM MADE FEATURES"

ANNOUNCEMENT

Our slogan, "Custom Made Features," means that our Productions are made to supply the Public's demand for good pictures, and the State Right Buyer's demand for this class of feature at a reasonable price.

We have applied the principles of business economy to the production of motion pictures, and are now ready to place on the market a number of features at their face value.

Good pictures at fair rental charges are easily booked; therefore the buyers of Florida Feature Films will realize quick returns on their investments.

We are spending our money for strong stories; those that interest the greatest number of motion picture patrons and devoting our energies to their artistic presentation.

We have secured the services of artists of proved ability.

We have not engaged big stage stars with over-rated salaries, the expense of which would have to be borne by the State Right Buyers and the Exhibitors.

There is no false valuation placed on our productions. They will be sold to the State Right Buyer for what they cost to produce plus a reasonable profit on the money invested.

We have solved the problem of "Good pictures at the right price" by eliminating all unnecessary waste and expense in every department of our organization.

Suppose the great miracle happens—

The grave gives up its dead. A hero of the days of 1776—a General in Washington's army—returns to life. Bringing with him the ideals of liberty and brotherhood for which he and his fellows-in-arms died, he seeks in vain for the institutions they gave their lives to establish.

He sees us, a self-satisfied race, our sacred altars of equality shattered, worshipping strange gods, exploiting the unfortunate, denying labor its just due, crushing out the lives of children at the mills and looms.

What will he say? What will he do?

Facts and Comments

IS IT impossible for an actor to strike a natural pose in introductory pictures without the aid of a cigar, a cigarette or a pipe? Recently the writer saw motion pictures of the persons in the cast of a feature. They all smoked: one man was puffing away at a big cigar, the villain was knocking the ashes off a cigarette, and the hero gave a complete exhibition of pipe smoking. Is tobacco an aid against self-consciousness in motion picture actors?

WE OUGHT to hear the end of this infantile paralysis scare without further delay. It is a well established fact that medical experts differ on the nature and treatment of the disease. Aside from these expert opinions it seems to us that even the ordinary layman is capable of understanding the foolishness of the present situation. Go to any theater in the city or in the suburbs and you will find the entrance to the theater besieged by boys and girls. They know they cannot get in, but the fascination draws them nevertheless. Now, if the crowds in front of the theater do not spread the contagion, what's the reason for compelling the crowd to wait outside? Why are not the children just as safe inside? We do not blame the feeling of alarm which has seemingly taken hold of the health authorities. In the first moments of the panic they may justifiably have acted as they did. The time for the sober second thought has come. We do not believe there is one sensible person in New York, whether in or out of the medical profession, who does not know that the admission of minors into motion picture theaters will not in any way affect the course of the disease.

OUR heartiest congratulations to the brave exhibitors who took the Edison Electric Illuminating Company into camp. This company had acted in a somewhat high-handed manner in refusing power rates to our exhibitor just because he chose to use the power for working a motor generator. The Public Service Commission held with the exhibitor and decided that once the company had sold the current it was the property of the buyer for any lawful purpose. The difference in cost being about 50 per cent in the exhibitor's favor, it is easy to see the importance of the ruling to the exhibitors. The public-spirited exhibitor who made the fight had, we are glad to say, the active support of the Manhattan Exhibitors' local and its counsel. As usual, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD printed this big bit of exhibitors' news exclusively and fully.

SEVERAL exhibitors have written in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD complaining of the vulgar titles in some of the productions of the best companies. There is no doubt that the practice of quoting the language of the gutter and the bar-room in titles of motion pictures is disgusting. Recently the writer saw some of this language without even an attempt at fumigating and disinfecting quotation marks. We advise our friends to address their complaints directly to the offending producers and, failing to get action, let them refuse to run the pictures. On behalf of the decent people who patronize our motion picture houses, we protest. If the offence is repeated we give notice that we will name the offender with becoming comments. We cannot soil the columns of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and cannot therefore repeat the objectionable words. The respect we have for our readers forbids.

A READER of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD writes from Tomsk, Siberia, describing and endorsing the Russian method of taxing motion picture theaters. He says that in Russia all tickets of admission are stamped and taxed, the cheap tickets of course bearing the lighter burden, while the high-priced seats are taxed more heavily. We cannot agree with his endorsement of such a plan of taxation. It may be defensible in Russia as a measure of war; we don't pretend to know. There is no reason on earth for introducing this or any other tax in this country. We are not at war with anybody and there is no emergency calling for extraordinary taxes on motion picture theaters. The motion picture theater is taxed enough as it is.

A CONTEST is announced. It is made known in heavy type that a certain producer is now willing to give three prizes, aggregating less than two thousand dollars for three really great plays, complete and fascinating outputs of the subtle minds of genius, provided they are such. Otherwise, they will be paid for at "current rates," whatever that means. This offer is supposed to be alluring for first-rate litterateurs, notwithstanding the fact that they are receiving more money from reputable concerns, and without the risk of getting no better reward for their efforts than "current rates."

The longer one studies life and its beautiful expression through the arts, the more one appreciates our sore lack of true creative genius, a lack that is not in the people, but in the suppression of intense effort by the very men who should nourish the rare plant. We are just beginning to realize the importance of unity in this new art of ours, a harmony of its three artistic elements, of which the story itself comes first. Treatment and interpretation of the story are tremendous factors when there is really a fine story to tell. When there is not, they are merely gay trappings on a grotesque and misshapen thing, ridiculous when it is not distinctly offensive to intelligence.

Wherein is there nourishment for ability in a proposition to take over plays submitted in competition for a high prize at any price the producer may fix, regardless of the author's right to obtain what he can for his work? Why should the prizes themselves aggregate less than would be paid for three plays out of competition? Does not such a proposition eliminate from the outset those really skilled in their calling?

It has not yet been found necessary to issue terms of contest in order to get a few tons of mixed scenarios for the purpose of examining the haystack to find one needle. Nearly every bureau drawer in the country contains one or more rejected scripts of the unskilled, most of them drawn consciously, or unconsciously, from what has already done service on the screen. Most of them have been written because screen production seems to be fascinatingly easy, by people who have not taken the trouble to investigate even the material they are using, to say nothing of their subject matter, life, and the methods of action through which interesting phases of life are revealed.

Such scripts are written with only an offhand guess as to their appropriateness for screen presentation, with only a vague longing for aesthetic appeal, and with little or no knowledge of logical structure. They will appear in every contest, if their writers have a few postage stamps, and their presence merely clogs the wheels of a scenario department. They give the false impression that there are plenty of writers in the field, whereas they rarely impress the truth, that authors of experience are taught by that experience to avoid throwing jewels into a melting pot of scrap iron.

A fine play is a jewel, a gem shaped for an exquisite setting. Diligent search among the scrap heaps, by editors endowed with a delicate sense of choice, might now and then discover one, but when a ten-thousand-dollar setting is planned for a thousand-dollar gem, it is only common sense to look for it where skilled workmanship is applied to the native value. No skilled author will, however, be found offering gems in a contest where they may be appropriated at an indefinite valuation.

Question always asked by the author of experience is, "Who is to decide on the merit of stories submitted for examination?" particularly when he has something worth while to submit. He can succeed only when he combines in himself both the creative and the critical faculties. His creation only becomes artistic through his fine spirit of choice, hence he keenly appreciates the necessity of a similar spirit on the part of those who make the award. Depending as he must on their ability to recognize merit in a story, he is usually wise enough to enter no contest where they are not named and fully empowered.

Ten thousand dollars has more than once been offered for the best novel submitted in contest, the money put up subject to the decision of an announced committee of responsible men, and no conditions imposed which might compel an author to sacrifice his product because of failure to win the prize. On the dignity, honesty and ability of the committee depends all interest intelligent authors feel in such a competition. The conditions of motion-picture scenario contests, even more than the lack of business ability shown in offering prizes below "current rates" for superior product, indicate that the promotors of such contests have got the wrong measure of authorship.

"There are two kinds of work in the world," says Dr. Frank Crane in his famous Globe editorials, "which may be called routine work and creative work. By routine work we mean the tending of machines, the discharge of office duties, keeping accounts, tending the sick, running a business, and the like." "By creative work we mean the writing of stories, the composition of music, the painting of pictures, the modeling of statues," etc. "Creative work," he admits, "is the scarcest in the world."

Not to draw lines so sharply, for creative work may enter into that of routine, and routine may play an important part in creative work, it may be said that the men who make what has not been made before, who invent, who originate, who scatter newly-discovered truth in beautiful forms, make also the age in which they live. The novelist adopts methods more subtle than those of preachment to enforce his point—he reaches the thinking faculties through sentiment, meanwhile gathering into one grand picture the details of some interesting phase of existence.

The big visualized story is a screen novel in its way. The superior screen novel offers some new element of pleasure, some fresh departure of thought, some mighty trend of passion, some delineation of beauty. A thing of rare conception, it should be brought to a perfection of structure by the author before the director is called upon to add his graces of treatment. This is the only way to unity in any art, and on that unity depends its success as a work of art. The producer who imagines that no brains are required has got the wrong measure of what he is in business to produce.

Even photography is no longer regarded as a merely mechanical process. It has developed into a subtle art in this new avenue of opportunity. Brains are required to bring out fine picture composition in photographing the action of a story; brains are required to select such settings as will harmonize with the atmosphere and mood of the story; brains are required to grasp and interpret the characters of the story; brains are required to direct the movement of interpreters and to supervise the visualization of the story—is it not possible that brains may be required to create the story?

Quick Action May Be Needed

By W. Stephen Bush.

IT APPEARS from the latest news reports that the railroad men of the country, one of the strongest of all labor organizations, have by an overwhelming majority voted to go on strike. Their leaders with this tremendous moral support back of them are now negotiating with the railroads in an effort to effect a peaceful settlement and avert the catastrophe of a general tie-up of the railways of the country. Such a tie-up would, of course, mean a fearful paralysis of our commerce, and among the industries affected thereby none would suffer more than the motion picture industry.

The possible consequences of such a disaster are plainly foreseen by many men in the industry. L. W. Brophy, a well-known exhibitor of Tuskegee, Oklahoma, and one of the leading figures at the recent Chicago Convention, has sent us a most excellent suggestion which was briefly outlined in the last issue of the Moving Picture World. The text of Mr. Brophy's telegram is here printed in full:

The Moving Picture World,
17 Madison Avenue, New York:

Should the great railroad strike materialize the Government would probably keep the mails running. Moving picture film now carried only by express through a ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This commission might be induced to grant a temporary permit to carry film by parcel post. Such permit would save millions of dollars by enabling us to keep our theaters open. Hence this suggestion is passed on to the World for investigation.

L. W. BROPHY.

We are glad to inform Mr. Brophy and all our readers at the same time that the Moving Picture World lost not a moment's time in acting on the suggestion. Letters were at once addressed both to the Postmaster General and to the Interstate Commerce Commission and action by the authorities in case of such a general railroad strike as is now threatened is confidently expected.

The motion picture is far more than a mere commercial commodity. If the Government will find ways and means to carry the newspapers as part of its mail even in the emergency of a general strike, then it seems to us means ought likewise to be found to carry motion picture films. Both agencies are of the same value and importance to the people of the United States. Both agencies disseminate information and contribute to the education as well as the amusement of the public. The motion picture is distinctly in the class of public benefit agencies which have always enjoyed enlightened treatment at the hands of constructive statesmen.

There never was and there never can be any valid reason for excluding motion picture films from the parcels post. The governments of Europe generally permit it and they are notorious for their severity in all postal matters and regulations. The foolish theory that motion picture films are liable to "explode" while in transmission through the mails might have been excused in the early days of the industry along with the belief that every motion picture machine was a sort of slumbering volcano liable to become active at any moment. Today such childish superstitions are laughed at by every intelligent person.

We hope that film men all through the country will write on this subject both to the Postmaster General and to the Interstate Commerce Commission. We subjoin copies of letters used by the Moving Picture World which we think are short and to the point and may be used to advantage by every reader who wants to write to Washington.

Interstate Commerce Commission,
Washington, D. C.:

Gentlemen:—Under the ruling made by your authority, moving picture films are barred from transmission in the mails, whether by Parcel Post or otherwise. Within recent times there have been repeated rumors and threats of a general tie-up of the railroads. If such a general tie-up were to occur, no doubt the Government would find some way to keep the mails running. As you are well aware, the moving picture film, fully as much as the newspaper and magazine, caters both to the amusement and instruction of the general public, and if your ruling is to stand, then a general strike on the railroads would mean the closing of most of the moving picture theaters in the country and an absolute end to the use of films in schools, churches, etc. We, therefore, at the suggestion of our readers, ask you whether you will consider the revocation of your rule in case there should be a general tie-up of the railroads of the country. A modification of your rule in such an emergency would not only mean a saving of many millions of invested capital, but it would also insure the supply to the public of the most popular and useful entertainment.

Postmaster General,
Washington, D. C.:

Dear Sir:—We have addressed a letter to the Interstate Commerce Commission of which the enclosed is a copy. We respectfully urge you to give your attention to the points set forth in the enclosed letter. We will also respectfully ask you to let us know whether you will favor the revocation or modification of the rule of the Interstate Commerce Commission in case of such an emergency as is described in the enclosed letter.

How Prejudice Disappears

By W. Stephen Bush.

WE HEAR much about objectionable pictures and about the bad influence that motion pictures are supposed to have on the rising generation. Many zealous reformers and many careless newspapers take it for granted that much juvenile crime is due to the motion picture, although there is not a single provable instance that might be cited in support of this theory. I personally know of at least a score of news items to the effect that boys and girls had departed from the "straight and narrow" owing to the bad influence of the screen. In all these cases efforts were made to "run down" the story and in every single instance the news item was found to be without any honest foundation.

All this adduce just by way of preface to pleasanter topic, i. e., recognition of the motion picture by men and women of culture and intellect. We are glad to learn from a report of the Chautauquan Daily that the Woman's Club of the Chautauqua is taking the right view of the mission of the screen. One of the speakers expressed his belief that the motion picture will be instrumental in solving the great social problems of today which are pressing for a settlement. To quote him: "I believe that these problems can be ended through the instrumentality of the motion pictures in familiarizing and awakening people to the importance of these problems. * * * Many people who heap upon the shoulders of the motion picture producers the responsibility for the evils of the world are blaming them for evils that they themselves have tried to remedy and could not."

Other speakers delivered themselves in similar strain. The advice given to the ladies attending the lecture was especially good and we repeat it here verbatim:

When you ladies go home I wish you would go to your local motion picture managers and ask them to put on children's pictures Saturday mornings, and a family group on Friday nights. People are sometimes inclined to over-specialize in children's pictures. Don't tell them that the educational pictures you are taking them to are good for them. Give them that kind, but disguise them. Even at Chautauqua last year, I, being a stranger here, annouonced "educational pictures" and no one came.

A motion picture manager is in the business for the same reason that a grocer is in business—to make money. If he isn't giving you what you want, use the same methods that you do with your grocer. A woman's club in Rhode Island started a motion picture show in the Y. M. C. A. building under our direction, because the manager of the local theater refused to act upon their suggestions. Inside of a month he came to the president of the club and invited her to help him select the films in the future if she would have their show stopped.

Much of the credit for this highly desirable enlightenment in high places belongs to the constructive work of the men and women who unselfishly give their time and their efforts to making the Board of Review a powerful agency for good. Among the speakers we note was Mrs. Florence Gill, who has been identified with the Board for three years and who told in a most instructive manner of the work of the organization.

Mary Pickford a Producer

Organizes a Company and Opens Offices in the Godfrey Building, New York City.

MARY PICKFORD, better known as "Little Mary," has become a producer of motion pictures on her own hook. The Mary Pickford Film Corporation is the title of the new company under which she will do business, and it is said that she is already at work on her first pictures.

The offices of the new company are in the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, and temporary studios have been secured out on Long Island.

While the Famous Players-Lasky Company, with whom "Little Mary" has been affiliated for several years, have issued no statement regarding the new company, confirmation of the story of the new organization was obtained at the offices of that company.

President and Cabinet in Pictures

Charles R. Macauley, of the Motion Picture Forum, Takes Intimate Motion Studies of the High Official Circle.

PRESIDENT WILSON and the members of the Cabinet saw themselves in a new form of motion pictures at B. F. Keith's theater, Washington, D. C., August 14. Mrs. Wilson and several hundreds of other women and men of the official circle were present also at the private showing and were given unusual and interesting views of the men actively in charge of the government of the United States.

The principal picture exhibited was entitled "Motion Picture Portrait Studies of the President of the United States and the Cabinet." It was made in Washington last month by the Motion Picture Forum of New York under the personal direction of C. R. Macauley, the cartoonist. The film might be called just as appropriately "The United States Government in Action," and that title clearly conveys its meaning.

Mr. Macauley brought his picture-making paraphernalia, technical director, cameraman and electrician to the Capital from New York for a week's stay, and it required all of that time to make the many thousands of feet of negative film required before the cutters and assemblers could get to work on the formation of the completed product, which was flashed on a theater screen for the first time the other day. Washington, of course, provided the characters and the setting—a setting such as no other motion picture has ever had in the history of the world.

One feature of the picture which attracted large attention, especially from the women and children, was the wonderful variety of smiles shown by the President and the members of his official family. In a full face view President Wilson smiled in a way which was new to those who had seen him hundreds of times and who have seen thousands of photographs of him. It is possible that this motion picture smile, when the film is exhibited in all parts of the country, may become known as "the Wilson smile."

"It was a wonderful experience for me to make the motion picture studies of the President and the heads of the great government departments," said Mr. Macauley. "I had long felt that the people of the United States were entitled to know more intimately the men who run things for them at Washington. President Wilson and the others were brought around to my way of thinking and this picture is the result."

CHARLES URBAN BRINGS MORE WAR PICTURES.

Charles Urban returned to New York on the White Star liner "Lapland" Friday, August 11, bringing with him a quantity of motion picture views of scenes taken at the front in France during the recent British and French drive on the Somme.

Harwell Joins New Company

Manager of New York Unicorn Exchange Appointed Manager of the Little Players of America, Inc.

H. W. HARWELL, manager of the New York office of the Unicorn Film Service, has severed his connection with the Unicorn to accept the position of general manager of the Little Players of America, Inc.

It was with deep regret that the board of directors accepted his resignation, as during his incumbency the New York office rapidly increased its business; this was largely due to his wide-awake and energetic methods.

H. W. Harwell.

Mr. Harwell, although a young man, is ripe in experience in the exchange and exhibiting branches of the film industry, having established an enviable reputation as manager of the photoplay department of the C. P. Walker Syndicate, the Western Canada Theaters Company. He enjoys the distinction of inaugurating the children's special performances at the Walker theater, Winnipeg—the finest and most exclusive theater in Canada.

He represented the Mutual Film Corporation in Ontario and later was appointed manager of the Universal office in Montreal.

Mr. Harwell enters upon his new field of activities with the best wishes of continued success from his many friends and business associates.

B. S. MOSS PROCLAIMS NEW IDEA.

B. S. Moss has inaugurated an entirely new idea in the field of serving the state rights man. "Hitherto," says Mr. Moss, "the state rights buyer has purchased a picture, and with the conclusion of that transaction he has found himself out in the cold.

"The policy of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation is continually to back up the exchange man and the exhibitor on each of the pictures issued upon the 'one-a-month' policy. Each and every photodrama put out under the B. S. Moss brand will bear the stamp of distinctiveness. In other words, we are trying to make the B. S. Moss pictures absolutely different and unique from any other photoplays now being placed upon the market. Each one contains a separate idea and turns the relentless searchlight of truth upon the varying phases of human nature.

"I would also like to say that at the present time we have ready for exhibition to prospective purchasers four pictures, by which they can gauge the quality of those that are to follow, and the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation absolutely guarantees that the twelve pictures for which a state rights buyer may sign will be in every respect equal to those that he has seen."

ROMA RAYMOND IN NEW METRO PICTURE.

Roma Raymond, who was considered one of the most gifted young women playing heavy dramatic roles two years ago, and who gave up acting before the camera to devote her entire time to writing, has been engaged for an important part in the five-part Metro wonderplay, as yet unnamed, in which Emily Stevens is starred. Miss Raymond will not give up scenario writing, however, but will take advantage of the waits in the studio to continue her work in that direction.

Pictures in Schools and Churches

George K. Spoor of Essanay Favors the Plan and Gives Reasons

THERE seems to be a feeling of uneasiness among many exhibitors because of the widespread movement to inaugurate the showing of motion pictures in the schools and churches. Some have expressed a fear that this would encroach on the territory of the motion picture theater; that it would lessen patronage and detract from business.

It is my firm belief that the reverse will be the result; that it will be a means of fostering interest in pictures and therefore will increase the patronage of motion picture houses.

The growth of such interest among church poeple and educators is extremely gratifying to me because it shows that they have finally come to realize the value of pictures, not only as an amusement, but as the greatest medium of instruction and moral uplift.

That I favor that which is of benefit to the exhibitors and oppose that which is not may be taken for granted, for the interest of the exhibitor and the manufacturer is one. What is a benefit to one will benefit the other, and what injures one will injure both.

When the motion picture business was inaugurated it met with violent opposition. It faced unwarranted prejudice on every hand. There was something of solid worth in the motion picture or it would not have survived these attacks. It would have died in its inception. As it is, it has swept away all obstacles and has become universal.

Although the former prejudices have largely been swept away, its worth, both as an amusement, as an art and as an educational factor, now being recognized in the literary, scientific and educational world, yet there still is a large element among certain classes of church people which opposes it.

This opposition is due to the fact that they do not know what motion pictures are. They do not understand their present value because they have not seen them. To many people the motion picture is still a cheap melodrama, occupying the same relative position to real drama that the penny dreadful occupies to literature.

Show these people pictures and you will dissipate this idea. And it is necessary to take the pictures to them, for this class does not now attend the theater. Just here is where the exhibitor is benefitted instead of injured. A new field is opened up to the exhibitor, a new motion picture public. A new class of motion picture advocates will be created.

The churches will foster interest in pictures. It will begin with one show on Sunday and stimulate the demand for more. That portion of the church public which has not before attended the motion picture theater will be so attracted by their value and interest that they will become regular theater patrons. In this way the exhibitor increases his business instead of lessening it.

By showing pictures in the schools, we not only are educating the pupils by means of the screen, but we are educating the boys and girls to love pictures and to rely upon them for their amusement. We are consequently creating still another class of motion picture enthusiasts who will be found regularly in the theaters.

The possibility that those who see pictures in the church and school will become surfeited and stay away from the theater is infinitesimal. The pictures shown in these institutions will be comparatively few and of a different character to those shown in the theater. The one is primarily educational, the other primarily to amuse. And the educational picture will create and stimulate the desire for amusement in the same line.

But even if it were desired it would be impossible to check such a movement. The motion picture is of universal interest; it appeals to everyone in every walk of life. Any movement as widespread and as deep seated as this is bound to sweep away all obstacles. The motion picture not only is the chief amusement, but is bound to become one of the chief moral and educational factors.

GEORGE K. SPOOR.

Big Things for Paramount Week of Aug. 29

Famous Players and Lasky Features Are Backed Up With Some Highly Interesting Short Reels.

TWO particularly strong features head the Paramount Program for the week of August 29, in one of which Lou-Tellegen makes his return to the screen in the Lasky production of "The Victory of Conscience," and the other in which Valentine Grant, the Famous Players star, will be seen in "Jean o' the Heather." Both features have exceptionally strong stories, and the stars in both pictures are supported by wonderfully clever casts.

Short-reel subjects for that week will include the twenty-ninth edition of the "magazine-on-the-screen," the Paramount Pictographs; the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, "Climbing the Austrian Alps," and the Paramount-Bray cartoon, "Farmer Al Falfa's Revenge."

The four leading themes included in the twenty-ninth edition of the Pictographs are "The Working of the George Jr. Republic," "How Did You Get That Hat?" "The Settlement and the Slums" and "The Peaceful Dove in War."

The opening subject is the first motion picture that has ever been made of the remarkable George Jr. Republic, at which boys earn their own living, conduct their own government, handle their own savings, and learn the fundamentals of running a government by conducting one of their own.

The story of the derby hat is one of the most interesting that has ever been screened and takes the audience through each phase of the making of a derby from the time that the rabbit's hair is received at the factory, until it is finally finished. Few people know that there is not a particle of glue or musilagous substance put into the fur which makes the derby hat, in order to hold it together, but such is the case, and the subject is treated in a most interesting manner.

During the past six months, Paramount Pictographs have taken up a number of subjects for the betterment of the general public, chief of which was "Better Babies." The story of the "Settlement and the Slums," as told in these pictures, has been made for the purpose of bringing home to the people the tremendous service that the settlement renders to the city. Most people think that a social settlement is no place for them to go, but their idea will be changed when they see this picture.

The dove of peace is shown as it is used in war-time, giving an idea of how the pigeon was used by the Germans in invading Belgium, when the single order was sent out by the Imperial Government, "Bring your firearms and pigeons." The picture shows how the pigeon flies at the height of 600 feet and travels at not less than 60 miles an hour, carrying with him messages in the quill on his leg as long as five ordinary novels. This is very interestingly portrayed.

In the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, Mr. Holmes takes his "easy-chair-journeyers" on a trip up the Austrian Alps, starting at Salzberg, the birthplace of Mozart, the immortal musician. The party climbs sometimes by rail, and at other times roped to each other and the guides, through the clouds, finally arriving on the peak of Gross Glauchen, 12,460 feet above the sea. The trip is particularly interesting, for from that height you can gaze around for miles over the wonderful country, realizing that you have attained the height of your ambition of getting all the thrills and excitement of climbing long miles, without any of the perils, cold or inconveniences of actual mountain climbing.

The Paramount-Bray cartoon, by Paul Terry, tells the story of "Farmer Al Falfa's Revenge," in which an English huntsman mistakes the farmer for a goat while he is bathing his whiskers in the lake and shoots at him, scaring the farmer to such an extent that he scampers away with the Englishman in pursuit. The farmer is caught and when the Englishman realizes his mistake and attempts to apologize, Al Falfa settles the argument by bouncing a good sized rock on the hunter's head behind his ear.

CRACK FILM MAN JOINS UNICORN.

H. A. Fuld, well-known in Eastern film circles as a "crack" film man, is now connected with the New York branch of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, covering Long Island. Mr. Fuld was formerly with Pathe, and was always well up near the top of the list of the biggest business getters. During the month of May he won the first prize. The reason for this is that Mr. Fuld gives his personal attention to the exhibitors, and familiarizes himself with conditions around a house, and does not permit his interest to lag after the theater is taking service.

Metro Has a Shakespearian "Round Up"

Remarkable Cast in Metro's "Romeo and Juliet" Now Nearing Completion, With F. X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the Roles of the Historic Lovers

ANNOUNCEMENT was made at the Metro offices early in the week that the elaborate picturization of Shakespeare's immortal romantic drama, "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the roles of the historic lovers, is nearly completed, and will be released some time this month. John W. Noble and his corps of assistant directors are now engaged in taking the final scenes at Brighton Beach, where the market-place of mediaeval Verona has been reproduced for the purposes of photography.

The cast of "Romeo and Juliet" is a notable one. It includes a Booth, a Sothern, a Mantell, a Kemble and a Davenport. Its leading players are Shakespearean actors and actresses of world-wide reputation. Many of them have starred in Shakespearean parts, and nearly every member of the cast has had a classical training. The only exceptions to this rule are some of the young girls who play the pages and smaller parts, where youth and beauty are the principal requirements, and in such cases as that of the apothecary, whom Barry Maxwell visualizes so well, that Director Noble refused to consider anyone else after having seen him, and John Davidson, who appears as the dashing young Paris, the rival of Romeo for Juliet's love.

Sumptuous settings are made necessary by the wealth of the two great families, the Montagues and the Capulets, to which Romeo and Juliet belonged. Furniture, costumes, hangings are all of the richest known in Italy at the beginning of the fourteenth century, a period when luxury was one of the distinguishing features of every great house.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne have entered into their parts with the utmost reverence for the greatest dramatist of all time in his most poetic mood. Ethel Mantell, daughter of the eminent tragedian, Robert Mantell, will have the part of Rosaline, Romeo's first love, the cold, proud lady who disdains his affection. Rosaline has never been shown on the stage except by Sir Henry Irving. No speeches are written for her, but it is the privilege of the screen to show her. Robert Cummings will be the Friar Laurence of the production. Mr. Cummings is well known both on the speaking stage and in screen work.

Friar John is rather more important in the screen production than it is in the stage version. It will be played by Alexandre J. Herbert, a young English actor. Leonard Grover, who is more than 80 years old, will appear as "An old man of the Capulet family." With him is his son, Leonard Grover, Jr., who plays Uncle Capulet. Horace Vinton, 30 years ago a Broadway idol, and always a sterling actor, has the part of Prince Escalus, the dignified and noble ruler of Verona at the time of the feud between the houses of Montague and Capulet. W. Lawson Butt will be seen as Tybalt. Mr. Butt is a prominent English actor who has played important parts with Lewis Waller, Sir Beerbohm Tree and F. R. Benson, playing the well known Shakespearean leading parts. The part of Lady Capulet will be in the capable hands of Helen Dunbar, who had so many years excellent experience at the head of her own company. Miss Dunbar has been a careful student of Shakespeare all her life. Lady Montague, Romeo's mother, is played by Genevieve Reynolds, a favorite member of Robert Mantell's company for years. The nurse in the present production of "Romeo and Juliet" is Adella Barker.

Lionel Belmore, who staged some of Sir Henry Irving's most elaborate original productions, plays a small part in the Bushman and Bayne "Romeo and Juliet," because all the other parts had been given out before Mr. Bushman knew he was in New York. This desire to co-operate in the epoch-making production which all feel the screen version of "Romeo and Juliet" to be is responsible for the important people who are playing small parts. It accounts for the Bary Macollum and Norman Macdonald's playing respectively the second and third servant of the Capulet family. Bary Macollum was with James K. Hackett in the all-star cast of "Merry Wives of Windsor" and he formerly toured with Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley in repertoire. Other prominent persons who have been content to play small parts are John Burke, Lewis Sealy, Edwyn Eaton, E. P. Sullivan, Morgan Thorpe, Alexander Loftus and Robert Vivian, all of whom know their Shakespeare thoroughly, and who have had valuable experience.

The heads of the warring houses of Montague and Capulet are impersonated respectively by Eric Hudson and Edmund Elton. The fencing of Olaf Skavlan as Benvolio and Fritz Leiber as Mercutio should give a filip of added interest to the fights in "Romeo and Juliet." The Bishop of Verona is played by William H. Burton, who was a member of Ford's company in Washington in the early days. Other important members of the "Romeo and Juliet" production are Edwin Boring, Ben Higgins, Joseph Dailey, Charles A. Smily, A. P. Kaye, Joseph Robison and Jack Blake.

As to the great names included in the cast, Harry Sothern, who plays Abram, is a nephew of E. H. Sothern and of Sam Sothern, and has learned his art in the companies of those stars. Marie Booth, who is seen as a court lady in the photodrama, is a niece of Edwin Booth. Violet Hall-Caine, who plays one of the Capulet family, is a niece of the well known English author. Emma Kemble is a connection of the famous Kemble family of actors and actresses, and has appeared in a number of notable Shakespearean productions. Blanche Davenport is a relative of the famous Fanny Davenport. John B. Hollis is a member of the well known Beresford family of England, and Venie Atherton, who plays a court lady, belongs to that family of the same name which is equally well known in England and America.

Famous persons of earlier days and those who are enjoying the sunshine of the public's favor at the present time—all have united under the leadership of the directors, John W. Noble and Edward Elsner, the Shakespearean advisor, Rudolph De Cordova, and their aides, to make Metro's screen production of "Romeo and Juliet" a triumphant success and a beautiful spectacle.

OPERATOR-BLUEJACKET WRITES TO WORLD.

The Moving Picture World has received an interesting letter from one of its far away subscribers, J. O. Husband, of the United States ship Monocacy, and dated from Chungking, China. Mr. Husband writes he is 1,400 miles up the Yangtse River, where he admits one never sees any amusement except such as the sailors may make among themselves. "We do see a few Chinese getting their heads cut off, now and then," he adds as an afterthought, "which causes a little excitement for the average civilized man. I can hardly wait until the mail arrives from the old U. S. A., as I am so anxious to get the World and find out what is going on in pictures. Several of the boys are like myself in this matter."

Mr. Husband inquires if by any chance the Moving Picture World knows of any one requiring a sober and reliable operator, and one that can obey orders. He says he had two years' experience with an Edison machine before joining the navy and that he would certainly like to get back on the firing line again. While he realizes his lack of experience he believes he can make good.

That Universal Program for the Week of Aug. 21

Three Specials and a Red Feather Feature are but Part of the Good Things Offered to Speed the Waning Summer

IN THE week of August 21 there will be released on the Universal program no less than three special features in addition to a Red Feather feature. "Snoring in High C" features Gertrude Selby and will be released under the L-Ko brand.

Bluebird Ready with September Program

Four Meritorious Subjects Have Been Scheduled for Release.

THE Bluebird people are ready to supply their exhibitors with good material with which to combat the opposition to be created by the reopened theaters of dramatic and vaudeville persuasion when Labor Day inaugurates the regular season. While there are ready for release enough features to equip the Bluebird program for three months, the important detail of fixing the actual release dates remains to be accomplished when expediency requires action.

The September lay-out, however, is ready for announcement and begins with "The Unattainable" on Labor Day. In this feature Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson will be introduced to the Bluebird program, with Mattie Witting, Richard Morris and Alfred Allen, principals in support. Elwood D. Hemming's story inspired the scenario Eugene B. Lewis prepared for Lloyd B. Carleton to direct from, and Roy H. Klaffik performed the cinematographic service.

"Saving the Family Name" is depended upon by the Bluebird people to create a good impression, because of the fact that it is a Smalley production with Lois Weber directing and Phillips Smalley acting the leading male role. Mary MacLaren, the heroine of "Shoes," will be the featured one and in support Harry Depp, Carl Von Schiller and Jack Holt will be prominent. Lois Weber prepared her own scenario from Evelyn Heath's story and Allen Siegler was the cinematographer. September 11 is the release date for "Saving the Family Name."

Timeliness will be depended upon to heighten the interest in " Behind the Lines," set for release September 18. Mary Rider's story has been adapted to the screen by Walter Woods and Henry McRae took a large company to Mexico, where he directed a feature that pictures a possible situation that may arise between two neighboring republics. Edith Johnson will be introduced to Bluebird patrons as Harry Carey's leading lady in this feature and Marc Fenton, Ruth Clifford, L. C. Shumway, Miriam Shelby and Ray Hanford will have prominent roles.

"The Clique of Gold," a feature that will probably be issued September 25 under another title, has been based on Emilie Gaboriau's famous novel. This will bring to the Bluebird program the leaven of an old-fashioned melodrama, with the plotting of villainy against virtue and morality losing out on prompt schedule just at the right instant. Elsie Jane Wilson will be the featured one, impersonating the arch-villainess; Francelia Billington will be the impersonator of virtue triumphant and Hobart Henly will be our brave hero, who arrives in the nick of time. Sydney Dean, C. N. Hammond, Douglas Gerrard and Tom Lockhard have been chosen to impersonate, as ideal representatives, the stirring types that may be depended upon to restore to public attention a style of acting and a type of drama that will surely be welcomed as a diversion bound to awaken hearty interest and immediate approval.

METRO TRAVELOGUES BRIM WITH NOVELTIES.

Metro Travelogues, which are a popular and recent addition to the Metro program, are proving the most attractive features of their kind ever presented upon the screen. In line with Metro's policy to obtain the very best and highest standard in everything, scores of expert cameramen are now at work in all parts of the country, photographing the most interesting subjects there are to be found.

Mutuals for Week of August 21

A Kolb and Dill Comedy Drama Heads a Particularly Strong and Well Balanced Program

CHIEF among the feature offerings of the Mutual Film Corporation for the week beginning August 21 is "A Million for Mary," first of the American-Mutual Star Productions, featuring C. William Kolb and Max Dill, originals of the famous comedy team of Kolb and Dill, noted comedians of the legitimate stage and the higher class vaudeville circuits. "A Million for Mary" is a character comedy drama in five acts and will be released Monday, August 21.

Scene from "A Million for Mary" (Mutual).

It was written by Aaron Hoffman, especially engaged by the American studios to prepare fitting vehicles for these two popular funmakers; scenarioized by Al Santell and screened under the personal supervision of Rea Berger, this feature sets a new departure in photoplay production in story as well as in situations, scene splendor and action.

The entire five reels are permeated with unusually humorous situations and interspersed with pathos enough to add the necessary dramatic contrasts in the unfolding of the story on which the production is founded. In point of story no more fitting vehicle could have been obtained for the premier of these noted funmakers. Kolb appears in his laughable characterization of "Louie" and Dill as "Mike," names by which they are intimately known to millions of followers throughout the country.

Second of the Mutual features for the same week will be released Thursday, August 24, under the title of "The Mystery of the Riviera," a detective story rivalling in plot and mystery any production of its kind ever screened. The story on which the feature is founded is based on the exploits of a notorious criminal and the efforts of a celebrated Paris detective to bring about his exposure and arrest.

The scenes, are laid in Nice, where most of the production was filmed during the height of the annual carnival. Rare views of this internationally famous fete form a background for the action of considerable of the drama. Unusual night scenes, showing the marvelous fireworks display at Nice during the carnival, are numbered among the many spectacular incidents of the production.

In the cast of "The Mystery of the Riviera" are the names of many famous foreign exponents of the silent drama, among them Jane Mae, Paul Manson, Maurice Lugust, Valentine Petit and various others.

Mutual this week will release four two-act subjects, the first of which will be put out on August 21, under the title of "The Enchantment," with Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh playing the leads. "The Enchantment" is an allegorical play, in which Miss Rich is seen in several nude scenes in an artist's studio.

Second of the week's two-act features, "Getting the Grafters," is scheduled for release August 24. This is a Thanhouser production and deals with the criminal methods resorted to by a band of unscrupulous politicians in their efforts to control the editorial policy of the city's chief newspaper. Doris Grey is featured in the feminine role.

"Nell Dale's Men Folks," featuring Frank Borzage and Anna Little, is the Mustang contribution to the week's two-part offerings. It will be released August 25. "Nell Dale's Men Folks" is a Western story of exceptional interest, having to do with the supreme sacrifice made by a half-witted boy to save the sweetheart of his sister unjustly accused of a crime. The story is from the facile pen of Kenneth B. Clarke and was screened by Mr. Borzage, who also enacts the role of the hero, a sturdy son of the plains.

The Centaur two-part feature of the same week is "The Spite Husband," for release August 26. As the featured player of this two-part offering, Mr. Wilbur makes his last appearance as the star in a picture of this length. Hereafter he will be starred in five-act feature productions only, the first of which will be released shortly under the title of "The Painted Lie." "The Spite Husband," written by the star and screened by Robert B. Broadwell, is a unique drama, considerable of the action of which takes place in a small sea coast settlement. Mae Gaston, Harrish Ingraham, Ida Lewis, Jessie Burnett and Claude Mortonson are members of Mr. Wilbur's supporting company in this production.

Two single reel comedies will be released August 22, under the titles of "Going to the Dogs" and "Fair Lady." The former is from the Vogue studios and the last, a Falstaff offering, featuring Riley Chamberlain, in another of his famous roles of "Conductor No. 378."

The Beauty comedy of the week, "In a Prohibition Town," with Orral Humphrey as the star, will be released August 23. Two Cub comedies, "The Rookie," with George Ovey, for release August 25, and "Harmony and Discord," featuring Billy Armstrong, for release August 27, complete the single-reel comedy offerings.

Mutual Weekly No. 86, comprised of a number of interesting news events, and "See America First," the Mutual popular scenic feature, will be released August 27. "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine pictures, will go to the public Sunday August 27.

VITAGRAPH FEATURE BY IRVIN COBB.

Irving Cobb, the irrepressible ally of good humor, has finally "busted into the pictures" with his first photoplay, the same being an original drama in which the adventures of a piece of chance are narrated.

The name of the picture is quite appropriately, "The Adventures of Bill," and whereas there is much to do in the story with actual money, there is nevertheless a powerful and unusual story concerning the individuals through whom the bill has its adventures.

The photoplay is being produced by Vitagraph under the auspices of the American Banker's Association, which is waging a nation-wide thrift campaign. In it there will be scenes taken in the United States Treasury, which will be the first ever obtained for use in a film drama.

The direction of the play is in the hands of Wilfred North; it was picturized by Garfield Thompson. Lillian Walker, the star, will have in her supporting cast Tom Mills, Mrs. Mary Maurice, Walter McGrail and Edward Elkas.

HALE AND LEWIS IN POWELL PRODUCTIONS.

An item of more than unusual interest is the placing under a long term contract of the well-known stars, Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis, by the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., to appear in the feature pictures of that company. Mr. Hale and Mr. Lewis have been associated together since the beginning of the "Exploits of Elaine" serial and following with the "Iron Claw," where both added further laurels to their already excellent reputation. At the conclusion of the "Iron Claw" the two stars were separated for a few weeks, but fate brought them together again, with the result as above stated.

FRANK MILLS ON METRO ARTISTIC STAFF.

Metro Pictures Corporation has engaged Frank Mills, noted stage and screen leading man, as the featured player with Emily Stevens in her new five-act photoplay, "Capital Punishment," which George D. Baker will direct.

MacDermott in Blue Ribbon Features

With Naomi Childers Famous Screen Favorite Will Be Seen in "The Footlights of Fate."

THE countless admirers of Marc MacDermott, who have been looking forward to a release in which he appears, will be pleased to know that the Vitagraph has listed his latest effort, "The Footlights of Fate," from the novel "Joan Thursday," by Louis Joseph Vance, for Monday, August 21. Naomi Childers in the role of Joan, co-stars with MacDermott.

The story tells of a young girl, Joan Thursday, who goes on the stage to make a reputation. She meets Matthias, a playwright, whose latest manuscript is about to be produced. He falls in love with her and asks her to become his wife. Joan will not give up her idea of a stage career and is given a part in the play by Marbridge, who secretly nurses an affection for Joan. Marbridge invites her to his apartment, telling her she is to be one of a party. Upon arriving, she learns they are alone and realizes the real character of the man. Nella, Marbridge's former sweetheart, has followed the unsuspecting couple to the apartment. She enters and in a fit of rage shoots Marbridge and bids Joan to return to Matthias, who is waiting for her.

MacDermott, as Matthias, handles the part in his old-time form; the style that won him his many admirers. He is better than ever and is given an opportunity to display his many talents. Naomi Childers, in the role of Joan, does herself credit. Her portrayal leads us to believe that she spent much time in studying the manuscript, for she seemed to live and act the character assigned to her. The capable pair are given support by a cast that includes Carolyn Birch, Robert Whitworth, Josephine Earle, Jack Bulger and William Shea. William Humphrey is responsible for the direction of the picture, which is in five parts.

"Taming Grouchy Bill" will be released Saturday, September 9, in the Tom Mix Western comedy series. There is a laugh in every inch of this film.

"War Brides" Well Under Way

Director and Company Begin Work With Rush While Selznick Closes Distributing Company Deals.

WORK on the Herbert Brenon production of Madame Nazimova in "War Brides" went forward with a rush last week at the Ideal studio on the New Jersey palisades. Last Monday the great tragedienne stepped before the motion picture camera for the first time in her career and under the skilled guidance of Director Brenon began the enactment of the scenario version of Marion Craig Wentworth's thrilling drama.

The speed with which the Brenon mechanical department has organized and built sets, collected properties and arranged all the details of a big production, has caused widespread comment among the craft. But the great revelation, according to Mr. Brenon, is the facility with which Mme. Nazimova adapted her astounding art to the requirements of the screen.

While the producing company is at work in the studio Lewis J. Selznick, head of the distributing system, has quietly completed the details for handling the Brenon productions along lines similar to the new Clara Kimball Young pictures. All the exchanges he had built up for Miss Young's pictures have taken over the Nazimova picture, as well as all future Brenon Film Corporation productions.

In addition, Mr. Selznick last week closed two big deals for the distribution of all his attractions in the far West. With A. H. Blank, head of a chain of theaters in Omaha, Des Moines, Davenport and other cities in that territory, Mr. Selznick closed for the distribution of the Clara Kimball Young and Brenon pictures in Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa. A new exchange has been incorporated under the name of the Mid-West Photo Play Corporation for this purpose.

The second deal involves the distribution of all the Selznick attractions throughout Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana. The transaction was negotiated with M. Rosenberg, head of the De Luxe Feature Film Service, with headquarters in Seattle. This company handled the distribution in that territory of such pictures as "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er Do Well," "The Little Girl Next Door" and "Neptune's Daughter."

Messrs. Blank and Rosenberg came to New York to complete the deals with Mr. Selznick and have returned to the West highly enthusiastic over the prospect.

"The Selznick propositions are the greatest on the open booking market," said Mr. Blank, "and will be the greatest in the country. The exhibitors throughout my territory are already crowding upon each other's heels in their eagerness to connect with the Clara Kimball Young and Brenon pictures."

JAPAN LOOMS UP AS EXPORT FIELD.

The Land of Nippon is the latest foreign country to loom up strongly as a field for the exportation of American films and reports would indicate that before the war is over the popularity of American screen stars will make it a difficult task for French and Italian producers to regain a foothold there.

The Kalem Company is finding a particularly fertile field in Japan. "Stingaree" has been shown successfully there, and "The Social Pirates" is scheduled to start its release soon. Because of the favor greeting "Stingaree" much interest has already been shown in "The Girl from Frisco," which features the same stars, Marin Sais and True Boardman.

But it is for Ham and Bud that the Japanese audiences show their greatest partiality. The humor of "the tall and short fellows" seems to be the type that particularly strikes the Japanese taste. Evidences of the popularity of these comedians may be seen in the fact that the two Japanese theatrical publications, the Genbunsha and the Katsudo-Shashin-Zasshi, published illustrated articles on Ham and Bud last month. Japanese manufacturers are also making arrangements to market "Ham" dolls.

KOPFSTEIN COMPLETES "SOMEBODY'S SISTER" SCENARIO.

Since limiting his efforts to the writing of four original scenarios a year Jacques Kopfstein, who is recognized as among our foremost photoplaywrights, has just completed "Somebody's Sister."

This new screen play treats with the fact that every woman is "Somebody's Sister," and is replete with soul gripping situations.

Activities at Thanhouser Studio

Four Companies at Work on New Features Under Mr. Thanhouser's Personal Supervision.

WITH four companies at work on new features and with a number of big productions already completed, the Thanhouser Film Corporation is splendidly prepared to keep its contract with the Pathe Exchange to release two first-class features a month.

Florence LaBadie in "The Fugitive," written by Philip Lonergan and directed by Frederick Sullivan, was the first Thanhouser-Pathe release. This was followed by Gladys Hulette in "The Shine Girl," by Agnes C. Johnston, directed by William Parke. The high quality of these features has proved that Edwin Thauhouser is keeping his promise to produce an unbroken line of pictures of superior quality. Florence LaBadie's work in "The Fugitive" has been universally praised and "The Shine Girl" has been called a masterpiece.

"Hidden Valley," with Valkyrien, the Danish beauty, will be the Thanhouser-Pathe release for September 10. It is a South African story by Emmet Mixx, directed by Ernest Warde. Valkyrien is the white goddess of an African tribe and a startling sacrificial dance by the goddess is one of the big scenes in the production.

Another Florence LaBadie feature, "The Fear of Poverty," by Agnes C. Johnston, author of "The Shine Girl," directed by Frederic Sullivan, is to be released on September 24. Miss LaBadie is supported by George Marlo, Ethyle Cooke and Edwin Stanley. Miss LaBadie plays two roles, mother and daughter, and an immense amount of double exposure work was necessary to produce the desired effect.

"The Fear of Poverty" is expensively mounted with huge sets. Beautiful gowns are a feature. Miss LaBadie's work is unusually effective.

Mr. Thanhouser announces that Frederick Warde, the great Shakespearean actor, will be seen in a superb production of "King Lear" early in October. This will be followed by Florence La Bardie in "Saint, Devil and Woman," a psychological drama dealing with a woman of three natures.

"The Image Maker of Thebes," with Valkyrien, supported by Boyd Marshall, is a costly production that will be released by Thanhouser through Pathe later.

Pictures in process of production are "The World and the Woman," starring Jeanne Eagels, a stirring tale of a girl of the streets who rises and triumphs; "Through the Open Door," starring Marie Shotwell, supported by Fred Eric and Alphonse Ethier, an Italian story crowded with big scenes; Frederick Warde in "The Vicar of Wakefield," Florence LaBadie in "The Pillory" and Gladys Hulette in "Prudence, the Pirate," a comedy-drama by Agnes C. Johnston, who wrote "The Shine Girl" and directed by William Parke, who directed that picture.

Mr. Thanhouser is personally supervising every feature that he releases through Pathe and is so far ahead in production that he never need rush to catch a release date. Every feature, therefore, is made perfect in every detail before it is released.

J K. BURGER PRESENTED WITH A LOVING CUP.

J. K. Burger, assistant general manager of the International Film Service, Inc., was once referred to by George R. Allison, manager of the Atlanta branch, as Simon Legree, and Simon Legree Burger he has been ever since.

Just to show that the cognomen was applied in love and not in anger, Allison and the other ten branch managers of the International have just presented Mr. Burger with a magnificent loving cup. The presentation marked no particular occasion, but the branch managers just decided that it would be the best way in which they could show their appreciation of Mr. Burger. The cup is of solid silver, three feet high, and even Mr. Burger admits that it is "some cup."

REAL BARONESS A METRO ACTRESS.

Baroness Dorothy van Raven has been selected to visualize Juliet in the newest one-reel comedy, "A Taxicab Elopement," starring Max Figman and Lolita Robertson on the Metro program. Miss Robertson in her character in the photoplay has a vision of the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet," and the Baroness was selected from a long list of applicants for the picture. She is also in the cast of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne's screen production of "Romeo and Juliet."

Although born in Auburn, N. Y., where she first saw the light as Dorothy Kingdon, she is a real Baroness. Her husband belongs to the Dutch nobility, and comes from a line not much removed in position from the crown.

Champions on Screen

Frank Gotch and Willie Ritchie in Eighth Selig Athletic Series.

FRANK GOTCH, champion wrestler of the world, who recently retired undefeated, appears in the eighth release of the Selig Athletic Series, being released through the V-L-S-E. His last wrestling match, which was staged with Jim Essen, champion of Scotland, and which he won, as usual, is the feature of this Selig athletic release. Gotch not only handles Essen with considerable ease, but also demonstrates the various holds with which he won the world's championship, and these holds explain why he never lost the title.

Willie Ritchie, who lost the lightweight championship of the world to Freddie Welch in England, by reason of the peculiarity of the English decision methods, also appears in this release. Ritchie is seen in a scientific boxing match with Lew Steffens, and by his exhibition demonstrates why he is declared by sport writers to be one of the cleverest men in the ring today.

Other champions to appear in this release are Norman Ross and Miss Olya Doffner, male and female swimming champions of the United States. These are shown winning their honors in the recent swimming tournament at San Francisco.

Mrs. H. Arnold Jackson, one of the best golf stars of the country, appears on the same film. Mrs. Jackson, who has won many national honors, is seen demonstrating her methods of putting, driving and approaching.

Edwin O. Weinberg

EDWIN O. WEINBERG, the well-known and popular exhibitor of Troy, N. Y., has sold his interest in the Plaza theater, and has come to the big city combining business with pleasure. Mr. Weinberg has not had a vacation in over six years and thinks himself entitled to a brief rest.

Edwin O. Weinberg.

The Plaza theater, which he has managed for five years, is one of the smaller houses of Troy, but under his energetic and original methods of doing business it was undoubtedly one of the most successful His enterprise in handling big features like "Cabiria," "The Christian," "The Ne'er Do Well," etc., for a small house and quitting a big winner in the transaction has brought him many admiring letters of congratulation. He always made it a point to take an active and prominent part in the civic life of Troy. As a member of the Troy Rotary Club, for instance, he achieved no little prominence. He delivered a lecture on motion pictures before a special and well-attended meeting of the club and contributed many articles in defence of the motion picture to the local press. His host of friends in Troy and in the whole capital district regret his decision to leave Troy. He has the good wishes of all who know him. Mr. Weinberg, who is only twenty-nine and full of youthful energy, which is looking for a larger outlet, hopes to enter the film world in the larger field here. His exhibiting experience, his splendid education and his ambition will be valuable assets in any big enterprise whether in the exhibiting or the distributing line.

NEW IVAN PLAYER.

Harry Spingler, who for over a year was starred with William Farnum in Fox film plays, has joined the Ivan Productions. Mr. Spingler is one of the best-known juvenile leading men in filmdom. His association dates back to 1911, when he left vaudeville to enter pictures. Mr. Spingler will be presented with Anna Q. Nilsson, William H. Tooker, Frankie Mann, Wilmuth Merkyl and Rose Coghlan in the second all-star cast Ivan production, "Her Surrender."

Australian Notes

TWO pictures, both bearing the title, "Australia Prepared," will be shown to Sydney audiences next week. The first, released by Australasian Films, Ltd., claims to be the original production, and is composed of scenes showing events following the declaration of war, recruits being enlisted, transports leaving Australia, munition making and similar scenes. The other picture, which is the idea of several Sydney business men, is a similar subject. Big advertising is being done between the two pictures.

I understand that Australasian Films' subject will be screened in America very soon.

Raymond Longford's masterpiece, "The Mutineers of the Bounty," which is eight reels in length, is nearing completion and will be given its premiere at the Sydney town hall very shortly. This will be the first Australian dramatic photoplay to be given a showing in that building, which is considered a very high honor.

Jack Gavin, producer of "The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell," at present being shown in America, is engaged in filming a dramatic subject of a patriotic nature, to be entitled "The Birth of Australia."

Donald Cornwallis, an English elocutionist, who produced several "kinema-poems" in England some time ago, is filming a picture in the Australasian Films studio in Sydney. This is similar to past productions of Mr. Cornwallis, who recites the poem as the action is enacted on the screen. The picture now in production is a version of "The Vale of Kismet" and is being made on an elaborate scale.

Alfred Rolfe, head producer for Australasian Films, Ltd., is still at work on a big industrial subject to be entitled "Australia a Nation." This picture deals with all the chief industries and manufactures of this continent, and is to be given wide publicity through many foreign countries, including the U. S. A.

William Szarka, of the firm of Szarka Bros., of Sydney, leaves for a tour through the United States. Szarka Bros. own a big picture theater in Enmore, a suburb of Sydney, which is one of the finest outside the metropolitan area. Mr. Szarka is going to America to get the latest information on photoplay theater construction.

Among those leaving by the "Makura" for America last week was Alec B. Hellmrich, general manager of the Co-operative Film Exchange. Mr. Hellmrich is on an extensive trip through the U. S. A. and Canada.

A new photoplay theater is shortly to be opened in Sydney, which will be the largest continuous show south of the line. It is owned by Hoyt's, Ltd., who already control a big theater in Melbourne. When completed, the Sydney house will show first-run Metro features, and also probably another five-reeler on the same program—a total of ten reels.

Last week's program at the Crystal Palace was headlined by Selig's "The Ne'er Do Well," Rex Beach's story of Panama. The picture drew huge attendances, especially on the first day of the run, which was a public holiday, and S. R. O. signs were exhibited every evening.

In spite of the popularity of the film, it was kept at the Crystal Palace for one week only, when it was transferred to another theater, the Lyric, where it is still proving a big box-office success.

A coming release by the Fraser Film Exchange is the Universal feature, "Undine," and it is already the subject of wide advertising. Universal features are already well established with exhibitors and the public in New South Wales, and Fraser's are endeavoring to further publicity in this direction by big advertising.

"Secret Love," the first Bluebird feature to arrive in Sydney, played to full houses at the Haymarket theater last week. The lobby of the theater was appropriately decorated with bluebirds for the occasion.

"The Path of Happiness" is the biggest winner from Universal yet, and taxed the capacity of the Haymarket theater (which holds over two thousand) to the utmost.

During a tour of the moving picture theaters in Australia, Denver Dixon, the subject of this illustration, has appeared in about four hundred houses. Attired in his cowboy outfit, his appearance gave a realistic touch to our American films of western life. He states that the theaters in Australia seem to depend largely on American films for their programs. He expects to return to Los Angeles shortly.

Films shown during the last two weeks include the following: "The Last Act" and "The Bugle Call," which were the two dramatic subjects on the fifteenth Triangle program. The latter picture has proved to be one of the most enjoyable Triangles yet, and by general request the management arranged for an extended screening at another theater. Willie Collier, Jr., has made a tremendous hit with Australian picture goers.

The sixteenth program had "Sold for Marriage" and "Bullets and Brown Eyes" as chief attractions. The latter is a delightful picture and has been favorably commented upon everywhere.

"A Debt of Honor" was the Metro feature last week. Owing to the late arrival of the American mail, no picture of this brand has been screened this week.

"Pasquale" is the current screening at the Crystal Palace. For advertising purposes, the name of the subject has been changed to "Two War Wives."

Pictures seen in Melbourne this week include: "Maciste," with the giant of Cabiria in the leading role; "Esmeralda" and "The White Pearl," Paramount features; "Aloha Oe" and "Matrimony," Triangle plays, and "New York" (Pathe).

A deputation representative of the conference lately held in Wellington, New Zealand, to discuss the question of censorship of films waited upon the Minister of Internal Affairs (the Hon. G. W. Russell) last week. The several speakers urged the need for establishing a censorship to prevent the exhibition of obnoxious motion picture.

The Minister said that those who thought such a legislation could be pushed through in half an hour were very optimistic. The agitation commenced by the Catholic Federation had already had an excellent result, and had largely wiped out the efforts being made by a certain class of people to exploit the worst side of human nature. On one or two occasions films had been brought under the notice of the Government, and police reports on the pictures had immediately been obtained. If it was found that the films were objectionable they would be shut out. He added that, provided Cabinet were prepared to give the time for considering the matter, steps would be taken to bring a bill before Parliament in order that the picture films shown in New Zealand might be put on a footing whereby, instead of being injurious to the children, they would be for their benefit. Personally the Minister was in favor of censorship.

Triangle plays are making a big name in Wellington, New Zealand. The latest, "The Disciple," has been renamed "The Fighting Parson," and is drawing big crowds everywhere.

The press agent of a local picture theater advertised Charlie Chaplin's "Burlesque on Carmen" thus:

"Charlie Chaplin again. Fat people should not see this, as they loosen the screws of the seat."

Rumors have been widely circulated recently that a tax was to be placed on amusements. A statement by the Government this week, however, says that such a movement is not contemplated at present.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

STIRRING 'EM UP IN KANSAS.

Extra Efforts Being Made to Get Exhibitors to Attend Topeka Convention.

EXHIBITORS of Kansas and exchange men and others who serve them, are all looking forward to August 22 as the date of an epoch in the business. That will be the opening day of the joint convention of the Amusement Association of Kansas and the Kansas branch of the League. And if preliminary organization work proceeds as enthusiastically as it has started, it will be a big convention, with quite significant action.

The nomination of F. D. Ross as the republican candidate for superintendent of public instruction, will doubtless be discussed at this session. The subject of Sunday pictures will also be taken up; and censorship in general and particular.

The failure of the Wichita exhibitors so far to get Sunday pictures restored, is not looked upon the same way by all exhibitors. Some of them believe that the local fights should be abandoned for a time, until the entire state can adopt an attitude; if there is to be a fight for Sunday shows, it should be a state-wide fight, so that no one town can point to another as an example either of law violation or of broad-minded citizenship.

The executive committee of the Amusement Association is now rousing the exhibitors to cooperation; for this is their chance—if they do not get together now, it may be years before any strong action can be taken by them. The committee is sending out letters asking specific promises, as to the using of slides which will be sent on the censorship and other subjects; on getting cooperation from local newspapers; on getting cooperation from leading citizens with reference to the censorship; and on attendance at the convention. Replies are fairly satisfactory, though it is likely many more will attend than have sent promises.

Exhibitors are cooperating in the exploitation of the convention, by running popular-girl contests, the winners to go to Topeka at the expense of the exhibitors. This is just one of the means being used to enhance the dignity and importance of this meeting in the eyes of the general public, so that the results of the convention will be received with more gravity and acted upon more heartily.

Most of the publicity men of the different exchanges of Kansas City, Mo., will attend the Convention at Topeka. Four of these left Thursday, August 10, to cooperate with the publicity men of the exhanges in Topeka for the advertisement of the Convention. The following have gone to Topeka: Lester Scott, V-L-S-E publicity man; Geo. H. Bowles of the Universal Film & Supply Co., Kansas City branch; Howard Jameson, publicity man of the Pathe Exchange, and L. D. Balsly, of the Kansas City Feature Film Co. Big results are expected by these men.

CALL FOR KANSAS CONVENTION.

President Glamann Urges Upon Exhibitors the Necessity of Attending the Meeting at Topeka.

I WISH to impress the importance to every exhibitor in Kansas of the joint convention of the M. P. E. L. of A. and the A. A. of Kansas which will be held at Topeka on the 22d, 23d and 24th of August. This will be one of the greatest meetings which we have ever held in the state. I had the pleasure of attending the national convention in Chicago, which I think was by far the greatest convention in every way ever held by the exhibitors of the United States.

Brother exhibitors, we are now given the chance to place our business where it should have been placed years ago. We represent the fifth largest business in the world. Up to the present time we have let our business drift. It is high time that we wake up to the fact that in order to continue our business we must conduct it as all other industries are conducted, and that is by getting together and outlining a plan whereby we will raise our business to the point where we will be given the same consideration and the same standing as other businesses are given.

The average exhibitor believes it is not necessary for him to attend the convention. Just suppose that all the exhibitors in the state would think the same way; what do you suppose would happen to your business? Do you think that it would run itself? Why do the big manufacturing concerns hold meetings and compel their managers to travel half way across the United States to attend a convention? Brother exhibitor, you are a manager and are responsible for the picture show which you represent in your city. It is absolutely necessary that you attend this convention in Topeka and work with your brother exhibitors in formulating a plan whereby your business will prosper and you will build for the future.

The exhibitors who attend this convention are going to prosper; the ones who think it is not necessary are going to see the day when, to their sorrow, they see that they have made a great mistake. Sincerely yours,

C. E. GLAMANN,
President, M. P. E. L. of Kansas.

Delegates to Convention, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North Carolina.

MONTHLY MEETING OF ILLINOIS LEAGUE.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of Illinois, held in the Masonic Temple, Friday, August 4, reports from the convention and exposition committees were made showing that the exposition in all its details was closed. Every bill had been collected and all accounts had been paid in full.

The convention committee reported all convention matters had been settled completely, that all officers of the national body had all their expenses and railroad fares paid and all obligations of the exposition and convention had been met.

The organization tendered a rising vote of thanks to the committees for the masterly manner in which they had handled the affairs of the exposition and convention.

A political action committee was appointed to take in hand all matters affecting the legislation of the motion picture industry. On the committee are: Robt. R. Levy, chairman; Louis H. Frank, secretary; Jos. Hopp, Adolph Powell and M. A. Choynski, with power to add to their number.

Twenty-seven new local members and eighteen State members were initiated.

A resolution was passed that no political slides be shown unless recommended by the league and that every exhibitor be notified to that effect.

CINCINNATI EXHIBITORS FAVOR CENSORSHIP.

According to H. Serkowich, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cincinnati, the organization intends to back a movement for the purpose of eliminating unfit films and securing better pictures, not only in Cincinnati but over the whole country. Incidentally, the League has placed itself on record as favoring censorship, preferably national censorship, but censorship by state or local officials rather than none, in the interest of better pictures. The organization indorsed the Hughes-Smith bill pending in Congress and providing for Federal censorship of moving pictures several months ago, and still favors the measure. Until it is passed, however, Mr. Serkowich states that the Ohio censors will be supported by Cincinnati exhibitors against any effort which may be made to oust them, as the opinion of the Cincinnati League is that there should be some responsible body clothed with the authority of passing upon pictures offered for exhibition and charged with the duty of eliminating the unfit.

PROTESTING THE KITCHEN BILL.

Members of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League have just forwarded to Senators Warren G. Harding and Atlee Pomerene protests against the passage of the Kitchen bill, now pending in Congress. The fight on the bill was started at a meeting of the League August 7, members going on record as opposing the bill as unjust and unfair. It seeks to impose a tax of one-half of one per cent. on the annual gross receipts of the moving picture theaters. It is estimated the passage of the bill would cost the Cleveland exhibitors more than $13,000 a year.

As proof of the injustice of the Kitchen bill, Cleveland exhibitors are pointing out that small attendance during the hot weather has caused many houses to operate only a few nights a week.

MEMBERS IN ARREARS.

The Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is inaugurating a campaign against members who are delinquent in payment of their dues. A report submitted to the body at a meeting August 8 disclosed the fact that only a small percentage of the members were regular in the payment of their dues while expenses were increasing. The names of the delinquents were read in open meeting as an incentive to prompt payment.

At the same meeting a resolution imposing the unit rule on all delegations named by the League was passed. It was introduced by Sam Bullock a week before and was passed after a lengthy discussion.

J. K. BURGER IN THE WEST.

J. K. Burger, assistant general manager of the International Film Service, Inc., is in Chicago, St. Louis and other Western cities. The new photoplay series "Beatrice Fairfax" is commanding so much attention from exhibitors that Mr. Burger, who is in charge of branch managers, was summoned to give personal assistance to the managers. Mr. Burger on his trip will also work with his assistants on the forthcoming production of the International's new feature, "Jaffrey," which will be released on September 5.

Reichenbach Joins Frohman

Busy Little Press Agent Leaves World Film for New Job—Guest at Luncheon.

HARRY REICHENBACH, "The Silver King," "The Fair Haired Boy of the Movies," had another "coming out party" Thursday, August 10. This time it was to celebrate his "coming out" of the World-Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation after a year of service, to join the Frohman Amusement Corporation. The party was in the form of a luncheon tendered him by a number of representatives of the press with whom Harry has been doing business for a long time and among whom the guest of honor has always been a decided personal favorite.

The luncheon was held in a secluded corner of the pretty main dining-room of Rector's, at Broadway and Forty-eighth street, and in its every appointment, even including the repeated blasts of superheated atmosphere which were unloosed after the food had been consumed, was a notable success. Harry Innis, of the New York Clipper, made a splendid toastmaster, and Charley Condon, of Motography, was the major domo of the occasion.

Prominent among those in attendance were Felix Feist, of the Equitable, and W. L. Sherrill, of the Frohman Company. The former told how sorry the World-Equitable was to lose Reichenbach and the latter how glad the Frohman people were to get him.

A very handsome and unique desk set was presented Mr. Reichenbach by Britton N. Busch, treasurer of the World Film, on behalf of his associates.

Kathlyn Williams Joins Morosco

KATHLYN WILLIAMS, the well-known film star who has just resigned from the Selig Company, has signed a long-term contract to appear under the Morosco-Pallas brands on the Paramount program. Promptly upon resigning from Selig, Miss Williams received four attractive offers to star in big subjects but decided in favor of Morosco-Pallas in lieu of its standing in the field and its affiliation with the Paramount program.

Kathlyn Williams.

Although Miss Williams today enjoys a country-wide popularity, and justly so, her success in motion pictures has not been of the "overnight" variety. Seven years ago, in company with Mary Pickford, Arthur Johnson, Henry Walthall, Billy Quirk and other now famous members of the "old guard" at Biograph under D. W. Griffith, she received her early schooling in the silent drama.

In dramatic stock she appeared under the managements of Belasco, Willard Mack and William Morris, which fitted her well for the demands of the photoplay. On leaving Biograph, Miss Williams became associated with the Selig Company under whose trade-mark she appeared up until her recent resignation. In the title role of "The Adventures of Kathlyn" she starred in the first serial photoplay ever produced, a twenty-six-reel subject, which resulted in adding many new admirers to her large following. Among her film successes are "The Spoilers," "The Rosary," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "Back to the Primitive," "The Two Orphans," "Thou Shalt Not Covet," etc.

The new Morosco-Pallas star has also attained considerable distinction as a writer and is a member of the Authors' League. Among her offerings in this field are "Thy Will Be Done," "The Last Dance," "Strange Case of Talmai Lind" and many others, all of which have been produced.

Miss Williams will start on her initial subject for the Paramount program early next month. The production has already been decided upon and, it is understood, displays a big theme particularly suited to the dramatic talents of the star.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

Oliver Morosco Announces He Will Battle Moving Pictures with All His Strength.

IN THE August issue of the Green Book the following remarkable interview with Oliver Morosco is given by Miles Overholt:

I have come upon a situation that seems to me to be quite novel—a motion picture manufacturer who believes—and has the courage to say what he believes—that the motion pictures are doomed as a rival of the spoken drama. But he is, it is true, also a theatrical producer.

"My own photoplay producing company has been successful from the beginning," Oliver Morosco, the Los Angeles theatrical magnate, told me, "but I feel that it and every other film producing company will soon go into a decline. The motion pictures will go down fighting, but they will go down nevertheless."

He went on to say to me that conditions had proved to him that the spoken theater always would hold the ascendancy; that he intends to fight the films from now on, even if he wrecks his own film company in so doing.

This was Mr. Morosco's declaration of war:

"I intend to give battle to the motion picture business with every ounce of strength at my command. To the success I now have in the field of spoken drama I propose to add more success. This will be one of my weapons.

"Already the sun of the motion pictures is setting. I do not believe it will set entirely; I believe that motion pictures will last forever, but that they will exist in their proper groove, which will in no way conflict with the great demand of the people for the spoken drama.

"'But,' people say, 'how about your own photoplay plant?'

"That is another situation. My film company has been a big sucess, and so long as there is money to be made in the picture game, I will stay in it. But if, as I believe the future will show, the moving picture industry is on the wane, then my photoplay company will go down with its guns firing and its flags waving.

"There is no question that the moving picture demand and popularity is waning," he continued, "and by the same sign the spoken drama is returning to its former commanding position in leaps and bounds.

"There is no proof of this needed. You have only to look at the hundreds—in fact, thousands—of moving picture houses throughout the land that have closed within the past six months; you have only to read your daily paper every morning to see the announcements of the crumbling of great moving picture companies that a year, or even six months ago, were paying their stockholders great dividends; you have only to read of the dozens of picture concerns that are dashing desperately into a merger scheme to cut the tremendous expenses that are not justified by the returns from their sales.

"It takes no expert to see that the public is rapidly tiring of the sameness of theme, inferior productions and punchless sort of film that compose eighty per cent. of the present moving picture output. There are about twenty per cent. of motion picture releases that are worthy. This one-fifth part is just about the proportion of the moving picture business that will survive. The rest will go.

"The moving picture game is not going to die out and be forgotten. Its novelty simply has worn off. Its popularity was based on novelty, and that has gone. Moreover, photoplays are limited to the expression of emotions by facial or physical acts—barring the voice—and that means its downfall. The people are tiring of just that. There will continue to be good moving pictures, for the public will always want them, but there will be but a small percentage of the present output, and they will be based upon a real appeal to the people and not upon a basis of novelty.

"There will be a place and a demand for photoplays containing good stories, good acting, fine production and all that goes to make a good picture; and it will be the companies and producers capable of giving these pictures that will survive."

If Mr. Morosco has been quoted correctly, he has placed himself in an extremely embarrassing and serious position; for in battling the moving picture business he takes up arms against his associates in the Paramount Pictures Corporation and against the exhibitors who use the product of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company. It is plainly a case of running amuck in the midst of one's friends.

"So long as there is money to be made in the picture game I will stay in it," Mr. Morosco is quoted as saying. But will he be permitted to stay in it? It is clearly against all reason that he should receive aid and support from those whose vital interests he so openly assails.

But there is a wider issue. The entire industry is placed on the defensive by Mr. Morosco's attack. The members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will not lightly view Mr. Morosco's stand, and all exhibitors whose fortunes are closely interwoven with the permanence and success of moving pictures will see to it that they shall not contribute to the ounces of strength at his command to bring about the decline of the moving picture business.

The wish is evidently father to the opinion of Mr. Morosco when he says that the sun of moving pictures is setting. But he is stirred by a wholesome fear, and acknowledges that it will not set entirely. He is evidently pleased to relegate moving pictures to a twilight zone, while the dramatic sun, that will owe so much of its brilliance to him, will appear in blazing splendor, in the zenith.

To the dramatic success already achieved by him Mr. Morosco proposes to add more success and thus increase his weapons for warfare on moving pictures. I have before me a clipping from the Los Angeles Times of July 16 which gives a criticism by Henry Christeen Warnack of Mr. Morosco's latest play, "Servant—Master—Lover":

"The idea is too fragile to be play stuff," writes the critic. "It is either of two things, and I am inclined to think that it is both. It is a delightful short story idea, and it is possible that the second act holds enough of the objective to make it acceptable as a vaudeville sketch of 30 minutes, providing the tempo be accelerated, the lines brightened and the dainty plot explained.

"As it stands, one waits through the first act without having the slightest notion as to what it is all about, and at the end of the third act one feels that somebody has made a mistake; for, while the plot finally unravels itself, it has very little of the plausible to reveal. * * *

"A child's dream of a star, a little girl's belief in fairies, and a baby's delight in soap bubbles are lovely to contemplate, but they do not make plays. 'Servant—Master—Lover' is no play.

The quotation seems to show that the latest weapon added to the Morosco armory is too fragile for active service.

Where did Mr. Morosco get the data which entitles him to make the statement that "hundreds—in fact, thousands—of moving picture houses throughout the land have closed within the past six months"? The Moving Picture World's correspondents throughout the country have found no such conditions. Some houses have been closed for the hot summer weeks, as is customary, but no such wholesale, permanent closings have taken place as Mr. Morosco claims.

The whole animus exhibited by Mr. Morosco against moving pictures seems to spring from the mistaken belief that their mission conflicts with that of the spoken drama. In these columns it has been repeatedly shown that no antagonism exists between the spoken and the silent drama and that the latter never can supplant the former; also that the art of the photoplay is quite distinct and in no way dependent on the art of the drama, and that it is at its best when it relies solely on its own form of expression as an art.

The drama is suffering at present not from conflict with moving pictures so much as from the past offences of those who were responsible for its keeping. No one is trying to deter Mr. Morosco from rehabilitating the drama. He has made some good and several poor pictures since he joined the photoplay ranks; but he can be spared wholly to the drama henceforth, since he is consumed by such burning zeal.

For a young man Mr. Morosco has had quite a number of dramatic successes, among them "Peg o' My Heart," "Bird of Paradise," "The Cinderella Man" and "So Long, Letty." It is fervently hoped that he will continue steadily to increase the list, so that we as well as others may renew past pleasures at the theater.

Just a parting salute to Mr. Morosco. The moving picture is not ephemeral. It will seek no special groove to make way for the dramatic or any other art, but it will fill its own place in the world and continue to enrich the happiness of men, women and children. In ten years it has made such marvelous progress that one is seized by awe as he contemplates its future.

As a novelty the moving picture ceased to exist after the passing of the "old store" theater. That was the chrysalis stage. Since then it has become a thing of wondrous beauty and promise, gladdening the eyes and touching the hearts of mankind as they were never gladdened or touched before—and this, to us, is an earnest of what the boundless future has in store for it.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Covent Garden, on North Clark street, a fine modern house seating 2,600 people, recently opened by a musical comedy company which proved a big failure, has been secured by Lubliner & Trinz for moving pictures. The opening program was offered Saturday evening, August 5, to a crowd that taxed the seating capacity. Big houses have been the rule ever since. The admission is 5 cents for children and 10 cents for adults.

The second automobile run and outing of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago will be made on August 20 to Cedar Lake, Ind. Autos will leave Grant Park, Chicago, at the Monroe street viaduct, at 10:30 A. M. All members having cars are requested to notify the secretary at once, stating the number of additional passengers they can carry. Those who do not own cars should also notify the secretary, so that they may be assigned seats.

"Civilization" closed at Cohan's Grand Opera House Saturday evening, August 12, after a most successful run. The closing was caused by the expiration of the lease which had been arranged, provision having been made by Mr. Cohan for the opening of his revue here, on August 23. The house will be redecorated in the interim.

Miss Florence Rose, an Eastern fashion expert, is in the city conducting in Chicago picture theaters a series of Pathe fashion pictures, and is also contributing stories on proper dress to the Chicago News.

Essanay will soon engage in the production of "The Prince of Graustark," a sequel to their famous photoplay, "Graustark." Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton will appear in the principal roles. Strong parts will be assigned Ernest Maupain, Sydney Ainsworth and John Cossar.

Karl W. Fasold, of the Pathe Weekly, was in the city with the Charles E. Hughes campaigning party, and is accompanying it on tour.

For over a year the village of Winnetka, Ill., has been in throes over the framing of an ordinance that will permit the building and operating of a moving picture theater within its limits. The ordinance gives the censor unlimited powers. He will be paid $1,200 per year by the theater and must pass a rigid examination that will "include psychology, the power of habit, and the relative value of passive and active recreation." He also "must have some knowledge of moving pictures and an interest in social problems."

Here is part of the ordinance which governs censorship: "If a picture is immoral or obscene or portrays any riotous, disorderly or other unlawful scene, or if it has a tendency to disturb the peace, or if it depicts or suggests crime or the scenes of crime, or the methods of criminals, or if the pictures are in any respect degrading, it shall be the duty of the censor to refuse a permit for the same."

The theater must close at 11 o'clock P. M. daily, and all day Sunday. No one as yet has offered to build the theater and pay the censor.

The Tribune's "German Side of the War" pictures continue to attract large gatherings to the Colonial.

"The Rail Rider," a Brady-made World picture, will be the headliner at the Studebaker for the week of Sunday, August 13.

The Fine Arts theater will show "Pillars of Society" the current week. This is a Triangle product and was made in spare moments under the direction of D. W. Griffith with Henry B. Walthall and other prominent actors in the strong cast when "The Birth of a Nation" was being produced. It is in five reels.

"The Alibi," by Vitagraph, will be the main attraction at the V-L-S-E theater during the week beginning August 13.

Manager H. W. Hill of Orchestra Hall, has secured from the Vitagraph Company a reissue of "Wild Animals at Large," "Goodness Gracious" and "Uncle Bill," three two-reel comedies that were in high vogue about three years ago. The first-named will be shown during the week of August 14 under the title "When the Circus Came to Town." Clara Kimball Young and other favorites appear in these pictures.

Patch Leases Pitt Theater

Pittsburgh's Classic Picture Theater to Open August 28 Under New Manager.

THE Pitt theater, one of the most beautiful and perhaps the most successful picture playhouse in the country, which is devoted exclusively to super-features of ten or more parts, has been leased to William Moore Patch, declared one of the most prominent exhibitors of feature pictures in the United States.

It was also announced by James H. Carroll, manager of the Pitt theater, that Mr. Patch has taken over the direction of the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, which he will run in conjunction with the Pitt, and along the same policy.

The unique policy of the Pitt inaugurated when Mr. Patch took up the direction of the house will be continued, with the exception that he will now have a freer hand in his distinctive presentation of motion picture features.

Some idea of that policy can be had when it is learned that Mr. Patch is the only exhibitor outside of New York who has dared to charge $1.00 admission prices for all his pictures. The Pitt runs but two shows daily and seats 2,000, each seat being reserved.

Mr. Patch is the originator of several innovations in the presentation of motion pictures, many of which are now in universal use. He was the first exhibitor ever to make sound and voice effects an inseparable part of pictures, and he employs a crew of a dozen men at all times to work out these parts. Blending of opera, spectacle and pantomime with films, which is now being used extensively, was first employed by Mr. Patch. Each production he exhibits opens with a massive stage setting with choruses, ballets and many other incidental features.

A striking example of his innovations along this line was furnished when Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici" was shown in the Pitt theater. A ballet of fifty expert dancers, with several prominent principals, was introduced between the various portions of the picture.

Another notable example was had during the showing of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," the Selig-V-L-S-E feature, in the Forrest theater, Philadelphia, when a gorgeous stage setting of scenes at the Panama Canal blended harmoniously with the scenes in the big feature film.

Not a small part of Mr. Patch's prominence was gained through his circumventions of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, with whom nearly every exhibitor in the state has run afoul. The "punch" in "The Battle Cry of Peace" was lost when the censors ordered the elimination of the climatic scene in the big Vitagraph feature. This scene showed a mother shooting her two daughters rather than have them fall into the lustful hands of the country's invaders.

When the big feature was shown by Mr. Patch he circumvented this elimination by merely staking the scene with actors in the flesh, and thereby made it even more gruesome and realistic than it was in the eliminated scene.

Later, during the exhibition by him of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," a title in which a prominent engineer at the Canal accuses the hero of indiscreet conduct with his wife was ordered eliminated by the censors Mr. Patch had a title painted in glowing letters on a muslin sheet and at the crucial moment hauled up the screen and revealed the censored title. As a result of these actions, the censors have been made to appear ridiculous and they now handle Mr. Patch with considerable care.

The Pitt will open its season on August 28 with a return engagement of "The Birth of a Nation." "Civilization" and Annette Kellermann in "The Daughter of the Gods" will follow in its wake. Among others that will follow will be "The Crisis," now being produced by Selig, Otis Skinner in "Kismet," "The Garden of Allah," Sir Herbert Tree in "Macbeth."

The Pitt theater is admirably arranged for the presentation of super-pictures. It contains the largest organ ever erected in any theater in the world—a $40,000 Wurlitzer-Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra. An orchestra of thirty men is maintained for every picture. This orchestra is under the direction of Carl Bernthaler, formerly conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra. Among other features of the house is a cooling system similar to that in the New Amsterdam in New York.

HAND AT THE HELM.

Stanley S. Hand, of the World Film, is back at the helm of the Boston exchange and warmly welcomed after an absence in New York since last fall.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

KEYSTONE FILM COMPANY IS FOUR YEARS OLD.

Sennett's Fun Factory Shows Remarkable Growth from Humble Start.

THE Keystone is four years old. A vacant lot, a couple of dilapidated sheds and a rickety stage was the home of the Keystone Film Company in Los Angeles four years ago this month. The history of its rapid rise under Mack Sennett's presiding genius is quite remarkable, but not perhaps more so than some other of our prominent companies that had to begin in the same modest way.

In those early days Mr. Sennett says continuity of action and "finish" was not considered essential in comedy films. The majority of scenes were made away from the studio, which was recognized more as a headquarters or place to report at the mornings and draw a check from Saturday afternoon.

High class comedies of artistic merit, unfolding a complete story, was what Mr. Sennett aimed at, and he found that to arrive at this result the plant where comedies were produced must be as large in scope and as thoroughly equipped as those maintained by companies producing film dramas of serious action.

Today the open air stages of the Keystone Film Co. cover five acres. In addition to this are buildings of wood, brick and concrete, housing all the industries to be found in the average city of several thousand population, including a five-story planing mill, restaurant.

Another feature of the Mack Sennett-Keystone studios is the big open-air plunge, which is electrically heated. When not in use for pictures it is at the disposal of the actors, who may bathe in it whenever they desire.

A modern cafeteria is conducted by the company. Here everybody employed at the Mack Sennett-Keystone plant may obtain the best of food at prices considerably lower than are demanded downtown.

In the planing mill is made everything from patrol wagons to the various sections of Swiss-Chalet bungalows and sky-scrapers. The painters supply the realistic touches, which is given finish by wall paper and designers' department. All kinds of mechanical devices are made in the machine shops, and in the big garage the scores of autos used in the Keystone's activities are housed and kept in repair. Many touches of humor are added to Keystone comedies by the sign painter's staff. The plumbing department is kept busy providing water and sewerage connections wherever necessary to add to the realism of the sets and keeping the plant's system in repair.

Separate buildings are maintained for the general offices, scenario and publicity departments and for other activities allied with the manufacture of motion pictures.

The studios where the famous Keystone comedies are produced compose quite a city within a city, thriving with industry and giving employment to more than a thousand people, in one capacity or another.

Since 1912, when Mack Sennett first came to Los Angeles to establish the Keystone Film Co., the vacant lot has spread to more than seven acres, enclosed by an artistic wall of mission architecture, uniquely appropriate to California.

When the occasion demands it there are hundreds of acres of hills and vale surrounding the plant in Edendale that can be utilized in the production of pictures.

As a result of the establishment of the Keystone Film Co. and other motion picture concerns, Edendale in four years has grown from a district of waste land to one of the most thriving and charming suburbs of Los Angeles. It has paved streets, beautiful schools and churches and all the features of a growing modern town. It strongly emphasizes the importance of the motion picture industry to a community.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH ARRIVES AT THE COAST.

Will Make Extensive Tour of United States to Outline Policy for His Company.

Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the Board of Directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles, Monday, this week.

It is Mr. Goldfish's intention to make an extended tour of the United States in behalf of his company to study present motion picture conditions. Mr. Goldfish will visit practically every town of importance on the continent, and by this method make a complete survey of the business. Upon his report to the Board of Directors the future policy of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will be announced.

The company now makes eighty-four five-reel feature productions annually and it is to learn the trend of the public taste that Mr. Goldfish is making this tour.

When Mr. Goldfish arrived at the Hollywood studios he found an entirely different plant from that which he left six months ago. The Lasky Company now takes in the entire block bounded by Selma, Vine and Argyle streets and Sunset boulevard, and also a large portion of the block across Argyle street from the studio. The new $150,000 laboratory has also been completed since his last visit.

It is expected that Mr. Goldfish will remain in Los Angeles for at least a week before starting on his long trip around the country.

CLARA BARTON IN MOTION PICTURES.

A $100,000 Memorial Film to Be Produced by Frederick W. Hornby.

The history and life work of Miss Clara Barton, the National Red Cross Nurse, is to be portrayed in motion pictures.

Announcement to this effect was made public this week by Frederick W. Hornby, who will have charge of production.

The picture is to be known as "The Angel of the Battlefields." It will be produced in ten reels and cost over $100,000. The money for this production has been raised by private subscription. The picture will not be released for a year. It will first be shown in "legitimate" theaters throughout the country and afterwards will make its permanent abode in the Memorial Hall, which is to be erected to Miss Barton in Washington. There the Clara Barton film will be exhibited to visitors three times a week.

Part of this production will be filmed in Los Angeles, but in order to get actual setting for many of the scenes, Director Hornby will depart to North Oxford, Mass., the birthplace of Miss Barton. Members of the Clara Barton Memorial Association will be actors in the film story, including General Nelson A. Miles, Mrs. George A. Picketts, Mrs. John A. Logan and others whose names are known to every soldier. Colonel Chas. Sumner Young, of Los Angeles, a life-long friend of Clara Barton, has written the scenario.

H. M. HORKHEIMER RETURNS FROM THE EAST—WORK TO BEGIN ON NEW SERIALS.

H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Balboa Amusement and Producing Co., returned to the Long Beach Studios last week after an absence of nearly two months. Mr. Horkheimer found his plant humming with activity, but the Balboa studios will be even busier from now on because of the additional contracts obtained for new productions, the chief of which is more serials for Pathe.

Even while the finishing touches are being put on "The Grip of Evil," the Balboa-made continued screen story which Pathe is now releasing, work is to begin on a fifteen-episode piece featuring Ruth Roland. The scenarios are being written by Will M. Ritchey from stories furnished by one of the best-known newspaper writers in America. And no sooner is this work under way than the filming of yet another serial will begin; so that Balboa will enjoy the unique distinction of being busy on three big productions of this sort at the same time.

A VISIT TO TALLY'S BROADWAY.

Upon visiting Mr. T. L. Tally, one of the best known and oldest exhibitors of this city, he told a few interesting things about his house. Although it is known that Tally's organ is one of the best on the coast, he never overtalks about it. This equipment consists of four organs, instead of one. On the stage is the large choir organ, while on the left is the swell organ and on the right is the great organ, which is quite an instrument. Fully a hundred feet back, on the left hand side and just below the ceiling, is the echo organ. All told there are 6,000 pipes, which are operated by a four-tier keyboard. Jaime Overton is the leader of the orchestra, which is one of the best in any theater along the coast. The organ is played by Garrett, who is a recognized organist of ability. He has just returned from a vacation trip up and down the Pacific and he informed Mr. Tally that the Broadway theater's musical equipment was absolutely the best on the coast.

Seymour Tally, son of the proprietor of this house, has just returned from a vacation trip up into Bear Valley. On the way up Mr. Tally accompanied his son in his big car, but owing to a breakdown had to return. Young Mr. Tally exhibits a ruddy complexion and snapshots of a string of trout.

"The Tallygram" is the neat program sheet gotten out by this house. It contains all the data on the current picture, together with a short biography of the star appearing in it and other numerous items and notes of interest to patrons of the house. Mr. Tally has booked, via the open market system, some of the best pictures for the coming month, and he says that if business continues as good as it has during the summer he will be entirely satisfied. Krazy Kat and his little pet aversion, Ignatz Mouse, are added attractions each week, which fill up the bill in addition to a specially selected educational travelogue or scenic film.

LOS ANGELES FILM BREVITIES.

Frank Campeau, the character actor, who played with the Fine Arts, last spring, has returned to Los Angeles and will appear in two pictures for the Selig Company, one being a story by Zane Grey and the other by Frank Powers. After his film engagement Mr. Campeau will return to New York to play another season in "Rio Grande."

Blanche Sweet has gone for a week's vacation to Bear Valley. On her return she will at once begin her work on "Witchcraft," the photoplay scenario which won the prize in the recent contest held among the students at Columbia University and which was purchased by the Lasky Company.

Laura Marie Trainor, a Montana society girl who is riding on horseback from Missoula, Mont., her home town, to the Lasky Studio in Hollywood, arrived in San Francisco last Sunday. She is expected here in about two weeks.

We are informed that the Success Films Production Company, the new multimillion-dollar corporation, is arranging for a studio site in Los Angeles and that principal production will be done here.

Director Burton George has taken his company of Universal players to San Francisco and Monterey this week, where many of the scenes will be filmed for a five-reel feature, "The Isle of Life," written by Stephen French Whitson and adapted for the screen by Fred Myton.

Dr. A. F. Crane, dean of the players at Universal City and who served throughout the Civil War, is a member of the committee having in charge the arrangements of the twenty-ninth encampment of the Southern California Veterans' Association at Huntington Beach, August 15 to August 25.

Dr. Crane, who is seventy-four years of age, fought at the Battle of Gettysburg and was in hundreds of shirmishes during the conflict. He was mustered out at the close of the war as a lieutenant.

Madge Kirby, a young actress, well known in motion pictures, has joined Universal this week and will play ingenue lead opposite "Smiling" Billy Mason in "She Couldn't Resist Him," a one-reel production under the direction of John Steppling. Miss Kirby has appeared in comedies for more than four years with other companies before going with Universal.

Under direction of Charles Giblyn, who has just returned from the East, William Desmond began work this week as the sole star of a new Triangle-Kay-Bee drama written by C. Gardiner Sullivan. The cast includes Marguerite Thompson, Robert McKin and J. Barney Sherry.

Among the visitors at Thos. H. Ince's Culver City plant this week were Emil Kerhlein and his son, Emil Jr., who operate the Fresno Kinema theater of Fresno, Cal.; William Southern, proprietor of the Grand theater, Bellingham, Wash., and Rox Midgely, who control the Franklin theater, Oakland, Cal.

J. G.. Hawkes, of the Ince scenario staff, left this week for his home at Alameda, Cal., near San Francisco, to spend his first vacation in two years. He had scarcely arrived at his destination when Chief Arthur C. Gardner Sullivan wired him to devote what he planned to be leisure hours to the writing of a new story. Such is the busy life of a Triangle scenario man!

W. Christy Cabanne, the Griffith director, received this week a medal donated by his class of Smith Academy as the graduate who has accomplished most since leaving the school. This is not only extremely encouraging to Mr. Cabanne, but is something that should be appreciated by the motion picture industry at large, as it shows that a man thus engaged is considered something dignified and worth while. This has not always been the case in the past.

The man approaching Mr. Cabanne nearest in salary receives $10,000 a year as a consulting engineer. The next highest salary was $7,500, the advertising manager of a Chicago corporation. Many of the class engaged in such professions as those of the doctor and lawyer were not thoroughly established, having taken in several years of additional work after graduating from preparatory school. Their average salary was $1,750. Mr. Cabanne's income, we are informed, is in excess of $25,000 a year. He is 28 years old, married and has two children. Good work, Mr. Cabanne!

Tuesday last week a party of film men, attaches of the Government, arrived here to take pictures in the scenic Angeles National Forest. They are C. J. Blanchard and H. T. Cowling, and they are here for the purpose of making a series of pictures, film and otherwise to be used in exploiting the national forest as a recreation ground for the people.

Supervisor Charlton will accompany the gentlemen to various points in the mountains, and among other places that will be thrown on the screen is the city playground located on the Seeley Flats. Pictures will also be made in the most picturesque spots in San Antonio Canyon and other places.

The local reserve is acknowledged to offer the most conspicuous examples of how the big woods can be used for pleasure jaunts by the people, and the Government desires to inaugurate a policy of advertising—to show that what has been accomplished in the Angeles National Forest can be done elsewhere.

"The Grip of Evil"

"The Hypocrites" Puts the Question for the Sixth Time, "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?"

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN THE sixth number of the Pathe serial we find a situation, which might or might not arise through the banishment from their home of the ambitious son and daughter of rural parents. These young people, one a girl and the other a boy, go to the city and fall in with evil companions, despite the fact that a young artist, who has known them previous to their sojourn in the city, befriends them. of the fact that the girl has a leaning toward art, and has dabbled in a crude way with the brush, and the boy has shown inventive genius, one cannot help feeling that the development of character is not consistent. As presented the interrogative side of the question is not illustrated convincingly.

Biographs in Two and Three Reels

"Man's Enemy" Features Lillian Gish—"The Blot on the 'Scutcheon" a Griffith Reissue.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

MAN'S ENEMY" is not a reissue, although it was produced some time ago and held by the Biograph company for a favorable release date. Now it will be presented on the General Film program in three reels, with Lillian Gish receiving first prominence in a cast that numbers David Wall, Franklin Ritchie, Vivian Prescott and Thomas Jefferson. Rather because of honors won in recent years than because of the oustanding importance of the character she presents in this picture, Miss Gish is given precedence; but even if the role has its limitations, she will not disappoint those who have learned to admire her girlish graces.

The story could hardly be called an inspired argument against that ever-dangerous enemy of man—strong drink. To be sure, most of the author's characters who indulge in it come to grief, but usually other elements contribute to their downfall; not least among them the perpetual plotting of crafty human enemies. Believing that his father has been murdered, the surviving son determines on vengeance by ruining the offspring of the man suspected of the crime. Learning that the man marked for ruination in all probability inherited a taste for liquor, the villain of the picture starts by placing temptation in his way, secures an adventuress for an ally and presently the unfortunate youth is sliding swiftly down the forbidden path. Almost three reels, filled with swift melodramatic action, are consumed before he reaches the lowest level and is ready for the reformation without which a story of this type would be lacking in moral uplift. The critical spectator will find the plot rather extravagant; but the many others who are less exacting are likely to call the situations forceful and dramatic.

For photoplay purposes, Griffith discovered an inviting combination of poetry and drama in Browning's "The Blot on the 'Scutcheon," now being reissued in two reels, with Dorothy Bernard, Charles Mailes, Edwin August and Claire McDowell in the cast. It is in every respect an excellent two-reel picture of a tone that one seldom finds in current productions. Attractive settings aid greatly in carrying out the spirit of the poem, and the acting fulfills the needs of romantic drama.

"Little Lady Eileen"

Marguerite Clark Is Featured in a Well Produced Drama That Touches on the Fairies in Ireland.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Famous Players released on August 10, "Little Lady Eileen," featuring Marguerite Clark. The story is from the pen of Betty Fitzgerald. J. Searle Dawley directs the production; the staging is picturesque and elaborate. The locale is Ireland, and the tale is peopled with simple folk who believe in fairies, as well as with those who sternly repudiate the suggestion that such things can be.

Miss Clark is seen as Lady Eileen, a firm believer of the tales told in books she tends on the shelves, and by the cobbler of the village. Her faith in the power of these fairy fictions is absolute. To her they exist if they do not breathe, and the simplicity of Lady Eileen is convincing. The phase of the story that has to do with fairies, however, is more in the nature of embellishment. The main action turns on the desire of Eileen's father to bolster a rapidly dwindling credit by taking advantage of an old will and marrying Eileen to a Churchill, thereby securing for her a castle and the estate surrounding it. Miss Clark gives a charming interpretation of Eileen, a nimble-footed, graceful, winsome creature.

Vernon Steele finely plays the role of the author, who, in his journey in search of material, meets Eileen and falls in love with her. Others in the cast are John L. Shine, Eileen's father; J. K. Murray; the priest who lends such ready aid to the matchmaking father; Harry Lee, an old traveling cobbler, and Maggie Hallowell Fisher and Russell Bassett—Eileen's aunt and the innkeeper, respectively.

"Little Lady Eileen" will rank as a good picture, but there will be inclination among some to wonder how Eileen could be so easily taken in by the unscrupulous brother in mistake for the manly one; to meet a man several times, know him well enough to agree to marry him, and then permit the ceremony to be concluded without discovering the man beside her was an imposter; or why, where there had been imposition, any difficulty would be encountered legally in remedying the situation. But this is a story having to do with fairies—we see their shadowy figures dancing on the green—and so we must not be too exacting. What counts is that "Little Lady Eileen" is a pretty picture, with situations of strength at the denouement.

"The Pacifist."

A Merry Farce Comedy in Two Reels, by Essanay, with Harry Dunkinson as Chief Funmaker—Written by Charles J. McGuirk, Directed by Harry Beaumont.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I MUST confess that I have a hankering for photo-comedies of one or two reels in length, which offer brisk action, humorous situations and sufficient connection of the incidents to give the story the semblance of probability. In my opinion "The Pacifist," a two-reel farce comedy by Essanay, meets all these requirements, and, in addition, possesses a sanity and furnishes an object lesson that will heighten the pleasure of the spectator.

Chas. J. McGuirk has written the story, in which he makes peaceful Henry Alswell, a flouted business man and a very much hen-pecked husband, the center of mirth. Harry Dunkinson, a popular Essanay comedian, fits the role delightfully. He has the bulk, the face, the "soft-mark" aspect and the shrinking that makes the role of the peaceful man mirthful at all times.

To see this senior partner of a business firm routed out of bed in the morning by his wife, and forced to cook breakfast while she continues her morning slumbers, is a sight that defies the sober-faced spectator. Morning ablutions are dispensed with before he begins his work around the cooking stove, for he evidently believes in conserving his energy, as we witness that he performs them after the cooking is done and before he sits down at the table. In this respect he sets an example for his wife, who sadly needs it, for she comes to table in robe de chambre and nightcap!

The new and quick way to open a fresh milk bottle is illustrated in mirthful fashion by this head-of-the-house cook, and so is his painstaking attention to the coffee pot. Of the three eggs which he boils for the family—comprised of his wife, his youthful son and himself—a sad tale is unfolded at he breakfast table. The respectful youth, his son, grabs two of them and his wife, the third, leaving only the lesson of hard experience for the peaceful bread winner.

The scenes at the office are no better than those at home for the man who holds to the belief that if a man strikes you on the right cheek, you must turn to him the other, consoling yourself by remembering that he knows no better. The office boy sits on a chair with his feet on the table—and keeps them there—when "Peaceful" enters, while the girl stenographer is so absorbed in a love story that she merely looks up and continues her reading. The junior partner bullies "Peaceful" as if he were the office boy and, being a next door neighbor, he wrathfully accused him once of planting a garden just to tempt his chickens! All of which trials "Peaceful" bore manfully.

The turning of the worm brings the merriest action of the comedy. How "Peaceful" thrashes his partner and galvanizes his office force by a furious display of wrath and energy; how he humbles his termagant wife until she finds happiness in feeding him as she would a baby, and how he wins the respect and admiration of his hopeful son by proving himself a scrapper, are all mirthfully shown in the pictures.

Camille D'Arcy is a worthy opposite of Mr. Dunkinson in the role of Mrs. Alswell, while Bill Mars (the junior partner), Percival Footease, Clarence Alswell, Willie Mars, the office boy and the stenographer are capably impersonated, respectively, by Frank Hamilton, Edgar Murray, Tommy Harper, Frank Harris, Bruce Kent and Josephine Huddleston.

The release date is September 5, through the General Film Company.

"Beatrice Fairfax"

Two Episodes of International Film Service Serial Are Displayed at Private Showing.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THAT William Randolph Hearst intends to appeal to the populace through photoplays, much as he has appealed through his newspapers, is amply evidenced in "Beatrice Fairfax," the new serial being produced by the Whartons for release by the International Film Service. "Advice to the Lovelorn," the department conducted by Beatrice Fairfax in the New York Journal, attracts a certain class of readers who have not yet passed the adolescent stage, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that these same readers will be entertained by a similar variety of sentimentality when they visit the theater of an evening. On First, Second and Third avenues, in the Bronx and other strongholds of Hearst journalism, the serial should draw well. Elsewhere, the appeal is less certain.

Then, too, there is a chance that the friends of Miss Fairfax, attracted by a display of their favorite writer's name and led to expect pictures of a richly sentimental nature, may be a bit disappointed by the character of the opening episodes, "The Missing Watchman" and "The Adventure of the Jealous Wife." There is no advice to the lovelorn here, ratner a quantity of melodrama, in which Beatrice Fairfax, impersonated by Grace Darling, is supposed to figure. Seemingly the system to be followed is this: At the beginning of each episode Miss Fairfax receives a letter from some trusting reader and behind each letter is an exciting story, destined to be disclosed by Jimmy Barton, the gifted reporter capable of assuming many disguises. Then Miss Fairfax, herself, is always ready to leave her desk for personal investigations of interesting cases.

In the introduction to "The Night Watchman" we see Arthur Brisbane at his desk, also Tad, the cartoonist; we meet Miss Fairfax and Jimmy Barton, note the contents of a letter signed "Mary Ryan" and all is ready for the reporter's investigation of a bank robbery. The "Mary Ryan" communication proves to be the clue to the mystery, unravelled at great personal risk to the reporter and his feminine co-worker. Unquestionably, these two reels are replete with exciting physical action; but they are elementary melodrama based on convenient happenings contributing to the success of the star reporter. The details of production were not regarded by the Whartons with the care manifested in the opening episodes of "The Mysteries of Myra."

"The Adventure of the Jealous Wife," a story dealing with a violinist, his wife and a blackhand band, gives Harry Fox, as the reporter, an opportunity for some clever acting in the disguise of an Italian. As in the preceding episode, the stirring quality of the tale presented depends upon the ability of the spectator to credit what he sees without asking for explanations that satisfy the mind. In beauty and charm, Miss Darling will fulfill the Journal reader's idea of Miss Fairfax, whereas Mr. Fox is what all reporters should be but seldom are.

Ernest Maupain in "The Prince of Graustark."

Ernest Maupain, the versatile French actor, is cast for a strong part in Essanay's feature, "The Prince of Graustark," the novel by George Barr McCutcheon.

Two Kalem Comedies

"The Stolen Jail," a Novel One-Reeler Featuring Ivy Close, and "Ham's Strategy," an Amusing Photoplay, with Lloyd V. Hamilton, Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare in the Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Stolen Jail."

IT HAS long been recognized by all good men and true that a woman has the right to change her mind. When the heroine of "The Stolen Jail" decides to have her young man put behind the bars and then decides she wants him set free again, the strong arm of the law is powerless to prevent her; finding that she cannot persuade the warden to throw wide the door of her loved one's cell, she steals jail, warder, loved one and all. A railroad derrick is run alongside of the calaboose, hitched fast and the whole works snaked into the air, run onto a pier, twirled merrily in the atmosphere and dropped into the water—after the loved one has made his escape.

There is much good fun before the young man goes to jail. His troubles start with a lover's quarrel, and the lady in the case, most becomingly attired in the latest cut of riding breeches, hops into her racing auto and makes a record run to the home of her country relatives. Her best fellow follows, and she puts up a job on him, sets the town constable on his track, lands Jack in jail; then exercises the prerogative of her sex, and uproots the foundation and penthouse of the law, that she may give him back his liberty. The extravagant humor of the reel is emphasized by the skill shown in the direction and the choice of locations. Robert Ellis, who is part author of the scenario, made the production. The cast, consisting of Ivy Close, Arthur Albertson, Henry Murdock, William McKey and Mary Taylor-Ross, catch the spirit of the comedy at the start and romp through it in high glee.

"Ham's Strategy."

The object of the deep designs of the large gentleman with the delicatessen cognomen is a patient and long-suffering jackass. His winning ways—Ham's, not the Jack's—having captivated the village belle, the two plan an elopement, and Ham invests in an aged donkey and a more ancient cart. The colored person, who owns the outfit is willing enough to sell; the difficult part of the proceedings is to start the donkey. Ham pours gasoline into his ear, cranks him up, tries to start him at low speed, then at high—with the aid of a box of dynamite, but in vain. The explosion starts Ham and Ethel all right and lands the lady at the top of a telegraph pole, but the jack, like another Casabianca, stands rooted to the spot from "whence all but he (never mind, if Mrs. Hemans did not write him) had fled." The strategy finally used to expedite the elopement is as ancient as the stubborn little beast himself, and leads to a hilarious finish. The laughs in this reel are frequent and well deserved. Lloyd and Ethel and Bud are most happily cast. And so is the donkey—from an artistic point of view.

"A Wall Street Tragedy"

Five-Reel Mutual Produced by the Mirror Film Corporation, Featuring Nat Goodwin.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

NAT GOODWIN is a master of that kind of portrayal which shows man as he really is under the influence of liquor, and his remarkable performance, together with the subtle theme and beautiful decorative settings, constitutes the principal charm of "A Wall Street Tragedy." The story has some small weaknesses and one great one, the purely artificial introduction of what is commonly known as "love interest." The latter is a mere fragment and not artistically interpolated. Nat Goodwin plays the part of a cold-blooded stock broker, and his daughter meets a young man for a brief moment. This young man plays no part in the story whatever; the girl does not see him again, but she writes to him as to an old friend and falls into his arms as if her affections were easily settled on a perfect stranger.

Goodwins' role is that of ruining another firm of manipulators, and one of the ruined partners plans a long and costly revenge, that of inducing a certain "Ivette" to win Goodwin's young affections and eventually to replace a wife who dies from a broken heart and neglect caused by her husband's habits of high living. The revenge is deliberate and costly, but the ruined broker seems to have plenty of money. It reacts on him in the end, causing his death and driving his accomplice insane. They are well impersonated, but interest is attached to Goodwin and his classy performance from the beginning to the end. He carries the play along by sheer force of personality.

"The Dawn of Freedom"

Five-part Blue Ribbon Feature Presents Well-Staged Satire, With Charles Richman in Difficult Role.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE ressurrection of Richard Cartwright, patriot, one hundred and thirty-nine years after the founding of American liberty and independence, forms rather an interesting screen topic in view of the fact that more than a grain of truth lies in the contrast drawn between the founders of our democracy, and a prosperous modern public, apt to forget its most sacred precepts. Paul Scardon has produced the picture from a story written by William Hurlburt, with Charles Richman impersonating effectively Richard Cartwright. The role of the Patriot presents difficulties, especially in that part of the story attending the exhuming of the body of Cartwright by a bomb explosion when released from that state of suspended animation in which he has been placed over a century before by Father Ambrose, in an attempt to save him from Indian torture. The modern portion of the story deals with a miner's strike brought on by the greed of a descendant of Richard Cartwright's, who has gathered immense wealth from the mineral deposits on the Pennsylvania tract assigned by the government to his noble ancestor. The recently resurrected patriot is killed by a shot from the gun of one of the strikers and dies, leaving his spirit—the spirit of '76—to Dick Cartwright, now the worthy head of the firm of Cartwright, his father having succumbed to fear as the infuriated strikers attacked the house.

The subject dealt with in the film is difficult of effective presentation. The presentation offered by the Vitagraph company is dignified and impressive, and should be an inspiration to liberal principles and true patriotism.

"The Patriot"

Five-Reel Triangle-Ince by Monte J. Katterjohn, Affording Wm. S. Hart Unusual Opportunity.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

MR. HART has been seen in a monotony of performance, that of the Western bad man who is redeemed through the influence of feminine refinement or demoralized through association with women of doubtful character, but "The Patriot" affords him a chance to do some real acting, and he responds splendidly to all the requirements of his new role. The play is not a vehicle, one of those in which the "lead" is almost constantly shown in wearisome close-ups; it is a spirited story of contemporaneous life, with an occasional sympathetic touch of tenderness which is so lacking in most photoplays, mere photography of human motion, not of emotion. It relates to the fond illusion of a man who has fought for his country and believes in it from the depths of his noble heart. He is of the manly, self-sacrificing kind that won freedom at the outset and are ready to maintain it at all costs today.

He is a widower with a little boy he adores, for whom he has taken a homestead, for whose future he is drudging long hours to win gold from pay gravel. He constantly impresses in the little fellow that country stands first, even before individual interest. Meanwhile some grafters conspire to rob him of his rights by that meanest of all methods, taking advantage of some flaw in a contract. They dispossess him, and he goes to Washington full of confidence that his wrongs will be righted. During his absence his little boy dies. He finds the authorities at Washington bound hand and foot by red tape. The country he protected does not protect him. It affects his mind, and the added strain of discovering on his return that the sweet little boy is dead completely demoralizes the man. He breaks down and goes wandering.

In half-sane bitterness of heart he turns against the flag and becomes a renegade spy for Mexican bandits infesting the border. He visits the camp of a border patrol and returns to the Mexicans with information that promises a fruitful raid. Back in camp he comes under the influence of a motherless little boy so much like his own that he is deeply affected. This rouses his better nature and results in a powerful conversion. He saves the camp he intended to betray and the little boy he has come to love with an old affection revived.

All this is interwoven with spirited action, but that action never leaves the center line of interest, a correct and effective story structure. The characterization of the "lead" is most exquisitely done, Mr. Hart's impersonation proving him to be a great actor in spite of the doubt cast on his ability by plays in which his prominence is forced rather than natural. It is probably the best thing he has done, and the entire production is of high quality.

"The Girl of Lost Lake"

Pleasing Story and Wonderful Scenery Are Found in Bluebird Picture Featuring Myrtle Gonzales.

IF THE narrative were much less interesting than it actually is, the extraordinary scenic quality of "The Girl of Lost Lake"—the perfect succession of beautiful views of a mountain lake—would place the picture among desirable attractions for those who appreciate an artistic reproduction of a glorious country. through the trees—we have all these in a varied background.

Lost Lake they call it, and in the cabins along the banks we meet types made familiar through previous stories of the mountain wilds. Myrtle Gonzales, putting plenty of dash and spirit into her performance, plays the untamed daughter of an aged woodsman. Then there is a veteran prospector who takes a kindly interest in the girl, while equally vital to the plot are a bullying lumberjack, who wants to marry Jude, and the two men from the city destined to figure prominently in her career. All of these characters are distinctly drawn and therein lies much of the value of the production, for the story, while clearly presented and moderately dramatic, is not marked by any unexpected novelty.

The spectator knows almost from the first that the romance of Jude and McAndrews will be brought to a happy conclusion, so the element of suspense centers in the removal of the obstacles that constantly present themselves. Dave Bean, the bully, is a constant menace; then there is the artist, who paints a picture of Jude, not as she actually appeared, rather as he wished her to appear, in somewhat scanty attire. Besides causing a scandal in a community, this painting leads to a misunderstanding between the lovers. The settlement comes in due time when the two meet in a New York restaurant after the girl has acquired a fortune, owing to the discovery of gold on her property. Miss Gonzales is supported by Val Paul, Fred Church, George Hernandez and others in a picture that seemingly has enough points to assure its success.

MADE at the Peerless studios, the above production, which is founded on a story by Thompson Buchanan, is moderately entertaining. The main thread of the story, however, follows the domestic career of Howard Stanton and his pretty wife, who brings the unhappy side of her life to a joyous climax by giving a dinner, to which she invites the disturber of the peace, Nina Blakemore, who is there accosted by shadows of her past, and various unseemly incidents reveal themselves. The young wife, in a well-planned flirtation, succeeds in bringing her husband to her feet.

Ethel Clayton makes the best of the rather insipid role of the young wife, much of whose time is spent in wringing her hands and weeping over the neglect of her husband. The same can be said of Carlyle Blackwell in the role of the husband. In fact, the cast is to be generally commended. The production has been prettily set, and there are points of excellence which include the intermingling of a vein of comedy. The sub-titles unfortunately are not effective and are often superfluous. The thrilling automobile accident has not been forgotten when a perfectly good machine is broken up, the victims escaping with a few scratches.

August 7 is the date set for the release of this number, which will no doubt please the average audience.

"Their Mother"

Two-Reel Lubin Crook Drama Written by Tom Gibson and Directed by Leon D. Kent.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is no lack of motive in this two-reel photoplay; the heroine's sweetheart is a detective and her brother a crook. The detective's brother, just home from college, gets mixed up with a gang in which the lady's brother is a shining light, and becomes their leader. When the police arrest the gang the detective pretends that he is the criminal, in order to save his mother from breaking her heart over Ned, her favorite son. Strict moralists and others, who have been given a little common sense, will not be inclined to applaud the detective's heroic conduct. The situation is effective in a theatric way, but reflects little of real life. It is evident the author has thought out his situations first and pared and scraped his characters to fit into them. The cast does their work conscientiously and includes Jay Morley, Bob Gray, George Routh, Melvin Mayo, George Berrell, L. Hahn, Adelaide Bronti, and Eleanor Blevins.

"God's Half Acre"

Mable Taliaferro Featured in Attractive Character Role in Five-Part Metro-Rolfe Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IF ONE were to attempt to criticize the play in the present instance there would doubtless be found a lack of plot material. In its place, however, would be discovered a substantial character study, unusually pleasing. The story of the novelist whose wife, suffering from a fancied neglect, turns to another, eloping in the silence of the night, is an oft-repeated one which is made endurable in this case by the introduction of scenes at "Rainbow's End," a home for the aged. Here it is that Blossom, maid-of-all-work, and angel of "Rainbow's End," smiles at us from the wash tub, and continues to emanate a simple philosophy of the kind that is born and not made. Here it is also that we meet with another delightful character in the person of "Daddy" Sterling, Blossom's tutor, when opportunity afforded, and also that strongly contrasting type found in the sour-faced matron commonly known among the inmates as "The Dragon." Another type worthy of mention is Perry Westley, friend of Henry Norman, novelist. This man's brains had settled in his feet, making him the best dancer in the smart set to which the Normans belonged. Smaller opportunities are offered the remainder of the feminine element of the cast. The character of Bess Norman, sister of the novelist, is sometimes interpreted a little too strenuously to be effective.

Mabel Talliaferro as Blossom, who was incorporated in the novel of Henry Norman as "The Little Old Young Lady," does attractive work, investing the character with a simple charm of innocence that was evidently the intention of June Mathis, author of the scenario.

It was at "God's Half Acre," an orphan asylum kept by a woman of beautiful ideals, that Blossom found refuge after being turned into the highway because of the attentions of the novelist who had sojourned at "Rainbow's End" in search of types for his story.

The production will be found pleasing because of its human qualities, and the delightful manner in which it has been staged by Edwin Carewe, as well as the excellent work of the cast, consisting, in addition to Miss Taliaferro, of J. W. Johnson, Helen Dahl, Lorraine Frost, Richard Neill, John Smiley, Daniel Jarret and Miriam Hutchins.

"Quest of Life" for Maurice and Florence Walton.

"The Quest of Life" is the title chosen for the debut of the internationally celebrated dancers, Maurice and Florence Walton, by the Famous Players Film Company, work on which has already begun under the direction of Ashley Miller. "The Quest of Life," which was adapted by Mr. Miller from the play "Ellen Young" by Edmund Goulding and Gabriel Enthoven, marks not only the debut of Maurice and Walton on the screen, but also the first directorial effort of Mr. Miller on the Paramount Program.

The selection of this play is a happy one as it will give the famous artistes who introduced the maxixe, the Apache dance and the Dansant, a great opportunity to display their skill both in the pantomime and in the dance. One of the chief reasons for the recent journey to Paris from which the dancers returned only last week was the procuring of costumes which would be especially suitable for the production. Miss Walton, who has always been famous for her creations, has brought many stunning gowns home with her for, war or no war, Paris is still the fashion arbiter of the world.

New Goodrich Subject Finished.

The newest Edna Goodrich subject produced by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, has just been completed at the Los Angeles studios of this concern. The photoplay is entitled "The House of Lies" and, it is stated, presents a dramatic vehicle of most unusual qualities for the popular star. Those who have already seen an advance print of the new Morosco offering state it is undoubtedly the greatest vehicle that has ever been offered Miss Goodrich, and that the merit of the story itself is far above the average program material.

The subject has been produced under the chief supervision of William D. Taylor. Homer Scott was entrusted with the camera work. Supporting Miss Goodrich were Juan de la Cruz, Kathleen Kirkham, Lucille Ward, Harold Holland and Herbert Standing. The production will be released on the Paramount Program early next month.

Fans Appreciate "Gloria's Romance."

To date Billie Burke, star of the George Kleine motion picture novel "Gloria's Romance," has received more than 20,000 letters from photoplay fans in all parts of the country. From one city alone in the Mississippi Valley more than 1,200 letters have been written Miss Burke by admirers of her work in "Gloria." Needless to say the fair Billie has found it an impossible task to answer even one half of her friends, but her secretary has mailed innumerable photos to those whom Miss Burke has been unable to write. A surprisingly large number of Miss Burke's "fan" admirers have written in foreign tongues and among the letters are some 70 in French, 26 in German, 14 in Spanish, 9 in Italian, 5 in Swedish, 3 in Russian and 2 in Mexican.

Pathe News Linked to Big Newspaper.

Through efforts of Joseph Klein, acting manager of Pathe's Atlanta office, Pathe News will in future have the benefit of the active co-operation of the Atlanta Constitution's hundreds of news representatives in the South, according to a story published in The Constitution recently. In part The Constitution said: "With the view of bringing its Southern service up to the standard of its world-wide features, the Pathe Company has completed arrangements with The Constitution through which the camera men of the great motion picture concern will be able to gain many hours' time in reaching the scene of news developments in any section of the South."

"The Human Orchid" (Florida).

"The Human Orchid," the first five-reel feature placed on the state rights market by the Florida Feature Films, has in its cast many of the players who originally helped to make the picture screen popular by their presence, and M. M. Feeley, who is in charge of the company's New York office, expresses the opinion that the feature will make a record for quick state rights sales. Mr. Feely says that the Florida Feature Film Company does not claim that "The Human Orchid" is a great masterpiece, but what they do claim for it is that it will make a great deal of money for the exhibitors and consequently make money for the state rights buyer.

"Notwithstanding the difficulties that handicapped the producers working for the first time in a new studio," said Mr. Feely, "The Human Orchid" is a fair sample of the company's intentions of producing features containing the widest range of human appeal." He claims that the worth of a feature is best judged by the magnetism it exerts on the box office, and that this influence is greatest when the theme of the story appeals to largest number of the theater's patrons. This general appeal, he says, is the dominant quality in "The Human Orchid."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Wants an Earful.

GEOFFREY JEFFERSON, of the Royal, Calumet, Mich., wants a whole earful of advice, but we are glad he does. Mr. Jefferson is facing the conditions that others face, and his problems are the problems of many others. We might wish that Mr. Jefferson owned a typewriter, but that is the only kick. We would much rather answer questions than merely comment on programs. Mr. Jefferson writes:

> I enclose some of my back programs and some of my newspaper advertising. I want all the help you are willing to give me and I believe you can offer some helpful suggestions. There are three papers circulated in Calumet, one is a morning paper printed in Houghton and of the evening papers one, the News, is printed in Calumet and the other in Hancock. Each has about the same circulation (about 2,500) in Calumet. The morning paper charges eighteen cents, the News fifteen cents and the Hancock paper ten. The latter paper gives me all the write-ups I want, the News gives me write-ups twice a week and the morning paper gives me only very small write-ups, but claim they do more good. At present I am running four inches in the morning paper, six inches in the News and four inches in the other evening edition. Which is the best investment? Is it better to take the same space in all papers, regular daily insertion, or spreading it out? I rather favor cutting out the Hancock paper. What is your advice?
> I enclose eight programs. Which is best, and why? I believe that in most programs I try to say too much about each feature. Am I right? I like the program for May 20th best. Do you? Is a lot of gossip about the players better than a question and answers department? I hope I have not asked too much, but while I believe with you and Paramount Progress that a program is the thing, I question it after a trial of five months because it takes a lot of work, though this does not count if work brings results. Other houses here have no programs but use the newspapers. I mail out 527 programs a week. The printing costs $6.75 plus cuts. The Royal seats only 410 and during the spring we were playing to standing room. Do you think that a total expense of $15 for program could be spent to better advantage elsewhere? I spend about $3 on paper for each picture. I've been using lots of cuts lately, but they cost fifteen cents an inch and I think a display ad is better. What do you think?

In the first place, let's get right down to the fundamental principle. How much does Mr. Jefferson pay for a dollar? This cannot be figured out, but he can do a little expert accounting. We take it that Mr. Jefferson means that he pays a rate per column inch and not per line, or his advertising is prohibitive. As he uses a double column space, he must pay about $30 a week for newspaper advertising in the three papers. As each has the same circulation in Calumet there rises the question of how much of this is duplicate circulation. We take it that the three towns are so close together that they are regarded as practically one, but there is bound to be some preference for the local sheet, though many will take both the local paper and the morning issue. It is not likely that Mr. Jefferson gets 2,500 from each sheet. He possibly does not get more than 5,000 all told, or even less. But it is not always the price that decides the value of circulation. The ten-cent rate may be more profitable than the eighteen-cent rate or the reverse. If the ten-cent paper goes into the homes of photoplay patrons and the eighteen-cent paper does not, then the ten-cent paper is cheaper. On the other hand, if the eighteen-cent paper reaches a majority of those who go to the theaters, then the eighteen-cent rate will show a profit and the ten-cent rate a loss. This is a local proposition. It must be figured out by Mr. Jefferson. If he does not know, perhaps some of the advertising merchants have a more accurate line on the relative values, but many merchants must be consulted and an average struck to eliminate personal preferences. Or a direct test may be made with a keyed advertisement. Some Monday advertise in all three papers. Announce that the coupon will be accepted as a half-price coupon if presented that evening. See how many of each come in. By changing the form of the ad or inserting a small figure or letter, the three advertisements can easily be told apart. Not all will be used, but some line can be gained, though it will be well to repeat this coupon schme say on Friday and again on the Wednesday of the following week. There may be some direct advertising from this as well as the line on the various mediums. If eighty per cent. of the house is coupon sale, then it is safe to assume that the newspaper advertising pulls. If the bulk of the coupons come from one sheet, it is reasonable to assume that this is the best medium. On the face of it, Mr. Jefferson is reaching perhaps 5,000 persons for $30 against less than a thousand with the program. On the face of it, disregarding other elements, the newspapers are the better investment. But do those 5,000 paper readers all patronize the Royal? Can they be made to? That is the real point. Perhaps the programs go more directly to the live names and really bring more business. If the Royal can reach a sufficient number of people with the program, the newspapers are a useless expense. If it can reach sufficient with the papers, the program may be an extra expenses. We show four of the newspaper advertisements. All are well displayed, but in no case is there much pull to the copy. It tells that the pictures are there if one is interested in seeing them. Only one of these advertisements is descriptive, that being the one in the heavy border in which the reader is told that the title is deceptive—a title, by the way, that is one of the greatest errors the Universal staff ever made. Here there is some argument, feeble, but still argument. Only one other of six additional samples follows this suit and this was an extra space advertisement for Bluebird's "The Flirt" to work with their page in the Saturday Evening Post. This sort of advertising is costly at any price. Mr. Jefferson is paying nearly $30 a week to say nothing. He could say as much in half the space and by adopting a characteristic and prominent border he could gain as much display. If cuts cost extra, cuts are not necessary in a space this size and display type should be employed instead. Cuts are useful in large advertisements. They are not needed in small spaces. Unless it is clearly shown that one paper is worthless in making business, we think that a two-inch, single column advertisement in all three would do as well, unless it is necessary to meet the competition of other houses in the same sheets. Mr. Jefferson sends only his own advertising.

Mr. Jefferson does not read us altogether correctly in the matter of programs. We have said time and again that there is nothing better for a house than a good program well distributed. Mr. Jefferson's program leaves a large space for improvement. They are 4½ by 5½, four pages, and we fail to see where they entail much labor. A practised man could write the entire layout in an hour or so. We are reproducing a front and two inside pages. The reproduction is small and will not show just what we wish, but some idea of the display—or lack of it—may be gained from the miniature cuts. The issue looks small and unimportant. Mr. Jefferson dates his days in a new and nice way and he has a telling talk on his front page, but we think that people are apt not to read the talk because it does not look important enough. It looks like one of the newspapers the Amateur League members get out. Some of the talks are not even headed up as is the one shown, but look like the descriptive matter for the cut and title. We think it is a poor bargain for the price paid and the printer should be ashamed of himself.

We think it would pay Mr. Jefferson to cut out his newspaper advertising and put the money into a slightly larger program. Get it a five by seven, to start with, and stick to the four pages, but take the job to a real printer who knows a little something about the game and get his help. Get the same heading for the front page set in larger type. Then use the rest of the front page for a gossipy and interesting chat about the coming program. Use preciseely the same style that is now used, but make it look well in addition to reading well. Throw out the cuts. Those horrible star outlines are monstrosities at best and are good only for full pages. Use no cut at all, or else a vignette not more than an inch and a half wide set into the text, much as an initial letter is used. Take the entire front page for the chat. Cut out the questions and answers. If they are faked, they are no good and if they are not faked they are more trouble than they are worth. Run a line that you will always be glad to reply to questions. This will bring you into personal touch with patrons. If you can tell them correctly offhand, then do so, otherwise note the question and say you will write and find out. The companies are always glad to reply and the patron is impressed by the trouble taken for him personally. The answers department is too impersonal. Make this a point of direct contact.

Take the third page, all of it, for the formal program. Use a rule border, not a heavy one, but a light rule or something slightly ornamental. Tell about the feature and the other subjects. Give each a line. Just a line or two, but make every word count. You may have to write twenty lines or think half an hour at the start, but in time you can instinctively reach the salient point of a story and put it into a few words.

Use page two for gossip of the players; not the first thing that comes under the scissors, but carefully selected stuff. Use the top half of the back page for the underline and the lower half for more gossip or perhaps a trade advertisement that will help to pay the cost of the printing. The gossip should be six or seven point, set two columns to the page and not a ten-point leaded that gives about three and a half items to the page and looks disgusting.

See that one of these gets into every home within a decent radius, run a mailing list for others, urge them to ask for it. Make them like it and want it, and no matter what the other houses do in the paper, the newspaper advertising can be dropped or at least cut down to an inch or so a day.

Mr. Jefferson has good ideas, but he is not on good terms with his printer, and anyhow his printer does not seem to be a fit person to associate with. No exhibitor with a good program ever said they were worthless. We wish he would send a stamped and addresesd envelope to Dolly Spurr, of the Royal-Grand, Marion, Ind., and ask for one of hers. He'll get something that reads like a visit from an old friend. He does not have to start as elaborately as that, but he'll have a good model as far as he goes. We take it that the Royal-Grand, in spite of its grandiloquent title, is a ramshackle old place that is held a leader through sheer force of the Spurr personality. What a woman can do man should be able to do.

Bosh.

Lately the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., put on a local picture, as recorded in these columns. Evidently even that had to be censored, judging from a program apology. The picture was not intended to be shown generally, being a purely local product, but even that had to go through the solemn inspection of the censors lest morals be perverted. Pennsylvania politicians have made some funny concessions to the reformers to blind them to the political steals, but this censorship law is about the stupidest of the lot of fool enactments which even prevents hotels from serving its guests with a dinner coctail on Sundays. They will be lengthening the feminine skirt next.

Clumsy.

The Forest theater, Philadelphia, a drama house, has been running "The Ne'er do Well" as a summer snap "through arrangement with Mr. Sol. H. Lesser and the Vitagraph Company of America," though just below it is told that it was made by the Selig company. The program is badly planned in other details. One line reads, "Between part one and part two there will be some music by an instrumental and Vocal Quartet." It sounds too casual, and no one is likely to be interested in the statement that "American and Canadian rights for 'The Ne'er do Well' owned by Mr. Sol. H. Lesser, of San Francisco, and the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay Company." In an effort to fill up the program, it grows too trivial.

Errors.

Philadelphia printers and managers seem to be full of mistakes. The Ridge Avenue, for instance announces Sidney Drew in the support of Florence Lawrence in "Elusive Isabel" and John Emerson instead of H. B. Warner in "The Raiders." The Victoria leaves out the article from "Dollars and the Woman" and the "s" in "The Disciple" and the Liberty tells of the "Spell of the Bykon" and of "Plumy" of Plump and Runt. They should hire a proof reader.

Coming Along.

The Lyceum, Monticello, is working its house organ like a horse in a vacation village, but it stands the treatment better. The first issues of the Motophotograms were rather good, but not comparable to the present work. With experience the editor has taken hold and he speaks from the shoulder and to good effect. It is not sufficient merely to get out a paper. Get out a good one. Get out something that will bring in more than the money spent on its printing. L. F. Guimond puts a punch into every paragraph, and in spite of the handicap of a poor printer and worse binding, he gets something that is as well worth reading as the magazines that readers buy. It all works for the house, but it is interestingly written. He still fails to date his days on the program and this in spite of the fact that he runs two weeks to an issue.

Miss Spurr Spurs Critics.

We've said a lot about critics lately and Miss Dolly Spurr, of the Royal-Grand, Marion, Ind., has her say about them. It is good program stuff for other exhibitors, although few have such a pretentious little publication in which to air their views as is the Films and Footlights. This is the article:

"CRITICS."

The Motion Picture Critic is the "regular," the man who comes each day to see the program, and for whom the theater manager has a wholesome respect. He is the man whose voice seldom reaches beyond the circle of his own acquaintances but he is the man who PAYS, and is there for the most important as well as pitiless of all reviewers. He has three favorite words which he uses to express his opinion of the show. They are "Great," "Pretty Good," or "Rotten." These are the expressions hurled at you nine times out of ten, if you happen to ask the Critic how he liked the performance. "Bill" comes out of the theatre just as Tom is entering. "How's the show?" asks Tom, and if the picture has pleased Bill he answers "Great." If it has failed to make a great impression he calls it "Pretty Good," and if it didn't please at all, he says "Rotten." He is not voicing the stale opinion of someone else, but is putting his own feelings into words. He never considers the quality of past performances, applied to the present offering. He isn't looking for new talent or good reputations. He doesn't remember about yesterday or look forward to next week. He lives TODAY. Nothing else counts and he makes allowances for nothing.

There are three different classes of critics. The fair, square kind, the unthinking kind and the plain "knocker." The real critic is the man who takes the picture as a whole, weighs the good and bad points and then forms an opinion. In the second class may come the man who judges a picture, not for himself, but by what someone else thought of it. Then again the mental or physical condition of the critic may make a radical difference in his opinion of the picture he is reviewing. If a man with a tooth-ache or a grouch goes to the theater, the picture may either cure him or make him worse, and upon the result rests his criticism, and these kinds of opinions are not valuable in any way. The last and most painful kind of a critic is the "knocker." He has one particular star, make and kind, and he kicks at everything else. Why he wastes his money to see shows he don't like, Heaven only knows! He "lays out" the management for anything and everything. If the feature advertising fails to arrive, owing to a strike, a wreck, or a mistake on the part of the film exchange, it's ALL the fault of the management. He sometimes even wants his money back even if the film he has witnesed is as good as the one which failed to arrive. He refuses to see any beauty in the production because he expected something else. He's just a plain "kicker," who "kicks" to be "kicking." He lacks fairness, appreciation and everything else that makes a pleasant disposition, and the man in the box office braces himself for a deluge of knocks when he sees him coming.

We WANT our shows criticized by patrons who are willing to give us fair and sincere opinions. Criticism of the RIGHT kind is invaluable to us. In no other way can we find out what, and what not, to give our patrons. It helps the manufacturer, too, as a report is sent in on every film we show. What the patrons think of a production gives the manufacturer an idea of how his pictures qualify in the minds of the public, and they regulate their future releases accordingly.

YOU, our patrons, are the real critics. You are the ones that PAY, and you must be PLEASED. We MUST have your co-operation in order to please you, and in order for you to co-operate with us you MUST criticize our shows. But if your criticism is going to help us, it must be FAIR. Be a REAL critic, not an unthinking one, or a KICKER.

Evidently Miss Spurr has met them all and knows that with most persons "criticism" is but another term for complaint, which is very far from being the truth.

If Miss Spurr was not running a theater we bet she would be running a newspaper. She has the news values and a certain trick of getting her stuff over that is invaluable, but it makes as many friends for her where she is and most theaters make more money than most newspapers, so she is on the right end. Films and Footlights is sixteen pages and a four-page two-color cover and it is good reading from front to back.

Needs Remaking.

The joint program of the Majestic and Colonial theatres, Jackson, Mich., is rather loosely constructed. It lacks orientation. The ads for films and the trade ads get all mixed up and there is a repetition of the program for the Colonial. The two programs appear on a single page below the house notice. Later the Colonial program is repeated with greater space, but no more detail. The page is 7¾ by 9 inches with two columns to the page, but the trade advertisements are set two and three columns to the page and sometimes straight across. As the publisher is given as The Interurban Guide Publishing Co., it may be that this is an enterprise apart from the houses.

In any event the style should be changed. The middle pages should be given the two houses, one house announcement and program appearing on the right hand and the other on the left. These pages should be framed in a three-point rule border, each by itself and not the two as a whole. The house name and the house information can run across the page, but with the operating staff doubled up. This should fall about two or two and a half inches. Below this the space should be divided into six single column boxes and a double column box across the top for the Sunday show or at the bottom for the Saturday performance, as desired. All matter should be written to fit this allotted space with a fairly uniform type arrangement. This should be the complete and only program. All other matter relating to the current releases should be run as headed stories and given the run of the paper. The trade advertisements should be run on reading pages. Cross page advertisements should run at the bottom or top of the page with the narrow advertisements (three across page) run down the outer and inner columns with a column of general reading between. The advertisements set double this width (two-thirds of the page) should be run down against the binding with a column of reading at the edge, on the left on the left hand pages and the right on the other pages. This form will give an orderly arrangement and make it possible to look over the sheet without the eye strain that now results from the jumbled make-up. The program is printed on good quality cover paper and a fair quality of news stock for the inside twelve.

If the publishers get into trouble with their numbered programs, they will please remember that we told them so.

Udells.

Here are a couple of Dave Udell's layouts. The dated program is rather old, but the idea is new even yet and will be helpful to many.

IT is no joke to be deaf but it is an awful thing not to be able to see Crystal photoplays.
"The Girl I Left Behind Me"
Tuesday
TONIGHT— THE BROKEN COIN At the Dot-ceivers
TOMORROW— Herbert Rawlinson in Misjudged drama in 4 acts, and Eddie Lyons in Little Kippi," comedy
FRIDAY— NEAL OF THE NAVY," No. 3
SATURDAY— CORAL," sea drama in 4 acts featuring Marie Walcamp

It is a bad model in that it does not mention the house at which these features are to be seen, but the layout is there and everyone in Paxton knows the Majestic advertising. One is two nines and the other two tens.

Here's a New One.

It is too bad we cannot reproduce black on yellow, for H. A. Chenoweth, of the Opera House, Westfield, Mass., has pulled a new one, and does it so nicely that we would like to show just how he did it. He got out a dodger on primrose coated paper. The straight news will not do as well. Then he ran this text:

NOTE When you read the bill of features offered every day, do you wonder for a moment why we are so anxious to get our new theater finished so we can have more room to accommodate the crowd? Why, a fellow out West was doing so much he had to remove the wall paper to let the people in, but, believe me, we will have to go that fellow one better and remove our Below this was an eighteen point "Paint" to the left, with a fist below it pointing to the right and at the tip of the fist was a dab of common paint put on with a brush. Color printing will not do. It's a messy job to daub up a couple of thousand posters, but your paint man can fix you up with a pigment in some quick dryer or perhaps water color or alabastine rubbed up with wood alcohol will do the work and dry so quickly that there is not much trouble. The rest of the bill is written in the same strain and it makes one of the best pieces of throwaway paper we have handled in some time. Try it some time, but experiment with the paint first.

For Two Months.

Do you remember what a delight it was to be able to get out a program for a whole month at one time? Mr. Cleaver, of the Dreamland, Galena, Ill., is doing better than that. He gets out his program for two months ahead. He gets out an odd shaped program, the full sheet being 4½ by 7, which gives a vest pocket 2¼ by 7. He also got out a neat monthly program for July, with a flag and a flag and eagle ornament in colors. The sheet is five by five, but the program is printed on the lower three inches of one side and the two inches remaining are folded down over to leave the lower inch exposed and lead the recipient to turn up the covering sheet to see what is below Galena is General Grant's old home and they go strong on patriotism there.

Now Watch.

For some years George Editor Carpenter has been running Real Reels for the Notable of Salt Lake City, and telling the Paramount exhibitors how to run their houses. Now he's in their class. He is now manager of the Paramount-Empress, of Salt Lake, in addition to holding down his job with the Paramount exchange, and we can see just how he does it himself. Watch for some good stuff pretty soon.

Lately we kidded him on the suggestions he got out of Picture Theater Advertising and he comes back with this note:

> July 8th Number of the M. P. W. just opened and on page 245 we note that "George Editor is getting more than two dollars worth of good out of his copy of Motion Picture Advertising."
> You hit the bull's eye—two dollars can't begin to describe it. Even if there are times when we feel that there is not that much money in the world. My copy is about worn out—it has been loaned to divers near-exhibitors.
> Whenever I am hard up for an idea I have only to reach out for the child of your brain and it is there at hand. I wish I had never seen the dummed buke because I am fast developing into a plagiarist.

Mr. Carpenter is not a plagiarist. He takes suggestions and gives them a new angle and a new meaning. His is by no means the only exchange house organ that finds inspiration there.

All But

The Palace, Homestead, Pa., sends in a program that seems to be put out by a concern syndicating them, though this is the first we have seen. It is a sixteen-pager, 2½x4, with the back page used as an address space for mailing. The booklet came through without even a paper clip to hold it together, but clips are better to use. It gives two pages to a day, a picture on the left hand page and a reader on the right, but a single small date on the first page is made to cover the entire program, the day merely carrying the name of the day on the right and the word "pictures" on the left to get "Monday's Pictures" or whatever it may be. The word "pictures" should be replaced by the month and the day of the month. The issue is rather small, but it is handy and sufficiently informative.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising to Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Please Note.

PHOTOPLAYWRIGHTS who wish to order a copy of the new edition and who live some distance from New York will save considerable delay if they will address their orders to The Moving Picture World at the Chicago office, Schiller Building, or the Haas Building, Los Angeles, according to their location. Arrangements have been made to ship books from these branch offices the same day the order is received, and the delays incident to the parcels post will be avoided on the shorter haul, while there is also some gain in the time of travel of the order itself.

More About Comedy.

SOMEONE asks for "more about comedy." That sounds simple, but it opens up all sorts of chance. Perhaps the one thing that students most need to realize is that comedy must be funny in action as well as in idea. It must translate into business what is humorous to look at; business that would be amusing to greater or less degree even though no idea backed up the humor of incident. Here is where more than eighty per cent. of the ideas fall down.

Tell an anecdote and it is sufficient that the ending is amusing. The stuff can be told in almost straight narrative to the finish, so that the ending has a snapper. The best example of this can be found on the vaudeville stage, where the comedian tells with mock seriousness the tale of his heroic brother, the railroad engineer. The train comes rushing down the track upon the innocent little child who stands on the right of way helpless to move. The situation is worked up to the highest point of which the performer is capable and then comes anti-climax. The engineer bumps the train off the track. Fifty passengers are killed, but the child is saved. That will do for spoken or written comedy, but acted comedy will not hold interest through a lone premise to reach the single laugh at the finish. It must start off with a laugh and build that laugh into a roar as the play progresses or it is not worth the footage employed. As Siegmung Lubin used to say, you cannot laugh, then wait a couple of minutes, laugh again and wait three minutes for the next laugh. You must get them started with a chuckle in the opening scenes, build to a laugh by the middle of the action and close with a yell. There are forms of true light comedy in which the humor is too delicate to bring forth much outward demonstration. It makes you feel at peace with all the world in your heart, but the outward evidence is little more than a smile. There are such comedies, but they are comparatively few and people who can write plays of that type do not need advice. They are already past masters of their profession, catering to a very limited market. The greater demand is for comedies that will make the audiences laugh so that the exhibitor, hearing the laughs, will know that they are comedies. There are few exhibitors and almost as few theatrical managers who do not gauge by the audible demonstrations. It is the wrong standard, but since this is so, they must be given material that will bring unthinking roars of laughter rather than the keen, silent appreciation.

This does not necessarily mean knockabout work. It does mean that farce will sell better than straight comedy as a rule, since it possesses more activity and a situation is stressed to get the fullest possible development.

It is all a matter of development. The third edition of Technique of the Photoplay takes a simple scene and works it from drama to knockabout, while still retaining the original business. The first merely shows the unapproved sweetheart being ordered from the house. The ultimate development is closely akin to a battle royal and yet all of the scenes merely express the paternal satisfaction with the daughter's choice. It is a good study stunt to take a simple scene and carry it from polite comedy to knockabout and a study of the various scenes will give the student a better command of emphasis than the writing of a dozen plays, for it is an intensive study in which attention is centered upon a single object.

The best humorous fiction is told in humorous phrase. Photoplay uses action instead of words and so the actions, in themselves, must be humorous as well as the situations those actions develop. An appreciation of this fact will save a lot of rejections.

At the same time humorous action, of itself, is of small value unless the idea is also humorous. Suppose that we see a man on the deck of a yacht working the pumps with desperate energy. If the ship is supposed to be sinking, the situation is dramatic. If he is a fat man, and short of breath, then his actions are amusing, but while his actions are amusing he is evidently performing a useful service to the best of his ability. But if we see, in alternate flashes, that he has been persuaded that the yacht is aleak and sinking where in reality the jokers are in the hold filling the well with water from a hose as rapidly as he pumps it out, then the futile nature of his efforts gives a touch of humor that makes more absurd the precise action that, in another connection, was amusing but not supremely funny. The action is the same, but the changed idea has brought humor to the situation. An Indian creeping along the ground with his face close to earth may be tracking the heroine who is presently to be burned at the stake. The situation possesses thrills. A white man in the same position, but rolling a peanut with his nose may bring shrieks of laughter. The scene will be still more diverting if his previous conduct had led us to rejoice in his present humiliation.

It is not easy to write comedy because it requires, even more than drama, the utmost nicety of valuation. You must know what each scene is worth in visual and mental laughs and must so plan your development that you work in an ascending scale and not blindly. You must constantly accelerate your action, and it is this which makes most alleged feature comedies either tiresome or comedy dramas by the end of the second reel.

Twisting.

Writing about a play, an author casually says, "The idea was developed from a comedy that I did not like, so I changed it into a drama." Remember that when your own story does not seem to fit. Each story has its many aspects, and any starting premise can be made to yield comedy or drama as desired. Not only that. It will, through treatment, yield many comedies and many dreams. Don't get the idea that you are through with a basic plot when you have written just one story from it. Keep it and sprout another, or three or four. It's easy.

Even So.

From an unsigned column in the Indianapolis Star we take this intelligent comment on the present situation:

> Personally, I am of the opinion that Mr. Lasky is right. If the motion picture game is to retain its hold upon the affections of the public there must be far better stories than have recently been pictured. The authors are not rising to the situation; nor are the producers. For this, in part at least, the producers are to blame. We hear a good deal about the need for good scripts, but at the same time we don't hear much about special offers made to authors for such scripts. The idea that any one can write a good motion picture scenario is absurd; the art is a new one; it requires a special technique; a knowledge of the rules and requirements of an entirely new game. The man—be he a well-known author or not—who can write a striking original story can be certain of his price; a much better price in many cases than the motion picture producers offer. Why, then, go to the bother of turning a good short or serial magazine story into motion picture form? At least as originally written it would be passed upon by editors competent to judge English; can this be said of the men who pass upon motion picture scenarios? As to the question of compensation, why should not the author of a motion picture story be paid on the royalty basis, the same as authors of other forms of plays? Whenever the motion picture producers really sense the need for better pictures; are willing to enlist the services of men and women really competent to write them, and are, at the same time, willing to pay prices that will equal or better the prices paid in other forms of literary endeavor, then they will get them, and not till then. After all, brains are werth quite as much as celluloid film.

Brains are worth more than film, and yet five thousand feet of negative films costs at least $150, which is two or three times as much as is at present paid for the average idea the film carries. Think that over.

His Motto.

A western writer offers this as his motto:

Be daring, deep and dignified
And tolerant and true.

Better still, his letter shows that he is working along the lines his motto indicates, and we think he will get there one of these days, just as all have done who are qualified and who have played the game fairly.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 151.

What size picture would you suggest for a house 50, 75, 100 and 125 feet deep, meaning that these distances are from screen to rear row of seats? Why do you select the sizes you mention?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 144.

There were several very excellent replies to question 144. W. B. Allen's reply would have been published, but he did not tell us how to determine the C. P. when the two sides of the screen were evenly illuminated. That is done by the grease spot method; otherwise his reply was excellent. Joseph Smith's answer was also very good indeed. In fact, he gave data concerning the various standard candle powers which I shall publish. Dean A. Snyder also sent in a very good reply.

The Roll of Honor consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; Jack W. Fau, Sydney Mines, N. S.; W. W. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; Dean A. Snyder, Bangor, Pa.; Leonard Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md., and J. L. Arnold, Bellingham, Wash.

I have selected the reply of Brother Fau for publication. He is a member of Lowell, Mass., Local 950.

Reply to Question No. 144.

By Jack W. Fau, Sydney Mines, N. S.

The question: How do you figure the candle power of an incandescent lamp? What is the standard candle power?

The answer: The candle power of an incandescent lamp is figured by comparing it with a light of known brilliancy. One simple method is to make a screen of white paper upon one side of which, and its center, is placed a grease spot. This screen is then placed in position between the light of known brilliancy and the light of unknown brilliancy, and at such point that the illumination on both sides of the screen will be equal. In this position the grease spot will become almost if not entirely invisible. If the light is the stronger on the front side the spot will appear dark on the white paper, but if it is strongest on the back side the spot will appear light on a dark ground, and in either case the screen should be moved nearer one of the lights and away from the other. When a position is reached where the grease spot becomes invisible, or practically so, measure the distance between the screen and the light of known brilliancy; also the distance between the screen and the light of unknown brilliancy. Then as the intensity of illumination produced by a source of light varies inversely as the square of the distance of the object from the source, the candle power of the light under test will be found by dividing the square of the distance of the light of known intensity from the screen by the square of the distance of the light of unknown candle power from the screen and multiplying that result by the candle power of the light whose brilliancy we know, which is ordinarily one C. P. Foor instance, suppose we are figuring the candle power of lamp X by comparing it with a lamp whose C. P. we know to be 16. When the screen is illuminated equally on both sides we find the distance from X to screen to be 2 feet, and from Y to screen 4 feet. We then have $2x2 = 4 \div 16\ (4x4) = .25$, which multiplied by 16 equals 4, the candle power of lamp X.

The standard of brilliancy is the light given by a spermaceti candle .9 inches in diameter at the base and .8 in diameter at the top, the same being designed to consume 120 grains of spermaceti and wick combined per hour. There are other standards in use, but their candle power is determined by the above standard.

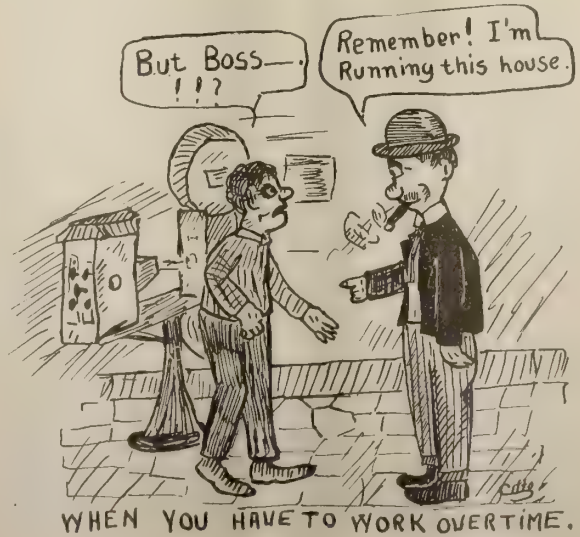
Brother Smith says:

> That the German candle is composed of pure paraffine, with a flame height of 50 millimeters (1.97 inches), which gives a trifle greater light than the English standard. There is also the Carcel Candle Power, which is a lamp burning rape seed oil; also the Peutane lamp, which burns gasoline, and the Amyle Acetate lamp, which burns amyle alcohol obtained from fusel oil with acetic and sulphuric acids, or Amylacetate sulphuric acid, the flame height of this light is 40 millimeters, or 1.576 inches.

There are also other methods of obtaining the candle power, but I think the foregoing serves the purpose of the question very well, and the purpose of the question was to see how many operators had the necessary knowledge to test the candle power of a lamp if they were called upon to do so.

Flicker.

Pembroke, Ont., asks questions which call for the following explanation. The shutter of a projection machine, three-wing or otherwise, will cause flicker if the machine is run slowly enough. It will also cause flicker at normal speed when the shutter is not properly proportioned. From your questions it is evident that you have little or no understanding of these matters, and I would therefore recommend that you immediately send $4.00 to the Moving Picture World for a copy of the 720-page Handbook for Managers and Operators, practically all of which deals in matters pertaining directly to practical projection. I would then particularly recommend that you study closely, "The Revolving Shutter," Pages 469 to 476 inclusive. This alone would be worth the price of the book to you. It would be useless for me to attempt to fix you up until you first understand the underlying principles involved in the revolving shutter, and that is too long a story to tell in the department. I again advise you to get the book, and get it at once. After you have studied the principles involved I would recommend that you study "Matching Up the Lens System," Pages 113 to 146 inclusive, paying particular attention to Figure 63a, Plate 145, and the text matter on Page 146.



Twenty Years an Operator.

William Reed, Atlantic City, N. J., who is the oldest motion picture machine operator in the United States, if not in the entire world, who is still working at the business, in a personal letter, makes the following remark: "Well, the morning of June 28th, marked the twentieth anniversary of the first public performance I gave as a motion picture machine operator. Just think of it! Twenty years ago! Now, wouldn't that make a man think of his wedding anniversary?"

And the best of it is I know that it is true, because it was in 1896 that "Billy" Reed went to Atlantic City, and, together with "Pop" Rock, notice of whose death appeared in a recent issue, started a motion picture theater on Canal street in the city.

Billy sends me a picture of his two children. I give it space as the children of the dean of the art of motion picture projection, William R. Reed, Colonial theater, Atlantic City, N. J. Reed's letter was a request to me to visit Atlantic City and deliver a lecture on projection, and that I certainly will do.

A Few Questions.

W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada, says:

I wonder if the editor will feel like starting another series of questions when the present are finished. I hope so. Have been deeply interested in the articles and drawings submitted by Mr. Martin of Los Angeles; the drawings are great. Believe me he is no amateur. And now if it is not out of order I would like to ask a few questions. (A) Why it is the stereopticon lens does not cause the light ray to cross or come to a focus? (B) My stereopticon consists of lenses cemented together. What is the shape of the surfaces which come in contact? (C) Referring to Table 2, page 143 of the new Handbook, you give the E. F. of various condenser combinations. How is this E. F. determined? As I understand the matter the E. F. of an objective simply means that rays of light passing through the lens will spread so much for every foot of distance they travel. If this is true I don't seem to be able to apply it to condenser combinations. Could you explain this point briefly? (D) Have tried to match up my optical system in accordance with Table 1, page 141 of the New Handbook, and find that if my objective was a little larger in diameter no harm would be done. My B. F. is 4¾ inches and the lens diameter 1 9-16 inches. However, the loss at the lens is not so great, though I guess I lose at the arc because I am using an 8½ and 6½ inch condenser with the latter next the arc; distance between condensers 1/16 of an inch. The apex of the front condenser is 20 inches from the aperture. My main reason for using an 8½ inch condenser is to get a clear field at the stereopticon. With any shorter focal length condenser color appears in the corners of the picture. (E) By the way, do you think there would be much gain by placing the slide up very close to the condenser? In some cases it is an inch between the slide and the condenser, and this would have the effect of bringing the stereopticon lens to the conjugate foci point of the condensers if it is not already there as well as eliminating chromatic aberration.

As to the questions I don't know if there will be another regular series, but the questions will extend considerably beyond those printed in the books, and operators are hereby invited to submit questions, together with their version of the answer, understanding that I don't want catch questions, but questions which are practical, and which have not as yet been published.

Yes, Brother Martin is certainly anything else than an amateur draftsman.

With regard to your questions: (A) The stereopticon lens does cause the rays to cross, but the crossing in this case, is, as I understand the matter, accomplished between the factors of the stereopticon lens. I have not done any actual experimenting to see if there is a dissolving point in front of the stereopticon lens, but I think not. Will some one who knows please enlighten us on this particular point. (B) One of the surfaces is concave and the other convex. (C) You are badly mixed in your data here, Brother Allen. The equivalent focus of a lens is the distance from a point very nearly half way between the two combinations to the point at which parallel rays of light will focus and form an image. This is very clearly shown on page 104, Figure 38 of the third edition of the Handbook; also it is explained in the text matter on page 104. The reason it is necessary to focus a distant object when measuring the E. F. is that the rays of light entering the lens must be practically parallel in order to obtain a correct result. With a single lens there is no E. F.—only a principal focus. The E. F. applies only to combinations of lenses. In the condenser we have two lenses, and the equivalent focus of the combination is found by adding together the focal length of each lens and dividing the result by 4, thus the E. F. of two 7½ inch condensers is $7\frac{1}{2} + 7\frac{1}{2} = 15 \div 4 = 3\frac{3}{4}$ inches E. F. (D) If your arc is located more than 3½ inches from the back lens you are having unnecessary light loss at that point. Can't you clear up your stereopticon field by moving the lamp when you shove over to the stereopticon? (E) Quite plainly you are not very clear with regard to the meaning of optical terms. I would recommend that you study the explanations of the term conjugate foci, page 95 of the Handbook. The conjugate foci points are the points of object and image, meaning by this that one point is the location of the object, and is equal to the distance from the optical center of the lens to the object; the other point is the location of the image and the distance from the optical center of the lens to the image. The changing of either one of these points automatically alters the other; as one is shortened the other is lengthened, and vice versa. In the case of the stereopticon objective the crater is one conjugate foci point and the image of the crater, supposed to be located between the two factors of the stereopticon lens, is the other, and the slide is one conjugate foci point of the objective and the screen the other. I don't know that there is any particular harm done by moving the slide slightly away from the condenser, always provided the cone of light completely covers the opening in the slide; also there is the advantage that the slide does not get so hot. If there are those who differ with me in this I shall be glad to have their views.

Wrecking Committees.

A middle-west exhibitor propounds the following query:

You say you are in favor of the organization of both exhibitors and operators, and I believe your position in this regard has made the organization of operators proceed with much greater rapidity than it otherwise would have done. Now I do you the honor to believe that you are entirely honest, and advocate the union because you believe it to be for the best interest, as you say, of all concerned. I think your course during the years you have been prominently before the moving picture public amply proves the integrity of your intention, as well as the wisdom of most of your actions. Conceding this freely, and even allowing that it is possible the organization of operators may, in a great majority of cases, prove to be, in the end, beneficial to the local industry—I am broad-minded enough, I hope, to understand and appreciate your views in this matter, even though that view may run counter to the ideas of the majority of exhibitors—still, I would like an honest expression of your mind on one point, even though you may not like to set it forth:

What is your opinion of the organization which, failing to gain its ends by means of a fair fight, sneaks around in the dead of night and wrecks theaters, smashing up projection machines, costly pianos and seats? This has been done, thought I won't embarrass your answer by saying where. The guilty ones will know, and I strongly suspect you also know. Certainly you have no love for the union in question, and I have an idea this may be at least partly because of the methods I have named.

Yes, I do know, and have known for a long time; also the legal evidence to convict individuals of this class of outrage is right here in New York City, and available. But you must not condemn a whole union for the crimes committed by the few. True, the union ought to have long since discarded such misleadership, and thus have purged itself of the charge it bears, and will continue to bear so long as these men are retained. But I know there are many excellent, well-meaning men in this particular union; men who not only would not approve, but strongly condemn such methods, and would voice their condemnation openly if they dared. Open condemnation would, however, under existing conditions in the city in question, mean very grave trouble for them, and we therefore should not too strongly censure them for failure to enter what might be, for them, a losing battle.

As to my opinion of such things, why it ought to be plain from my writings and acts in the past. Such methods are not only outrageous, but in addition to that, savor strongly of cowardice. We can even have some degree of admiration for the physical courage of that most despicable wretch, the New York gunman, who "gets" his enemy in broad daylight, on the open streets, and in a crowd at that. But the "wrecking committee" which, after a fair fight has failed, sneaks around at dead of night and does that which it dare not do at any other time, is not only guilty of cowardice, but contemptible cowardice at that. I am a great believer in organization, and I was in the labor movement as early as 1883. I believe firmly in the efficacy of diplomacy, with strike (war) as the very, very last resort, after every other possible method has been tried and has failed. I also firmly believe in fighting for all there is in you, if the "other fellow" compels you to fight, and I have, in days past and gone, taken very active part in some red hot battles. But I believe in FIGHTING FAIR. I'll lick the tar out of the enemy if I can, and I'll undertake to not overlook any FAIR means of winning. I will NOT, however, resort to unfair, cowardly methods, which correspond to sneaking around and sticking a knife in the man's back when he is off guard.

It may be said to the credit of operators' unions, however, that there has been comparatively very, very little of wrecking committee activities. There have been a few charges of stink-ball throwing, which may, or may not have been done by union men, but actual smash-'em-up-in-the-night methods, be it said to the everlasting credit of operators' unions, has been almost entirely limited to one section. As a general proposition, taking everything into consideration, operators' unions have, I think, been very clean in their battles. I believe that, barring the section named, and a very few cases of the adoption of mildly questionable methods in other sections, the organization has every right to "point with pride" to its record in this respect. In many cases the I. A. has bravely accepted defeat, where by every rule of justice and right it should have won—in fact, its demands should have been acceded to by exhibitors without argument, much less a fight. I do not think, therefore, the correspondent is entitled to condemn the whole organization by reason of the act of the extremely few.

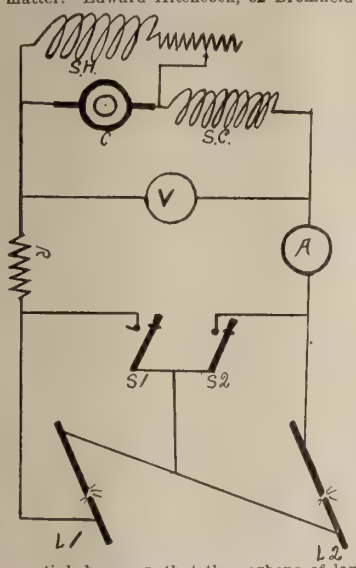
Correct.

Some considerable time ago in describing the Transverter, a new current rectifying device, I gave certain data and left it up to operators to puzzle out the method by which the change from one arc to the other was made, and only one man seems to have been able to solve the matter. Edward Hitchcock, 62 Bromfield Road, Somerville, Mass., says:



This is my first attempt to answer anything in the department, but here is my view of the way the Transverter changes from one lamp to the other, according to your description, a portion of which was incomplete, to see if we could puzzle it out:

Suppose switches S2 and S1 to be open and we wish to start lamp L1, and afterwards change over to lamp L2. Close switch S2 and strike arc L1. Freeze the carbons of arc L2 and open switch S2. Now, first having seen that arc L1 is not too long, separate the carbons of arc L2, whereupon the two lamps will be burning in series with precisely the same amperage the one lamp had before, the voltage at the transverter, however, having automatically doubled. It is essential, however, that the carbons of lamp L2 be "froze" before you pull switch L2, or the circuit will be broken and you will lose the arc at L1. Switches S1 and S2 act to short circuit the lamp which is not in use. In the diagram, R is the rheostat, A the ammeter, V the voltmeter, C the armature, S C the series field, S H the shunt field and R2 the field regulator.

I am not eligible to examination for license for operator in Massachusetts, being only 19 years of age. I must, therefore, wait a year before I can get even a second class license. I worked in Ohio for four years, but it takes a few more added to my age before I can operate here.

Your answer is correct. That is essentially the way the two-arc Transverter works, though short circuiting is done through a double-pole switch, because of the fact that the underwriters' rules do not allow of the use of the single-pole switch under this condition. The effect, however, is the same.

As to your age, why it seems tough to you now, but ten years from today you will, I think, agree that it is a wise law.

Report on Oklahoma City.

An operator in a small town in Oklahoma recently visited Oklahoma City. He says:

> Have just returned from Oklahoma City. While there I took the time to visit all the picture and vaudeville houses, and while I think projection could be materially improved in many of the theaters, still, I do want to say that at the Empress, projection was practically perfect. A better light could not be asked for, and the operator paid particularly careful attention to the speed. The Lyric also was perfect, with the exception that the operator did not watch his light quite so carefully as did the man at the Empress. If he had done that, his work would have been equal to that of the Empress operator. In several of the theaters, I am sorry to say, projection could not by any stretch of the imagination be called high class. In one theater I saw the picture out of frame for as long as two minutes at a stretch, and in another house the light actually went completely out twice, and there was continual discoloration at the bottom of the picure; also there was considerable flicker.

Well, gentlemen of Oklahoma City, how about this? Are you going to let your critic get away with this? I am sure he has intended to be entirely fair and honest, therefore it seems that, while some of you are delivering distinctly high class work, there are others who need a little shaking up and waking up. But I won't say any more until you have a chance to defend yourselves, except to remind you that discoloration of the light on the screen, and the picture running out of frame, is small credit to the invidiidual operator or the organization he belongs to, always provided he is not kept busy rewinding or doing something else which prevents giving proper attention to projection, and I personally believe that where this condition exists it is a legitimate part of the union's business to take the matter up with the managers and put a stop to it.

Bon Ami.

J. Meleher, Sioux City, Iowa, writes:

> Have been operating at the Olympic Theater for something like ten years, and have always had trouble in getting my projection and condensing lenses clean. For the past month, however, I have been using Bon Ami, which does the trick to perfection. Just put on a thin lather, so thin that it hardly shows on the glass, leaving it until dry. Then wipe off with a soft, clean cloth, and you won't have any streaks or smears; also it does not scratch the glass.

This matter was, unless I am mistaken, published in the department two or three years ago. Used carefully, Bon Ami is, I think, a very good article for cleaning lenses, and a 10-cent cake will last indefinitely, if used for this purpose only. Incidentally it must be said that clean lenses are of the utmost importance, because a dirty lens surface reflects from 3 to 10 per cent. more light than does a clean one, and, inasmuch, as there are four surfaces in a condensing lens and six in the objective, dirty lenses may easily become a source of considerable light loss.

Quick Threading Reel.

R. E. Wicker, Pinehurst, N. C., has invented what he calls a quick-threading reel. He says:

> Enclosed find drawing of a "Reel Quick Threader." What do you think of it? I pass it along to brother operators. I notice there has been some discussion with regard to threading the Power's machine equipped with a loop setter. My method is as follows: Open all idlers and the film gate. Place film in upper, and empty reel in lower magazine. Draw out sufficient film to reach the lower reel. Place the film under upper sprocket and close idler. Carry film down under loop setter roller and over lower sprocket, pulling it tight enough to touch the loop setter idler. Close lower sprocket idler and insert end of reel clip in lower magazine. Now pull the film at the upper sprocket, taking up all slack allowed by the loop setter, leaving no lower loop. Hold upper loop with the right hand and close film gate with the left. Now, when the machine starts the loop setter will set the proper length of lower loop, and the film will thus be prevented from touching the base, where there may be oil and dirt. Try this method if you have not already done so. It is not as complicated as it sounds. I am out of the game now, as the Carolina Theater runs only in winter. I am reading the projection department every week just the same, and am fairly itching to get back into the operating room. Last winter we ran Paramount and Pathe to full houses. We had an eight-piece orchestra of high-class musicians and ran a first-class show. Have been using 220 volts through a compensarc and getting a uniformly-lighted picture, though it was not so bright. On your trip through the South don't overlook Pinehurst and Southern Pines.

Well, my brother, as to whether Pinehurst or Southern Pines will be visited will depend on whether the operators and managers of those two villages want the lecture badly enough to arrange a meeting; also it will depend somewhat on whether there would be a sufficient number of theaters to justify the expense of a day's stop. We want to do all we can for the benefit of the business, but it would hardly be fair to ask the Moving Picture World to stand the expense of a day's time, etc., simply to address a half a dozen managers and operators.

With regard to the quick-threading reel, I cannot see why it would not work all right, nor do I see where it would work any particular injury to the film. However, I am afraid it does not stand much chance of adoption, because of the fact that exchanges would not buy a complicated reel of that kind, though some individual operators may take the trouble to construct one.

Your method of threading the loop setter machine is passed along for the consideration of our readers, and I will add for their benefit that Pinehurst is a winter resort, and there is very little there during the summer.

Brother Wicker sends the following description of the reel quick threader, which was on a separate sheet of paper and was not discovered until this stage of dictation was reached. The cut shows the reel with one of the sides removed. A is a plate of steel, same gauge as that of which the reel is made. In this plate are riveted in countersunk holes the short rods C. This plate is placed inside a "cage" constructed of short rods B, which are riveted in the plates of the reel itself, and form the hub thereof. D are short projections on plate A which reach through the semicircular openings E in the plates of the reels. To insert the film, plate A is revolved in the direction of the arrow until short rods B and C are half way between each other. The film is then pushed down between them and literally through the hub.

Plate A is then revolved in the opposite direction, which has the effect of clamping the film between the stationary and movable set of rods. When all the film is run off the reel a jerk revolves plate A in the direction of the arrow which instantly releases the film so that it pulls out.

From Jersey City.

James A. Merklein, operator Danforth theater, Greenville, N. J., says:

I have a good position and am working for good people. Enclosed find pictures of the house and of the operating room. The theater is fireproof; seating capacity of 650. Projection equipment consists of two Simplex machines, supplied by two 70 ampere Hallberg economizers taking current at 220 volts. The distance of projection is about 125 feet and we are projecting an 18 foot picture.

In this section are a great many operators who, if they had just a little instruction, would become really first class men. I am therefore interested in seeing a school established within our local, to be followed later by an examination; those who fail to be called for re-examination in three months, in the meantime being given instruction on those things in which they fail. Should they pass the next time their name will be placed on the Roll of Honor, and if the member can keep his name on the Roll of Honor for one year, he shall be given a gold medal with the local's emblem thereon. Broadly, that is the scheme I would like to see adopted. It could not fail but instruct the member in the technical end of projection. What do you think of the idea?

My machine room is one of the largest in the city. It measures 12 feet wide by 24 feet long.

The scheme you outline offers a incentive to the members to study, and the result certainly could not be otherwise than good. I shall be interested in learning the final outcome of this matter.

Files His Carbons.

C. R. Terhune, Franklin, Ind., says:

I notice in March 4th issue that "Los Angeles" has trouble with his arc, the crater forming to one side of the carbon. I have experienced the same difficulty, and find the only way I can get the crater to form in the center of the carbon is to file one side of the top carbon flat, using a rasp for the purpose. The flat side should be toward the condenser, and the top carbon tip set a little back of the bottom—in other words, the regular D. C. set. I find that with this arrangement the crater will form in the center of the front side, if the carbons are properly set. The filing does not seem to make any difference in the length of time the carbon will burn. I hope this suggestion will help "Los Angeles," and would like to hear from him after he has tried it.

It is a little late to publish this letter now, but it may possibly be of value, nevertheless, and "Los Angeles" will kindly take notice. He can address Brother Terhune at 65 So. Hougham St., Franklin, Ind.

Meniscus-Bi-Convex Sets.

Strange as it may seem, some operators are puzzled as to how to place the meniscus-bi-convex set. Some have even placed the bi-convex next the arc, with the meniscus placed backward, toward the film. A meniscus-bi-convex set should be placed with the bi-convex—which is the lens with both sides the same shape—next the film. The other lens should be placed with the side which may look flat, but which in reality is slightly concave, next the arc, and the two lenses should be placed as close together as you can get them without having them actually touch.

In selecting the meniscus-bi-convex sets you should have them of such focal length that the E. F. of the combination will be the same as the E. F. of the piano set they are to replace. To find the E. F. of two lenses, measure the focus of each lens separately, add them together and divide by four; the result will be the E. F. of the two lenses: For instance, take two 6½-inch lenses: $6\frac{1}{2} + 6\frac{1}{2} = 13 \div 4 = 3\frac{1}{4}$; therefore, the E. F. of the combination is 3¼ inches.

From Lowell, Mass.

F. G. Wheeler, Lowell, Mass., says:

I would like to put in a good word for the carbon economizer made by the Culbert Carbon Economizer Company, Athol, Mass. It costs but 50 cents and is thoroughly reliable. I am using National carbons, 3-4 inch upper, and 5-8 inch lower, pulling 40 amperes D. C. I like them quite well; get a nice, clear-cut white spot. Sometimes I find small glass beads on the lower carbon, but that does not harm; also they are a little dirtier than most carbons, but that is not a serious matter if one gets the light. Taking everything into consideration, they are, in my judgment, a first-class carbon.

All of which is passed along, with the comment that the glass beads simply tend to show, as I understand it, purity of material.

Port Huron, Michigan.

Port Huron, Mich., sends in the following:

There are four theaters in this city; the Maxine, Harry S. Goseline, manager, being the newest and most up-to-date. This house has a $5,000 pipe organ, the keys of which are manipulated by Miss Hazel Marlatt, who is possessed of more than ordinary ability when it comes to coaxing real music out of the ivories. Projection machinery consists of two motor-driven Power Six A's and a rectifier, the same being operated by Joseph Monahan and his assistant. The service is Metro, V-L-S-E and World. The Bijou, C. E. Hubbard, manager, shows Paramount and Triangle films on two rather old hand-driven Simplex projectors. It is a very comfortable theater. The American is a small house, but is doing well; shows Universal and Mutual; also Chaplin films. William Wallace is its capable manager, and Raymond Outwater juggles the projection machine crank, using a Standard and a Power's Six. The Family is managed by L. J. Bedford. It uses General films, projected by two Power Six A's. The attitude of the Family and the Bijou theaters toward the operators is not that which makes for the best service in their operating rooms.

I would respectfully suggest to the managers of the Family and Bijou that it cannot, in the long run, be a paying proposition to adopt an attitude which makes for inefficiency in the operating room. Theater managers will do well to consider this fact, viz.: The inefficient operator may easily waste anywhere from 10 to as much as 50 per cent. of the projection current the house is paying for, and, as a matter of fact, I firmly believe this kind of waste costs the industry between $10,000 and $20,000 per day. The competent operator can avoid this waste, which may amount to more than the difference the manager would have to pay in order to secure a really competent man in the operating room. I have actually visited operating rooms where the incompetent, cheap operator was wasting as much as 30 or 35 amperes of the 70 he was using, merely through ignorance of the optical system of the projector. Such cases are, of course, extreme, yet instances where the waste is fully equal to one-third the current used in projection are very common, and thus many managers are literally saving at the spigot (cheap operator) but are leaving the bung hole wide open. It is a case, Brother Manager, where very often a saving in salary is in reality an expensive proposition—a very expensive one indeed.

Photographic Text Books.

So many inquiries have been received asking for literature on photographic and motion picture topics that the following list of books has been prepared. There are many, many books on photography which are very good but which are not included in this list. This list has been compiled to help the earnest student of cinematography and each book listed is valuable in something which has a bearing on motion picture photography, although only those books listed under cinematography are devoted exclusively to that subject.

Handbooks of Elementary Photography.

Books under this heading give the primary lessons in still photography. No one should attempt motion picture photography without having first mastered the principles of still camera work, both practically and theoretically. It is not intended that the student should buy every book in the list. One or two titles that appeal to him most will be sufficient.

Reference Works.

No earnest worker can be without some reliable works of reference in his profession. The best reference book that one can obtain is a large loose leaf note book in which are filed the formulas and notes of the worker's personal experience and the pertinent articles that can be gradually accumulated from all sources, co-workers, trade journals, direction slips from packages of films, plates, papers, catalogs, etc. After that come the standard reference works.

Optical Lantern Work.

The old-time projection machine or "Magic Lantern" is still in the ring, although the motion picture projector has handed it a mighty wallop in the jaw. Many thousands of slides are still being made, and many a projection machine operator might improve both his time and his finances by learning how they are made.

Light and Photographic Optics.

It is astonishing how ignorant most photographic workers are of even the simpler principles of optics. What would you think of a mechanic who did not know what his tools were for or what they could do? The photographer's lens is his principal tool, and yet how little the most of them know about the lenses they use. Diaphragm openings seem the greatest of mysteries to many. Why not spend a few hours learning facts that will be valuable to you every working day for the rest of your life?

Published by a firm of manufacturing opticians as an advertisement of their specialties, but containing more practical information on the choice and use of lenses than any other work at the price. 288 pp. Illustrated. (English.) 1902. Cloth, 75 cents. Andrew J. Lloyd Co., Boston, Mass.

Chemistry of Photography.

The action played by the chemicals used in photographic solutions is an interesting one, and one does not need to be a chemist to get a very good idea of why each particular chemical is used in a bath, and what effect it has on the photographic image.

CHEMISTRY FOR PHOTOGRAPHERS. By C. F. Townsend. An excellent first handbook, not exhaustive, but simple and practical. (English.) 3d edition. 1902. Cloth, 50 cents. Andrew J. Lloyd Co., Boston, Mass.

Books on Cinematography.

The books under this heading comprise nearly all of the works published in English that are now in print which deal directly with cinematography.

PRACTICAL CINEMATOGRAPHY AND ITS APPLICATION. By Frederick A. Talbot. 262 pp. 12 mo. $1.10. J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia, Pa.

This is a popular work by an English writer and while it is published for the general reader, and the moving picture fan, it holds much of interest for the cinematographer. It gives the fundamentals of motion-picture production, describes the different sorts of cameras and projection apparatus used, and gives working methods of developing the film, printing the negative, and the operation of projection. Very complete in its information and abundantly illustrated.

MOVING PICTURES; HOW THEY ARE MADE AND WORKED. By Frederick A. Talbot. 270 pp. $1.50. J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia. Pa.

On the same style as the above but containing different material about the same subjects. Not a text-book, but an interesting account of the many uses of motion pictures, and well worth reading and adding to your library.

CYCLOPAEDIA OF MOTION PICTURE WORK. By David S. Hulfish. 2 vols. $4.00. American School of Correspondence, Chicago.

About one-quarter devoted to motion picture photography and the remainder to projection. Also treats of picture production from the producer's and scenario writer's standpoint.

THE A. B. C. OF THE CINEMATOGRAPH. By Cecil N. Hepworth. 128 pp. Cloth, 50 cents. 1900. Tennant & Ward, New York, N. Y.

Not an up-to-date book, but valuable as the best authority on camera movements, and interesting from an historical standpoint.

LIVING PICTURES: THEIR HISTORY, REPRODUCTION AND PRACTICAL WORKING. By Henry V. Hopwood. 1899. 265 pp. and index.

One of the first books published about moving pictures. In spite of its age, it contains a good deal of valuable information and is a standard work.

THE HANDBOOK OF CINEMATOGRAPHY. 200 pp. 6 shillings and 6 pence, or $1.60. Kinematograph Weekly, Tottenham St., London. W., England.

Comes the nearest to being what might be called a text-book on motion picture photography in this list.

HOW TO MAKE AND OPERATE MOVING PICTURES. By Bernard E. Jones. 168 pp. $1.00. Funk & Wagnalls, New York, N. Y.

A very good book for the amateur cinematographer. To the beginner who wishes to learn the first steps this book is very good, but for the professional and the man already in the game, it contains little of value.

THE ART OF THE MOVING PICTURE. By Vachel Lindsay. 128 pp. $1.25. McMillan, New York, N. Y.

Not properly a book on motion picture photography at all, but has many interesting ideas for the cinematographer and the producer to think about.

MAKING THE MOVIES. Gy Earnest A. Dench. 1916. $1.25. McMillan, New York, N. Y.

A "popular" science type of book for the man in the street. Interesting and instructive but not professing to teach anyone to become a camera man.

Recent Motion Picture Patents.

The following are condensed descriptions of patents recently granted relating to motion picture photography.

Anyone interested in more complete description can obtain a copy of any U. S. patent paper by sending five cents for each copy wanted, giving the number of the patent, to the Patent Office, Washington, D. C.

U. S. PATENTS.

1187241 W. F. Fox.

A Process for Making Colored Motion Pictures. Two negatives of an object are made, one through a red filter and another through a green filter; positive prints are made from the negatives; the negative from the green filter is superposed upon the positive corresponding to the red filter negative, thereby producing a printing negative which gives correct values for white light. A print is made therefrom and the silver in its image toned to a green color in a vanadium chloride bath, the toning bath so affecting the gelatine that when it is subsequently immersed in a bath of red dye the gelatine will be dyed in inverse proportion to the green toning.

1188939 Frederic E. Ives.

A Three-Color Photograph and the Method of Making the Same, which is especially adapted to the manufacture of colored motion pictures. The three negatives are made in the usual way behind the customary filters. The first image is made from the red selection negative by forming a silver image within the gelatine layer and iron-toning it to a blue color. The gelatine is then sensitized with bichromate and printed behind the green selection negative, whereupon it is dyed a magenta by immersion. The third image in yellow from the blue selection negative is superposed upon the others by a known imbibition method.

1187270 H. Csanyi.

Attachments for roll film cameras of the Kodak type to enable motion pictures to be taken with the camera and then printed in the camera to make a positive film. A further attachment enables the Kodak to be used as a projector for exhibiting the positive film.

1187137 A. F. Gall.

A method of producing motion picture film of the type which contains a plurality of rows of pictures, alternate rows of which are in original sequence and the others in reversed sequence. The negatives are printed side by side with the first picture in the series of pictures, on one negative in alignment with the last picture in the series on the next adajacent negative. The first, third, etc., negatives which are to be printed in original sequence are moved in one direction, and the remaining negatives which are to be printed in reversed sequence are moved in the opposite direction, while the film upon which the positive is to be made is simultaneously and synchronously moved in the same direction as the negatives which are printed in reversed sequence.

1187136 A. F. Gall.

A device for adjusting and supporting the lens of a motion picture apparatus. It includes a quickly adjustable collar which grips the lens barrel, and a fine screw-threaded adjusting means for the final adjustment.

1186089 Thomas H. Blair.

A Motion Picture Machine in which the feeding means for the film is modified to decrease the period of movement of the film and to avoid flickering. The feed mechanism includes a star wheel having radial slots in which a driving pin upon a rotating arm will slide, the outer ends of the slots being curved to correspond to the path of the pin.

1188114 Victor V. Thomas.

A Motion Picture Machine in which special provision is made for properly framing the picture, that is, securing register between the view and the light opening. An idler roll is pressed against the film between the customary feed sprocket and tensioning device so that varying lengths of film will be located between them, thus controlling the portion of the film which is moved into position before the light opening.

1187153 L. D. Kohlmeyer.

A motion picture projection apparatus in which means is provided for setting the film forward or back so as to bring the pictures in register with the projection window without interfering with the operation of the machine. It includes an oscillating carriage varying the film feeding mechanism whereby the feeding sprockets may be vertically adjusted without disconnecting the worm gear which joins said sprockets with the driving mechanism.

1188074 Frederick W. Hochstetter.

A Shutter for Motion Picture Cameras. A vertically movable slide is reciprocated up and down across the light opening by a crank action.

1186494 Jean B. Clinger.

A mechanical arrangement for synchronizing a phonograph and a motion picture machine. It includes a clutch mechanism which is thrown into operation when the two machines are not in synchronism, so as to slightly accelerate the phonograph to bring it up to speed.

BRITISH PATENTS.

2411—1915 S. A. LaCellophane.

Cine Film Base. A film, more especially for cine work, is formed of two outer layers, one at least of which is transparent and permeable to photographic chemicals, and the sensitive layer between these outer layers which may be a permeable sheet saturated with the sensitive material. Transparent adhesive is used to unite the layers. Two films of pure cellulose may be used for the outer layers.

2067—1915 Pathe Freres.

Cine Film Base. (Void.) Isoprene or its homologues or analogues, in course of polymerization, are added to cellulose esters, such as the nitrate, formate, acetate, butyrate, and benzoate, for the manufacture of non-inflammable cine films, etc. The polymerization appears to continue after the film is finished, and it may be increased by the methods used in making synthetic rubber.

3198—1915 Soc. des Estab. Gaumont.

Films. (Void.) A non-flam film for photographic and cine purposes comprises a non-flam base, such as viscose, in conjunction with a collodion emulsion. The emulsion, being thin, is developed and finished before the liquids have time to affect the base. The base may be further protected by waterproofing it.

22921—1914 W. Van D. Kelly and C. Raleigh.

A System of Color Cinematography using four light filters arranged in two sets, each set composed of balanced complementary colors, these sets, for instance, being primary red, yellow, blue green, pure blue.

14102—1915 P. D. Brewster.

Color Cinematography. The invention relates to the printing of a color positive upon a double coated film. The negative images are stained to different colors and the light projected through them passes through a lens and is divided into two groups of rays by prisms, each part being then caused to form an image on opposite sides of double coated film with or without the use of light filters and the positive film being coated with color sensitive emulsion.

B 5226—1915 A. S. Spiegel, R. Glendinning and G. Felsenthal.

Live Photographs. A composite of the subject in several poses is taken by successive exposures in a camera having a screen placed in front of the plate and adapted to be moved between the exposures, a print obtained from the negatives so taken being exhibited by means of a corresponding screen. The invention consists of providing an attachment for cameras by means of which successive exposures can be taken through the screen.

B 1978—1915 C. Stille.

Light Measuring Photometers. A photometer consisting of lenses and prisms by which the light is caused to fall upon a light sensitive electrode in an electrolytic cell.

B 3341—1915 S. Lubin.

Printing Cinematograph Films. The printing machine is provided with different apertures for passing different amounts of light for the purpose of compensating for differences in density in different parts of the length of negative film, the light aperture being automatically operated mechanically by the film.

GERMAN PATENTS.

German Patent 28775. Elektrochemische Werke, Berlin.

Ready prepared ferrous oxlate developer made in powder form by the addition of neutral sodium glycollate.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As Fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and S. M. BERG

Musical Setting for "Home."

Released Aug. 13 by Triangle Film Corp'n.
(Prepared by S. M. Berg. By special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., music publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 3 T "Jeremiah Wheaton" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 9½ D "When Bessie plays piano" is a description of action.

At the home of the newly rich Wheatons discord reigns. Bob, the son, is an idle, empty-brained spendthrift. Mrs. Wheaton and her eldest daughter Inez are excellent specimens of the snob ideal, while father is a calloused cynic. In such a household Bessie, the youngest daughter, finds herself after returning from a "finishing up" period in Europe. Different in nature, the family disgusts her and she proceeds to open their eyes by reflecting their actions. Little by little the desired effect is produced and at the grand climax her efforts are crowned with success. Incidentally she wins the heart of a young author and the story closes with the two together.

The character of this picture is dramatic with many brighter scenes throughout. The melody "Home, Sweet Home," is suggested at 8¾ and 65. Note particularly: Popular air 30½, auto effects 57¼.

The THEME selected is "Melodie"—Friml.

Time schedule: 66½ minutes (five reels—about 4,400 feet).

Managers Attention.

The last paragraph of the following letter will explain the reason why the writer's name, town and theater are omitted. The subject it of such deep interest and the point so well taken that I feel sure the readers of these pages will be interested.

Dear Mr. Berg:

I thank you very much for your recent letter, also the publication and answer to my inquiry in the "Moving Picture World." I certainly think your discussion of the subject is sensible, practical and valuable, treating as it does of the subdivisions of marches, waltzes, etc., and the altering of tempo for "flash" scenes.

I have been using the "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets" which you prepare for the various films and have always found them very valuable, especially the directions for playing the THEME, which would be almost impossible for one to do well in the case of playing a new picture for the first time without the aid of the Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet.

The theater where I play has a good pipe organ of two manuals and pedals (swell organ is also a piano) and various traps. I feel a little discouragement at times because the manager says the people prefer as much popular music as possible. He says I can "rest' on the quiet scenes and play lively stuff when there is 'something doing" on the screen. This seems to me to be putting theater music on the same basis as hotel music, but as this is the way the orchestra used to accompany the pictures before the organ was installed I suppose the manager thinks that this is what the people want.

The manager also believes in running the pictures on strict schedule like a trolley car, his idea being that the patrons will always know when a show will start. The schedules are as follows:

FOUR REELS: 10.30, 11.30 A. M., 12.30, 1.30 P. M., etc.

FIVE REELS: 11 A. M., 12.10, 1.20, 2.30, 3.40, 4.50, 6, 7.30 P. M., etc.

SIX REELS (also for SEVEN REELS): 11 A. M., 12.45, 2.30, 4.15, 6, 7.30 P. M., etc.

The six-reel schedule makes the pictures laboriously slow (17 minutes per reel) and the operator feels that as long as the schedules are ended on time (as a train reaches its destination) all is well. Some reels, therefore, will last twenty minutes to "lose time," others will have to hurry to make time.

What I have said in the last two paragraphs is confidential, of course, but if you feel that this is a common state of affairs, in some other theaters, and that it is to be deplored, would like to have you discuss it, omitting my name and town. Hoping you will pardon the "long-windedness" of this epistle, I am, Very truly yours,

This correspondend states that he is discouraged at times because the manager insists that his patrons want popular music. What is usually interpreted as popular music is the songs of the moment sung on the vaudeville stage or the popular airs from the musical comedies of the day. To insist upon an interpretation for a picture with such airs in the majority naturally is not playing the picture. To those musicians who will seriously consider their work by gradually introducing standard melodious airs will find that they are educating the manager and the public. Gradually they will get requests for repetition of such music and the foundation will then be laid.

This strict schedule, so aptly described as a trolley car schedule, is certainly short-sightedness. It is an excellent thing for a manager to have on the front of his theater a time schedule of his performance, but to schedule six and seven reels at the same time, 105 minutes, is certainly a gross error.

Here is an important point which according to my own personal experience is overlooked by managers. In making up his program of running for the day, which, of course, is done before the arrival of the reels, the manager simply knows that he is going to receive so many reels. In making my musical settings it is necessary for me to know the exact footage of a picture irrespective of the number of reels upon which it is wound. How frequently one finds that a picture listed at seven reels contains but 6,500 feet, six reel pictures measuring but 5,200 feet, etc. In fact, I have discovered that it is the tendency of many companies not to make a reel longer than 900 feet, as when the are 1,000 feet they are frequently broken, and unless tightly rewound get jammed in the box. If the manager insists upon adhering strictly to his schedule of 105 minutes for a six reel picture and the six reels measure no more than 5,200 feet there is no question but that the audience, operator and musicians will certainly be in for a very trying time. I believe that this point has never been dealt with before and I certainly recommend that go-ahead managers consider it.

This correspondent apologizes for his "long-windedness." No one who raises such interesting questions can be accused of this, therefore apology is entirely unnecessary. Similar statements of fact from other readers will be welcome in these columns.

Electric action throughout, with detached and movable console. Stop keys, Inclined manual keys, American Guild of Organists' concave and radiating pedal keys. Windchests of Great and Solo Organ extend one octave to complete the compass of the octave couplers affecting them.

The Great Organ is the chief manual of an organ and the pipes controlled by it. The Swell Organ is a set of pipes enclosed in a box with movable shutters which may be opened and closed with the Swell Pedal. The Solo Organ, as its name implies, is used for solo playing, often being coupled to certain combinations on the Great Organ. The Echo Organ is usually enclosed in a sound-proof expression chamber in the roof, or at the opposite end of the theater.

The Pedal Organ is used for foundation stops and the skilled organist can do exceptionally fine work with his feet and the Pedal Organ, while the beginner must at first be willing to use this organ occasionally until absolutely familiar and sure of his pedal technic. The over use of the Pedal Organ is a fault found with many organists. In certain scenes for motion pictures it is advisable to play certain melodies on the Swell, Solo or Great organs, without any pedals. Many organists make a mistake in using the pedals constantly. Each organ is controlled by a certain number of stops, of which they are two kinds—speaking stops and non-speaking stops. The latter are known as couplers, the purpose of them being to couple the combinations from one organ to the other, i. e., Swell Organ to Great, Solo to Great Organ, etc.

The most frequent coupler used is that attaching the Swell to Great. By this coupler you connect the effects of the drawn stops on the Swell Organ with that of the Great Organ. The pedal couplers Swell to Pedal and Great to Pedal are also used almost constantly.

It is important that the beginner knows and understands the quality of each speaking stop. Those who are familiar with Symphony orchestra music know the effects of the various instruments. In an organ we have to a certain extent many of the combinations employed in an orchestra, namely: the wood section, the string section and the brass section. The wood section of an organ comprises of the following stops: Flute, Clarinet, Stopped Diapason, Piccolo, Oboe and Bassoon. The string section: Salicional, Gamba, Buiciana, Violon. The brass section: Horn, Trumpet, Tuba and Tromba. Time should be spent in learning the effects of various combinations in separate manuals. For example: The Flute and Stopped Diapason coupled to the Great with Gamba and Clarinet.

These little experiments will enable the beginner to gain various effects that will be helpful later when a variety of combinations are needed.

Amongst other mechanical devices are composition pedals and pistons. Their function is to throw in and out whole sets of stops. The use of composition pistons in playing for moving pictures is necessary at all times. The organist can change his combinations in an instant, instead of wasting time drawing stops, as was the practice on old style organs.

Other mechanical devices which are important for the beginner to know are the swell pedal and the crescendo pedal. In playing for moving pictures, much expression and shading is necessary and this is accomplished by means of the Swell Pedal. It is important to use this pedal carefully, as many organists develop a habit of throwing it on and off at random without any thought or regard to expression marks or a crescendo or a diminuendo. The crescendo pedal is important in the fact that it throws on the full organ in an instant without changing stops. As the beginner may realize, this is a great advantage where sudden changes of scene make it necessary to get a loud or soft effect.

Many of the late organs are equipped with tabs instead of stops. On large organs they are arranged the same as a keyboard. Combinations can then be memorized and fingered the same as melodies on the keyboard.

17 Madison Ave., N. Y. City

Motion Pictures for Children

By Betty Shannon

Country Wide Movement by Prominent Women —What Has Been Accomplished and What is Being Attempted

THERE is hardly a town in the country large enough to boast a women's club or a live-wire exhibitor which has not experimented with children's programs. The scarcity of film, which is at the same time thrilling and considered suitable by particular people for young minds, the lack of interest on the part of parents, or of co-operation on the part of exhibitors, or often the presentation of programs of pictures which are too educational to attract and hold children who have grown accustomed to the usual theater program, have been accountable for failure in many places. But the success in other cities and towns has proved undeniably that the movement to create a separate film literature for children is past its experimental stages.

Mrs. Cartwright.

The appointment of a special committee on motion pictures composed of Mrs. Charles W. Cartwright, of Minneapolis, Minn., Miss Helen Varick Boswell, of New York City, Mrs. George Zimmerman, of Fremont, Ohio, Miss Louise Connolly, of Newark, N. J., and Mrs. Dexter Thurber, of Bristol, R. I., by the General Federation of Women's Clubs at its recent biennial in New York City presages great activity and co-operation from the women of the country during the next two years. Since the meeting of the women's organization another committee of national scope has been organized with the purpose of aiding the children's film movement. This is the National Committee on Programs for Young People, and has been organized by the National Board of Review. On it are Mrs. Howard S. Gans, Mrs. Joseph Price, Miss Helen Varick Boswell, Miss Louise Connolly, Miss Helen Duey, W. Stephen Bush, Lee F. Hamner, Raymond P. Kaighn, Clarence A. Perry, Lester F. Scott and Dr. Cranston Brenton.

It is the consensus of opinion of the people who have experimented with children's programs that the greatest problem which stands in the way of success is the difficulty in getting suitable films.

It is to eliminate this difficulty as largely as possible, that Samuel F. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto theater in New York City, Mrs. Bess Dessez and Mrs. Mary Mason Speed will launch a new project at a mass meeting at the Rialto theater next October. Mr. Rothapfel has secured an appropriation of $25,000 to stand the expense of gathering together twelve programs of children's films, which will be handled by Mrs. Speed and Mrs. Dessez, and will be sent to any part of the country at moderate cost. The two women have successfully conducted children's programs in a number of New York and Brooklyn theaters including the Morningside, the Palace, the Seventy-second Street Play House, and the Sumner theater in Brooklyn, and the choosing of the subjects will be left to them. If the demand for these programs proves to the donor of the $25,000 that the agitation for juvenile pictures warrants it, he will then furnish backing for the collection and maintenance of twelve additional programs.

"In looking about at the failures which had been made in the handling of the much desired children's program," said Mrs. Dessez, "we decided that two mistakes were responsible for the most of them. The programs were being made too educational and were not being given proper publicity. We started on a platform of advertising and entertainment. We will extend aid and information along with the programs which we send out, and may it be said, entertainment will be their prime ingredient."

Mrs. Speed and Mrs. Dessez will continue their programs in the theaters where they have started in the fall, and will extend their work to other houses in Greater New York.

Brooklyn is coming to the front, too, in an attempt to solve the difficulty of obtaining films. Under the direction of Mrs. Cromwell Childe and Mrs. Charles J. McDermott, and a committee of over seventy-five of the city's leading citizens, a movement to secure backing for the production of one juvenile picture a week to be used by them and distributed over the country is steadily growing.

On the thirteenth of last May the first program for children under the patronage of this committee was put on at the Triangle theater, of which William H. Kemble is the manager. An orchestra from the Manual Training High School played, there were children ushers, and a committee of boys voted upon the merits of the pictures after they had been shown. In this way the children were made to feel that they were an important part of the new movement. Unaccompanied children were allowed admission only on the presentation of slips of permission signed by their parents. Other performances followed this, but were discontinued at the close of school, until the fall. During these summer months Mrs. Childe and Mrs. McDermott and Mr. Kemble are laying plans for a big campaign.

"We all know each other in Brooklyn," says Mrs. Childe who feels confident that the necessary money which will permit Mr. Kemble to produce, as well as present juvenile films, will be forthcoming in the fall. "Such an undertaking is not at all beyond us."

Mary Dillon.

One of the most strikingly successful experiments has been conducted in Minnesota. Miss Mary A. Dillon, of St. Paul, and Mrs. Adele MacClaren Liggett, of Duluth, have helped the Minnesota Federation of Women's Clubs raise $10,000 for its endowment fund; at the same time they have done more than any other agency in the state to popularize and establish programs for children.

Two years ago J. Reisman, manager of the Dale theater in St. Paul, a high-class house in the best section of the city, offered his co-operation to the two young women and the women's clubs in the establishing of children's Saturday morning matinees. Mrs. Liggett, a professional story teller, planned to tell stories of the films as they were being shown, and Miss Dillon, a newspaper woman, took charge of the managerial and publicity ends of the experiment.

The first program opened to a house of 1,100 children, the success making it easy to obtain theaters in other parts of the city. Afterwards the Park, the De Luxe, the Hamline, the Forrest, the Venus and the Cosy theaters opened their doors to the combination story-picture hour, and the affairs held at least every two weeks in the neighborhood theaters, tended to keep the children in their own districts.

The mothers and the clubs co-operated more than willingly. The churches and schools made announcement of the programs, and the librarians put books containing the stories to be shown in picture form at the matinees on a special shelf in the juvenile rooms of the public libraries along with an announcement of the time and place of their appearance. During the Lenten season the programs featured Bible stories, Boy Scout, Campfire Girl and similar pictures. Mr. Reisman gave his Dale theater for Friday afternoon story hours after school without pictures.

Last spring Miss Dillon and Mrs. Liggett were called to Minneapolis, co-operating there with the women's clubs at special programs at the Schubert, Lyric, Strand and Garric theaters, all down town houses, at the Calhoun and Lake Harriet suburban theaters.

While on a Western tour in May and June, they started children's matinees and story hours in the Moore theater, managed by George T. Hodd, in Seattle; the Auditorium, managed by CharlesW. York, of Spokane; the Heilig theater, managed by Charles T. Pangle at Portland, Wash.; and the Yakima theater, managed by Miss Eirene Kolb, in Yakima, Wash. All of these theaters will continue the work they began in the fall.

Mrs. Adele McLaren-Liggett.

The Washington Federation of Women's Clubs will undertake the plan of these two young Minnesota women to raise its endowment fund next winter.

Mrs. Liggett spent the early winter last year in Chicago, where she told stories at children's matinees at the Strand theater.

"The many letters of inquiry we receive from clubs and theater managers from other cities who have heard of the success of these matinees," said Miss Dillon, "indicates to us the seriousness with which people are coming to view the movement. Criticism is of no use unless it does something besides condemn. Children will go to see pictures. The picture theater managers give the public what the public will pay for. They are only too glad to book children's pictures if the mothers prove they want them by sending their children to see them. Managers do not want children in their theaters at night.

"In our combination of story and picture we found a great dearth of one and two-reel pictures, a lack of scenic, bird, flower and animal pictures which so attractively supplement school work, and of the picturization of books such as "Silas Marner," "Ivanhoe" and "King Robert of Sicily."

Miss Dillon and Mrs. Liggett will continue their matinees in the Twin Cities in the fall.

Grand Rapids, Mich., has Miss Mary Newell Eaton, of the Drama League of that city, to thank for children's matinees, which have continued successful through two seasons.

In the spring of 1915 Miss Eaton and other members of the Drama League interested A. J. Gilligham and Charles Seamon, owner and manager of the Columbia theater, to open their house for Saturday morning performances. The School Board, the clubs, the business men co-operated to make them known. The matinees were most successful, one of the means of keeping interest up to a high pitch being the contests at which prizes of three dollars were given to children between ten and fifteen and to children below ten for the best letters on the subject, "The Picture I Liked Best and Why."

During the last winter and spring season, the owner of the Columbia theater turned over his new house, the Majestic Gardens, for children's matinees. They will be continued again after the summer months.

Providence, R. I., has proven a very successful home of children's movies, and Olneyville, Washington Park, Woonsocket, Bristol, Peacedale, Newport and other towns are following the lead of the capitol city with varying degrees of success.

The Mother's Congress of Rhode Island, which, it will be remembered by those who followed the fight for state censorship in that state, was largely responsible for the defeat of that measure last winter, in 1915 appointed a children's theater committee, headed by Mrs. Dexter Thurber, of Bristol. Last summer was spent in investigation. In the fall Mrs. Dwight K. Bartlett and Prof. Stephen S. Colvin of Brown University joined Mrs. Thurber on an executive committee, and on November 6, 1915, the first children's matinee was held at the Strand theater. From the start the committee was most particular to have everything high class. The regular ushers in the uniform of the house were present as well as college girls in caps and gowns and matrons from the various clubs, and the children were given every care and courtesy. For publicity the committee depended largely on leaflets and publicity matter which they themselves distributed. On all of their literature they used the picture of a child playing on pipes, which attracted unusual attention from all the various classes represented in their audiences.

The attendance at these performances ranged from 1,000 to 2,500 children. The proceeds of one performance every month was turned over by the theater management to the child work of the Mother's Congress and to the Baby Campaign of Providence.

"From the first we have tried to make children's performances 'the thing,'" says Mrs. Thurber, "and for that reason we have been most careful to keep everything strictly first class. We found that every child responded to the environment—even the children who had been accustomed to attending the cheapest and most luridly advertised theaters were quiet and orderly even in their applause. It is the object of the people who are most active in the movement for children's programs in Providence to educate children up to proper behavior in public places as well as to appreciate real artistic films. We have always guarded against making our programs too educational. The success of them has proven that the children were getting what they liked."

Cleveland, Ohio, is not confining its special programs to children. Realizing that no amount of children's morning and afternoon matinees can keep children away from evening performances if their parents do not mind their going, a committee representing the various educational, social, club, church and business activities of the city stand sponsor for weekly "family programs." These programs contain pictures suitable to all years—to the entire family. Last spring a number of theater managers consented to try these programs out, each one promising to run them for eight weeks even at the risk of losing money.

The first performances were not so well attended as the last. The committee back of the movement is broad minded in its choice of pictures, only those giving over emphasis to bad maners or bad morals being excluded. According to Miss Genevieve Cline, who is especially active in the movement, the "family program" next year will be more directly sponsored by groups of women living in the immediate neighborhoods of the theaters showing them. Each group of women will be responsible for the sale of five hundred tickets at ten cents apiece for each performance. In this way the expense of the program will be guaranteed.

Boston and its vicinity is finding Mrs. Edith Dunham Foster, of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, particularly helpful in the obtaining of satisfactory programs. Mrs. Foster has been a writer, an editor, a social worker for years, and she has turned her store of experience in dealing with individuals and her knowledge of their likes and dislikes to her aid as film editor for the Community Service. Mrs. Foster carefully selects pictures which she knows will satisfy the demand of the types of audiences she is supplying with programs. For the sophisticated children, and for a performance offered to rival the lurid and sensational drama of the poorer houses, she picks out thrillers of the western pioneer and Indian type, baseball, comedy and anything that contains clean, legitimate action. For the children who have not become movie fans she arranges programs of fairy tales, animal and nature studies, scenics and lighter dramas and comedies.

Mrs. Edith Dunham Foster.

Her services as an editor are coming in demand the country over.

The United Film Service of Louisiana, through its Memphis office, is doing much to co-operate with attempts to establish children's programs in the south. The Comus theater at Tupelo, Miss.; the Majestic theater of Grenada, Miss.; the Dixey theater at Ripley, Tenn.; Princess theater, Mayfield, Ky.; the Busby theater, McAlester, Okla.; Pastime theater, Carlton Hill, La., and the Dixie theater, Paris, Tenn., are among the houses in which the United has helped establish regular children's programs.

Mrs. S. P. Woodard, of New York City, is aiding the general movement for better pictures for children through the Juvenile Motion Picture Board, of which she is president. This organization is an outgrowth of the Parents' and Teachers' Association of the Horace Mann School in New York City, and is combining with similar societies over the country to hasten the day of the children's program throughout the country. Mrs. Woodard and a small committee see the output of every film company, and compile lists of children's films, as the National Board of Review does, which they send out at request.

Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of the National Board of Review, states that there are two hundred theaters where children's programs have been successfully established, and that the growing demand from small towns which are at great distance from distributing centers as well as from the larger cities will eventually result in the establishment and the maintenance of a separate juvenile department of the motion picture output.

"There are many juvenile pictures in existence as it is," says Mr. Cocks. "The National Board of Review will send lists of suitable film for either family or children's programs on request, and will also send advice and instruction as to the organization of local movements and the stimulating of local interest in pictures."

"The greatest significance to picture producers of the juvenile program movement is in the fact that satisfactory programs for children in abundance means the doing away of the agitation for censorship, which finds its basis in the fact that children are seeing pictures which were produced for adults."

A Picture for the Kiddies Made by the Regent Photoplay Company.

FIVE hundred Cleveland children are telling for the moving picture screen the perennially delightful fairy tale of "Snow White." This is by far the largest and most accomplished all-child cast that has ever been gathered together for any moving picture film.

The production is being made under the personal direction of Charles H. Weston, assisted by Miss Elenor T. Flinn and Mrs. Norma Harrison Thrower. Mr. Weston is known as one of the most accomplished directors in this country. Several years ago he was associated with Thomas H. Ince and quite recently he returned from England where he had conducted for a number of years the largest motion picture studio in London.

Some weeks ago Mr. Weston donated his services to the Scene from "Snow White."

Babies' Dispensary of Cleveland to produce the film, "Better Babies," for the purpose of promoting knowledge of the work of the dispensary.

The scenario of "Snow-White" has been so arranged as to introduce many special dances and bits of pantomime for which the child actors have been training under the direction of Miss Flinn and Mrs. Thrower for the past three months.

The play is being staged with due regard for all the "faerie" traditions, and is developing into the most winsome and whimsical film ever made of children for the grown-ups to admire and other children to wonder over.

The Regent Photo Play Company, which is making the picture, is composed of Cleveland men, who are assisted by the experience and talent of Miss Flinn and Mrs. Thrower.

British Notes

THE following Government notice, just issued, is of particular moment to exporters: "Films and lantern slides hired for the purposes of display, provided that the importer satisfies the Controller of Customs that such films and slides will be re-exported within three months of importation, may be imported into the Nyasaland Protectorate (E. Africa) free of import duty. Films and slides so imported will be exempt from the road and river duties ordinarily chargeable upon imports. The duration provision of three months can only be extended by special permission of the Governor of the Protectorate.

READING'S NEW THEATER.

Carr & Schad, of Reading, Pa., now own five theaters. Two years ago they were running two theaters, and took over the Paramount franchise in that community, putting the pictures into the Princess theater. Within three months they will open their fifth theater, on which they are spending nearly a half million dollars and which will run exclusively Paramount Pictures, Paramount Pictographs, Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, and Paramount-Bray Cartoons.

Drama versus Fiction

By Epes Winthrop Sargent

Harry Chandlee Discusses the Inability of Directors to Sense the Narrative Value of Action in Producing Photoplays from Real Script

MERELY because a motion picture is something that must be seen instead of read, it does not necessarily follow that the motion picture can make only the visual appeal and therefore must conform to the traditions and the technique of the stage. To the contrary, indeed, it almost invariably follows that an adherence to the drama technique is fatal to the photoplay in the precise degree in which the drama predominates over story. And yet both producers and makers of film seem to be wedded to the theory that the photoplay is but an irregular form of drama and are unwilling to dignify their art by admitting it to be a form of its own.

In a recent letter Harry Chandlee, for some time with the Lubin Company as staff writer and more lately a free lance author, places his finger on the evil when he says:

A director, I have found, is usually prone to see the dramatic value of a single scene, failing to appreciate the fact that this value can be materially increased or decreased by the method of leading up to that scene. It is indisputable that there is always one best way of doing anything, and in my poor way I have always tried to dope out what was to me the best way of developing a given piece of action, even down to the smallest detail.

And in the next paragraph he seeks to make excuse by adding:

It is the subtleties of construction which many directors miss. They are not to be blamed for missing them since they are supposed to be experts in dramatics and not experts in the various mechanical expedients of literature which may be employed in picture construction.

This is no excuse whatever. If a person announces himself as a producer of photoplays he should be qualified to produce photoplays and not rest content with turning them into dramas. If he does not know what a photoplay is he should not assume to produce them, and yet few, if any, of the producers know the real technique of their business. They look at each scene, as a scene, purely for the matter of the moment. They do not realize, as Professor Munsterberg has pointed out, that in photoplay the ability to call up emotions at will, through contrasting scenes, is one of the most valuable if not the most valuable aid of the art. The scene must be dramatic because John Jones hits Tim Smith with a club or shoots him with a gun. It must have the visual punch. He does not realize the psychological effect of a scene showing contrast cut into that dramatic moment. He does not know, often, even when he does use a vision or a cut back. He is merely bluffing his way through a business of which he knows little indeed, and yet, perhaps, more than his employer does. Mr. Chandlee continues with a definite instance when he writes:

At least three directors with whom I have talked have shown an absolute lack of knowledge of even so elementary a principle of literature as the creation of suspense through the retard element. This is one of the basic rules of writing which is fully applicable to picture construction.

For instance, in a story I adapted—"Her Martyrdom"—there is a big fight at the climax between the husband and a former lover of the wife who has entered the house in the guise of a burglar. Of course, the situation of this fight is a double one, since the interest comes not only from the question of whether or not the husband will win, but also from the chance that he will recognize the burglar, and the possible consequences to the wife if he does. Now, in working the action, I placed the wife at the head of the stairs where she could look over the rail and see the fight going on in the large hall below. I repeatedly broke the fight with flashes back to the wife showing her anxiety for her husband's safety and her terror at the thought that her lover will be recognized. To further increase the suspense I flashed to the servants' quarters showing the butler awakened by the noise; and I also flashed to the garage to show the chauffeur asleep, too far away to hear the commotion in the house. When the picture was made, there was only one flash to the wife, and the chauffeur and butler were entirely cut out. When I attempted to explain the proposition to the director, it was all Greek to him. He contended that it would be bad to break the fight any more than necessary since it was tense action, and should not be broken by going to the butler and chauffeur since the audience would not be interested in these two characters, but would be interested in the fight only. I was never able to convince him that the very purpose of these scenes was to put before the audience something in which they were not interested so as to increase the suspense and interest by giving them the strongest kind of desire to get back to the fight again to see how it would come out.

And this, mind you, in spite of a disposition on the part of many directors to cut all over the universe at the wrong times. Indeed, one company adopted as its producing policy a standard of one hundred scenes to the reel. It did not consider the story as a story. It did not realize that some pictures would be better in twenty or thirty scenes. Each play it produced must have at least one hundred scenes to each thousand feet, no matter what the nature of the story. They did things without knowing why they did them and therefore did them inartistically and without good effect.

One other thing Mr. Chandlee touches upon when he remarks:

Another thing that I have never been able to understand is why the average producer thinks it necessary to change entirely the subtitles which are written by the author.

The effect of pictures on an audience is largely psychological and a good psychological effect produced by the picture itself may be destroyed absolutely by a subtitle. For example, take a story which I adapted for Equitable called "The Bludgeon." In this play, there is a big dramatic situation brought about as follows: The wife is greatly in debt. The heavy learns of this and offers to help her if she will yield to him. But she cannot bring herself to do so. Hard pressed, however, she contemplates yielding and in her first embrace with the heavy her husband enters the room. He blames his wife for what he thinks is an intrigue with the heavy. He is about to shoot her, raising his pistol slowly with tense dramatic effect as worked up in the scene, when his little daughter runs into the room with some flowers in her hands. She holds these up to her mother and the woman, seeing a chance to save herself, catches the child up to her breast between herself and the pistol.

Now, this is a wonderful scene, full of interest, action and suspense. The wife has been using the child in earlier scenes for the purpose of getting money from her husband, pretending that the expenditure must be made for the child's welfare; and the little girl has thus come to be a bludgeon which the wife uses over the head of the father. As I worked the story the father, when he sees the child in its mother's arms loses his determination to kill the woman, drops the pistol and sinks into a chair, while the wife, in spite of her recent danger shows the triumph which she feels at again having used the child to overcome her husband.

The way the story was actually made and released, however, the psychological effect of the scene was absolutely wrecked by an outrageous subtitle inserted in the midst of it. In the picture, the scene runs directly as I have outlined it above up to the time that the mother catches the child in her arms. But at this climax of the scene, when interest is at the tensest, the picture is broken by the subtitle, "Her Bludgeon Becomes Her Shield."

The use of this subtitle at this point is three ways wrong. In the first place it breaks the tense interest of the scene without retarding it; in the second place its wording does not fit the action, and in the third place it discloses the outcome of the situation. If a subtitle were absolutely necessary at this point to cover some fault in the picture, then it should have been worded differently. For instance, if it had simply read: "Again the Bludgeon!", it would have been in keeping with the tempo of the scenes and the method of its expression would have cured some of its faults. It would not have foretold the outcome of the situation since nothing is said about the "shield," and, being short and "explosive" in form it would not have caused the break in the mental processes of the audience. The subtitle which was used, however, was completely predicated thought—it was a complete sentence in itself, and, as such, it necessitated an entire readjustment in the minds of the audience to shift them from visualized action to a condition to circumstance expressed in words.

Here Mr. Chandlee seems to use "producer" in a more general sense than the more limited term of "director" would permit, for he knows that the cutting room is the most deadly with the titles. He had left Lubin's before Barry O'Neil quit after he saw what had been done to one of his features in the cutting room, but he knew the room was there, as it is in most studios. Some individual with an ivory brain probably opined that the audiences would not see the situation and called their attention to it. Many cutting editors act on the theory that photoplay patrons are complete asses, and cut their film accordingly. They pay no attention to the technique of either stage or photoplay, but merely cut and hack and substitute on the general argument that no sane person ever goes to the photoplay theatres, which is why fewer and fewer sane persons do.

The photoplay is a distinct literary form. It is not drama, it is not opera, or pantomime or musical comedy. It is not fiction. It is photoplay. Its construction should be left to photoplay writers and their work, if they understand their work as they should, must be left untouched in its major points if the result is to be a play and not another deadly blow at the present prosperity of a once far more prosperous business.

CINCINNATI WAGE SCALE SETTLED.

An agreement has been reached in Cincinnati between the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Chamber of Commerce and the wage schedule committee of the Moving Picture and Projecting Machine Operators' Union, covering the schedule of wages for the next three years. It is understood that concessions were made by both sides which enabled more efficient work on their part for the exhibitors. A joint committee is provided for by the agreement, which will take care of the wage schedule on the expiration of the current agreement. The agreement has already been ratified by the league, and it is expected that similar action will be taken by the union.

Donaldson Leaves Screen for Stage

Wizard of Make-Up, After Successful Sojourn in Filmdom, Will Join Japanese Opera.

FILMDOM is about to lose, temporarily at least, one of its most finished and versatile actors. Arthur Donaldson, who has become known during his several years in motion pictures as "the wizard of make-up," will return to his first love, the speaking and singing stage. He has been engaged by the Eta Producing Company for Mary Lee Wertheimer's Japanese romantic comic opera, "Noto," and will employ his great baritone voice and his admitted histrionic power in the important role of Prince Mito, when that much-heralded offering opens on September 14.

Arthur Donaldson.

Donaldson was the original "Yon Yonson" and endeared himself to American playgoers from one end of the country to the other in the sympathetic character of the simple Swede. Mr. Donaldson is a Swede himself and, despite his great natural talent and wide experience is as simple and lovable a character as the celebrated Yon. He was also the original "Prince of Pilsen." He has played a great variety of roles in every country in the civilized world. Coming to this country in 1890, his fine voice and appearance gained for him an engagement with the Duff Opera Company and later with Emma Thursby in concert tours, under the direction of Major Pond. He sang the title role in "Rob Roy" and then starred as Baron de Grimm in "Madelin, or the Magic Kiss."

After a successful engagement with the Tivoli Opera Company in San Francisco he played three years under the management of Augustin Daly, starring in "Yon Yonson" after Mr. Daly's death. He played leads with Lulu Glaser before his very successful engagement with "The Prince of Pilsen," appearing in this role for four seasons in 1,345 consecutive performances. Returning to his native land he played all the baritone leads in the Oscar theater in Stockholm, his last part there being in "The Great Genius."

On his return to this country the silent drama was in the ascendent and Mr. Donaldson became a screen star of prominence, his unusual art of characterization standing him in good stead. Among the companies for whom he played are the Kalem, Reliance, Fox, Ivan and Mutual and some of his best-known photoplays are "Runaway June," "Should a Baby Die?" "Her American Prince," "A Woman's Honor," "Hearts of Men," "The Salamander," "For Sale, a Baby" and "The Land of the Lost." Mr. Donaldson is not only an actor, a photoplayer and a singer, but an author, a painter of some note in Sweden and a stage director and producer.

STEINER TO TAKE A VACATION.

William Steiner, the well-known motion picture producer, who supervised the sixteen episodes of "The Yellow Menace," has for the first time in twenty years been forced to take a vacation. The M. D. told Bill to take a month in the Adirondacks. So Bill jumped in his motor car with Mrs. Steiner as chauffeur, and told her to keep on going until the gas ran out, then to contribute to John D. for more of the fluid anywhere the car called for it. Never mind where the route lay so long as the going was good.

THEATER SCREENS EXPLOSION THAT HIT IT.

The devastating explosion that recently rocked New York City and the surrounding country smashed the fine stained glass front of the Cumberland theater in Brooklyn. The smash came in the early hours of a Sunday. At 2:30 on Monday Manager F. A. Mangan was showing to the Cumberland patrons pictures of the big fire that had resulted in so much damage to their playhouse.

Vitagraphs on General Film

Comedy from the Bay Shore Studio and a Novelty from the Western Contingent for the Week of August 21.

DURING the week of August 21 Vitagraph will release two one-part photoplays on the General Film Program. A comedy from the Bay Shore studio called "Did He or Did He Not?" and a decorative playlet from the Coast Division entitled "The Yellow Girl," are the pictures listed.

In "Did He or Did He Not?" William Lytell, Jr., plays the part of Adam Bluffer, an office clerk, with whom work is as agreeable as a visit from a bill collector. He pretends to be prostrated by the heat and is sent home for a few days. A chance for a vacation—and two dollars is all that separates him from poverty. Seeing an announcement that some farmers in Pumpkinsville have some farms to sell he writes the board of trade he will pay them a visit. Arriving at the farm, he is treated like a prince and given the best in the land. Just about this time, his boss who happens to be motoring through the town, sees him and tells the truth. Adam does a marathon back to the city. Besides Mr. Lytell, Director Frank Currier employed the services of Shirley Scene from "The Yellow Girl" (Vitagraph).

Moore, Dorothy Lang, Florence Natol and Ralph Whiting in the production of the picture.

"The Yellow Girl" was designed and produced by Edgar Keller with a cast of Western Vitagraphers that includes Webster Campbell, Carmen Phillips, Corrine Griffith, Forence Vidor and Alva D. Blake. So far as we know, it is an entirely new idea, for it is the first of its kind we have ever seen. It might be termed a study in black and white with a tendency toward the futuristic. Mr. Keller, who is an artist of repute, not only supervised and assisted in the painting of the scenery used, but also designed the costumes worn in the piece. A clever little story that has to do with the love affairs of an artist, a popular song writer and two models is interwoven and holds the interest throughout.

IVY CLOSE'S BROTHER WAR VICTIM.

A shadow of sadness was thrown over the Kalem studio at Jacksonville last week when word was received by Ivy Close of the death of her brother, Raymond Close, in the great July drive of the British forces in Flanders. Miss Close was considerably shaken up by the news and it was found necessary to suspend studio activity for a few days.

Two brothers of Miss Close were in the trenches with the British, an elder brother, who was, according to last advices, reported safe, and Raymond, a younger brother, who has met a hero's death. "He was only nineteen," says Miss Close, "but he stood over six feet. Yet he was just my younger brother, with his blue eyes and sunny smile. I worshiped him."

Additional anxiety has been given Miss Close by the news from England that her husband, Elwin Neame, who has been "doing his bit" with the home guards, may be called to the front at any minute. Mr. Neame, who is a prominent London photographer of society and royalty, was among those who "declared" themselves under Lord Derby's scheme as ready to go to the front whenever called. For many months now he has been at work in a training camp in preparation for the call.

Gaumont for Week of August 27

Three Single-Reels Will Be Released Through Mutual—Boy Scout Life Featured.

NO PHOTODRAMA will be released from the Gaumont studios the week of August 27, since "The Mystery of the Riviera" will be shown August 24, and the "Fantomas" series does not begin until September 7. However, there will be three Gaumont single-reels which will see the screen this week as Mutual Pictures. The first to be released will be "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film, with an entertaining series of views of boy scout life. This is called "The Oath of a Boy Scout." Since this organization is unusually strong in all parts of America, its appeal and interest are nation-wide. Another division of this reel shows various animals and reptiles which are becoming familiar to our soldiers quartered on the Mexican border. There is also a Gaumont tabloid photodrama from an episode taken from "Life," the national humorous magazine. It features Miss Iva Shepard and John Hopkins in one of the "What Would You Do If—" series. This one asks the question, "What would you do if you had prepared for a dozen dinner guests, and then discovered that you had not sent out invitations?"

"See America First" for August 30 will take spectators "North of Boston." The previous week were views of quaint Cape Cod, and now the Gaumont cameraman has visited interesting spots along the coast north of the Hub. There are pictures of Lynn, Salem, Gloucester and many other places. On the same reel is one of Harry Palmer's ludicrous Gaumont Cartoon Comics.

The third reel of the week is the Mutual Weekly, the news reel that recently scooped all others by being the first to show pictures of the great New York explosion. The picture was held a second week at the Rialto, New York City, "by special request."

Lorraine Frost, New Metro Ingenue

A NEW and valuable member of the Metro aggregation of photoplayers is Lorraine Frost, an ingenue who is in the Metro-Rolfe production, "God's Half Acre," starring Mabel Taliaferro, and also in the Metro-Columbia five-act drama, as yet unnamed, starring Viola Dana. In both productions Miss Frost's part is only second in importance to that of the star.

Lorraine Frost.

Miss Frost's first dramatic experience was with Edith Taliaferro in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." Her part was Emma Jane, but she played Rebecca when Miss Taliaferro was ill. More recently she has been seen with Rose Stahl in "Moonlight Mary," with Arnold Daly in "The Angel in the House," and with William H. Crane in "The Senator Keeps House."

With Robert Mantell she played several Shakespearian parts, including Cordelia, Ophelia, Jessica and the Pricess in the Tower—not playing both Princes at the same time, however. Andrew Mack's "Bold Soldier Boy," Charles Hawtrey's "Message from Mars," and "The Little Princess," about complete the list of this young girl's achievements up to date. She has appeared in a few motion pictures for Selig.

BOSTON FILM BUYERS.

Harry G. Segal, secretary and general manager of the Globe Film Corporation, and Robert W. Cobe, his assistant, were in New York last week reviewing films for New England territory. The Globe Film Corporation is a newly organized company and will exploit the best productions obtainable, exclusively in the New England States. The offices of the Globe Film Corporation are located at 16 Piedmont street, Boston, Mass. Announcements of their release dates will be made in the near future.

At Leading Picture Theatres

Programs for the Week of Aug. 13 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Stronger Love," at the Strand.

VIVIAN MARTIN in an Oliver Morosco production, "The Stronger Love," made her first appearance at the Strand. The action of the drama takes place in the mountains of Kentucky where live the feud clans, and permits of many outdoor scenes. The story is of a little girl who grows up in a mountain clan, sharing the life and the views of her people. A young man from the city brings to the girl tales of the wonderful land beyond the pine ridge. She is pledged to one of her clan, and has to decide between her two admirers.

Supplementary features for the week included the Strand Topical Review, the Strand Travelogue, a cartoon comedy and a short comedy. Arthur Aldridge, M'lle Valentine and Bruce Weyman were the soloists.

"The Patriot" at the Rialto.

Wm. S. Hart in "The Patriot" was the star feature of the Rialto program. The story of the photoplay, by Monte M. Katterjohn, deals with the Mexican crisis and affords Mr. Hart a role particularly well adapted to his personality. An ex-soldier, he migrates to the frontier and meets with such cruel and dishonest treatment at the hands of government territorial officials that his spirit rebels. Burning with anger he joins the Mexican horde across the border and arranges a raid on an American outpost. When he realizes the enormity of his offenses he makes every sacrifice to undo the wrong, and leads in the fight to save the women and children jeopardized by his disloyalty.

The fourth installment of Dr. Leonard S. Snydin's Alaska pictures, topical and educational features, and a Keystone comedy were included in this bill. Yascha Jacobson, Mme. Jeanne Maubarry and James F. Price were the soloists.

Marguerite Clark at the Broadway.

Marguerite Clark was seen in the latest Famous Players-Paramount picture, "Little Lady Eileen," a fanciful photoplay, at the Broadway theater.

The scenes of this quaint screen drama are laid on the Emerald Isle, where Miss Clark has an opportunity to introduce a typical little Irish lassie who is an unperverted believer in fairies. The romantic atmosphere of old Ireland and the delightful subject have been utilized by both star and director to the full. The Broadway Weekly, educational films and one reel comedy completed the program.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four Triangle pictures were shown. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Norma Talmadge in "The Devil's Needle," and on Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, H. B. Warner, in "Shell 43," were the features. A Keystone comedy was on both programs.

COBE VISITS SOUTHERN EXCHANGES.

In keeping with the Unity Sales Corporation's determination to give every assistance possible to the exchanges and exhibitors who book their features, Andrew J. Cobe, the Unity's vice-president, left this week for an extended tour of the South and Southwest. While away, Mr. Cobe will stop in Atlanta, Jacksonville, Mobile, New Orleans and the larger Texas cities. The successful distribution of "The Yellow Menace," through independent exchanges, has indicated the Unity Sales Corporation's judgment that a big picture of this kind could be handled profitably in this way. The release of the "Yellow Menace" is set for Labor Day, and Mr. Cobe's present trip to the South is but one of the many ways devised to help the exchangeman put the "Yellow Menace" before the exhibitors in the most attractive form.

NANCE O'NEIL ENGAGED BY METRO.

Metro Pictures Corporation has engaged the eminent dramatic artist, Miss Nance O'Neil, to appear in a five-act screen production. The play chosen in which to present Miss O'Neil as a motion picture star is a picturization of Margaret Deland's novel, "The Iron Woman." Mrs. Deland also wrote "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie," in which another Metro star, Miss Ethel Barrymore, will be seen shortly. Alfred Hickman has made the screen version of "The Iron Woman."

The leading character is a woman of great mental strength, a feminine captain of industry, who tries to shut out from her life all gentler feelings and emotions. It affords Miss O'Neil great scope for her powers of delineation and dramatic portrayal. Miss O'Neil and her supporting company will begin work August 14.

Lew Fields and Marie Dressler in World Films

Famous Comedy Stars Secured for Brady-Mades—Will Appear in Pictures Specially Written for Them.

AN IMPORTANT announcement from the offices of the World Film Corporation is to the effect that Mr. Brady, acting for the company, has signed, to appear exclusively in features supervised by himself, two of stagedom's greatest celebrities, Marie Dressler, the famous "Tillie" of filmdom, and the inimitable Lew Fields.

In securing these two famous theatrical personages, the roster of World Film stars has been greatly fortified, strengthened and diversified. A change in policy of releases will also be inauguarated in the near future, inasmuch as the straight dramatical productions, which have marked World releases in the past, will be interspersed with serio-comic pictures, featuring Mr. Fields and high class five-part comedies suitable for the proper exploitation of Miss Dressler, which will be written expressly for her, and will be original, hilariously humorous comedy concoctions that will serve to bring this peerless comedienne before the public in vehicles best fitted to her talents and unusual physical propensities.

Lew Fields.

Those who recall "Tillie's Punctured Romance," the five-act comedy, which swept the country two years ago, can best appreciate the importance of Miss Dressler's connections with World Films, and this appreciation can be added to when it is realized that Mr. Brady contemplates a series of "Tillie" pictures, the first of which will be "Tillie's Night Out," from a scenario by Frances Marion. In all her World productions, Miss Dressler will be ably supported by a cast of exceptionally well-known comedy players, headed by John Hines.

Marie Dressler.

Lew Fields, barely less famous in his given field than David Warfield is in his, has already been quietly working at the Paragon studio for the past two weeks, alternating between the studio and the Astor theater, where he is appearing in "Step This Way." His first film contribution to the Brady-Made program will be in the star role of "The Man Who Stood Still," Louis Mann's great success, which was played on Broadway for several seasons, and is remarkably well fitted to Mr. Fields' well-known characteristics. It is being directed by Frank Crane, who staged "Old Dutch." Future productions, featuring Mr. Fields, will also be on the line of this play and will all be of a semi-serious nature. Possessing that rare trait of personality, which lends itself to humor and pathos, Mr. Fields' screen efforts will be entirely devoted to such characteristic impersonations and interpretation of characters as has served to make him famous on the stage.

As with the Dressler features, casts of well-known players are to be given Mr. Fields. Doris Kenyon, whose work in such World pictures as "The Pawn of Fate" and "The Feast of Life," has established her as of more than uncommon ability, will be seen regularly in support of Mr. Fields.

The acquisition of these two world famous stage stars is in line with Mr. Brady's policy of progression and he will personally supervise the production of all features in which both Miss Dressler and Mr. Fields will be seen, guaranteeing a flawless production in each case, and one in which neither time nor money will be spared to give performances worthy of the stars appearing in them.

Frances Marion, the World Film scenario editress, has already completed "Tillie's Night Out," which has been thoroughly edited to the satisfaction of Mr. Brady and Miss Dressler, and the noted comedienne is already making preparations for her first day at the World studios. Arrangements for new, unusual and picturesque locations are being made with the idea of backing these hilarious comedies of this star with beautiful scenery, while the studio mechanical department is installing trick instruments, devices of mechanical genius and unique features, as yet unattempted and unheard of in film making.

Announcement of releases, dates, plays and other important details concerning both the Dressler and Fields World Film productions will be made shortly by the World directors.

V-L-S-E Change in Managers

F. C. Burhans Succeeds E. O. Child as Pittsburgh V-L-S-E Branch Manager.

F. C. BURHANS, assistant branch manager of the Pittsburgh V-L-S-E office since May, 1915, was elevated last week to the managership of that office, succeeding E. O. Child, who had been in charge of the Pittsburgh office for more than a year. Mr. Child, like Mr. Bertelson, late manager of the Salt Lake City branch of the Big Four Company, has been relieved of his duties at his own request because of ill health.

Messrs. Burhans and Child started in the Pittsburgh branch at the same time and have always worked hand-in-hand. For this reason the appointment of the former to the head of the office will not affect a change in the methods of that office.

Exhibitors in the Pittsburgh territory are numbered almost to a man as friends of Mr. Burhans, he having put over some of the most unique advertising campaigns ever attempted in the Pittsburgh territory. Particularly effective was that staged by him on "The Battle Cry of Peace" in Altoona and later in other cities in the Pittsburgh district. Mr. Burhans is also the author of several expert sales talks.

NEW PUBLICITY STUNT.

Exhibitors in general will be interested to know of the novel publicity arrangement that was consummated by the Consolidated Film Corporation during the past week with the Willys-Overland Company. The Consolidated Company has purchased thirteen Overland Sixes, 1917, five passenger model, which they will give away in various parts of the United States in connection with the presentation of the sixteen-episode serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery," which the Erbograph Company is now at work producing.

Under reciprocal system arranged by S. G. Sladdin, director of publicity of the Consolidated Film Corporation, who was in Toledo the past week, the Overland Company, through its advertising and publicity department (which has a staff of 110 employees), has started its great system working on the more than five thousand dealers throughout the country, each of whom will become an active worker for publicity, with the exhibitor in his particular town or city who books "The Crimson Stain Mystery."

In addition to this, the publicity facilities in force at the Overland plant in Toledo will carry thousands of stories, photographs, cuts and mats, all of which will be co-operative with the publicity campaign that is being conducted by the Consolidated Film Corporation.

TOM MOORE OF WASHINGTON ON TOUR.

Tom Moore, president of Moore's Motion Picture Enterprises of Washington City, was a welcome caller at the office of the Moving Picture World the past week. Mr. Moore, accompanied by Mrs. Moore, and his brother and sister, is making a motor tour. His destination is Bretton Woods, in the White Mountains of New Hampshire, where he plans to spend his vacation. That the Capital City theater man does not intend to relax his grip on the pulse of his industry, even though away from the scene of his business activities, is evidenced by his request that the Moving Picture World be forwarded to his hotel in the hills.

Coming Metro Features

"The Pretenders" Starring Emmy Wehlen and "The Upheaval" Starring Lionel Barrymore.

"THE PRETENDERS," a five-part feature produced by the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., starring Emmy Wehlen, will be released on the Metro program Aug. 21. This feature will be followed by another five-part production, "The Upheaval," in which Lionel Barrymore is starred, and Marguerite Skirvin is featured. "The Upheaval" is also a Rolfe feature and will be released by Metro Aug. 28.

George D. Baker, who was with the Vitagraph directing forces for several years, makes his debut as a Metro director with "The Pretenders." Miss Wehlen is surrounded by a strong supporting cast which includes Paul Gordon, William Davidson, Edwin Holt, Charles Eldridge, Jerome Wilson, Ilean Hume, Hugh Jeffrey and Harry Neville. The story of "The Pretenders" was written by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, two well-known playwrights on Broadway. It deals with a western family that becomes newly rich through the finding of oil on their farm land. They come east to get into society, and many complex situations arise of the mother's ambition to marry off her daughter to an English Earl. The action of the story is laid in a small western city, then in and around New York, and in the Catskill Mountains. Charles Hunt is assisting Mr. Baker in his Metro productions.

"The Upheaval" is a picturization of a short story by Lawrence McCloskey, and was produced under the direction of Charles Horan, assisted by P. Thad. Volkman. Mr. Barrymore and Miss Skirvin are supported by a cast which includes such well-known players as Edgar L. Davenport, Franklin Hanna, John H. Smiley, Paul Lawrence, James Malaidy, Howard Truesdell, George Stevens, Frank Lyona, Myra Brook and others.

The story of "The Upheaval" has to do with a young man whose father leaves him a fortune which he made as the leader of a corrupt political ring. Suspicion is attached to everything the son does, and his motives are invariably misconstrued. Even the girl he marries mistrusts and misunderstands him until he proves his true character by a surprisingly big and good deed. There is a strong climax in the story, and the feature teems with thrilling and interesting situations.

Stars Aplenty in August Kalems

Eight Prominent Players Found in Five Reels Issued Through General Film.

A GLANCE over Kalem's list of releases for the week of August 28 shows that eight stars will be presented by that company in the five reels issued. The roster includes Marin Sais, True Boardman, Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare, Ivy Close, Helen Gibson and Henry Murdock.

"Tigers Unchained," fourth episode of "The Girl from Frisco" series, heads the list, being released on Wednesday, August 30. This episode is founded on a real occurrence in California a decade ago, when a score of convicts escaped from Folsom Prison to the mountains and, though pursued by the militia, the ringleaders were never caught. In Kalem's story by Robert Welles Ritchie Marin Sais is kidnapped by the band. True Boardman is seen in one of the strongest roles yet afforded him by the Western series, while Ronald Bradbury contributes an unusual "heavy" as "Red Shirt" Gordon, leader of the fugitives.

On Friday, September 1, "Tangled by Telephone," a one-reel comedy featuring Ivy Close and Henry Murdock, is released. Arthur Albertson, William McKey and Mary Taylor-Ross are others in the cast.

Helen Gibson makes her appearance for the week in "The Secret of the Box Car," a one-reeler, in which she leaps from a moving flat-car through the open door of a speeding mail train. G. A. Williams, P. S. Pembroke and George Routh are also seen in this one-reel thriller.

Ham, Bud and Ethel Teare, the three star combination, have just put the finishing touches to the one-reel comedy, scheduled for release on Tuesday, August 29. Myrta Sterling and F. A. Edmondson complete the cast.

BIG FOUR EXHIBITOR NOW V-L-S-E SALESMAN.

What is considered by Frank Harris, Denver manager of the V-L-S-E, as the height of efficiency in film salesmanship, was effected last week when S. M. Bower, for years an exhibitor of pictures and for more than a year an exclusive exhibitor of V-L-S-E features, was appointed to a position of salesman in the Denver Branch. Mr. Bower is half owner of the Olympic theater, Pocatello, Idaho, where he has handled nearly every feature produced by the V-L-S-E.

Rolfe Studio Changes

Mr. Rolfe Will Devote All His Time to Production—Karger to Cast All Pictures.

B. A. ROLFE, president of the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., who has personally directed the management of the Strand theater on Broadway, and made it the leading motion theater in the world, has given up that work and is now the commander-in-chief of the Rolfe studio at No. 3 West 63d street, where many of the biggest features are produced for the Metro program. Mr. Rolfe was induced to take up this position because of the ever-increasing activities at the studio that made big demands upon his time.

In the past the burden of the arduous duties at the Rolfe studio fell upon the shoulders of Maxwell Karger, the general manager, and his associate, Charles D. Maddock, the treasurer. Mr. Karger has now taken charge of the casting of all the stars and players, and the scenario department in the studio. Mr. Maddock will continue in his present capacity. Mr. Rolfe will take over the work of general supervision of all productions and will have immediate charge of all the directors.

Among the stars now working at the Rolfe-Metro studio under the direction of Mr. Rolfe are Ethel Barrymore, Emily Stevens, Mabel Taliaferro, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Emmy Wehlen, Ralph Herz, Viola Dana, Irene Howley, Grace Valentine, Lionel Barrymore, Irene Fenwick and others of equal magnitude. The directing force under Mr. Rolfe include such well-known producers as Edwin Carewe, William Nigh, Charles Horan, John W. Noble, George D. Baker, John H. Collins and others with many screen masterpieces to their credit.

VICTOR DE VILLIERS SCENARIO EDITOR FOR IVAN.

Victor de Villiers has been engaged by the Ivan Film Productions as editor of the scenario department of that company. Mr. de Villiers has had a long training in the photoplay field, serving a year with Universal in the scenario department, where his ability caused him to be recognized as among our foremost writers of continuity. He later joined the Kliene forces and from there accepted a position with the International. With this latter company he scenarioized the first few episodes of "Patria," the new International serial, which will shortly be released. Mr. de Villiers is the author of numerous screen plays, notable among which are "The Ten Thousand Dollar Dame," "The Fall of Salome," "Souls Reborn" and "The Yellow Pawn," the latter written in association with Frederic Arnold Kummer and which will be produced shortly by the Lasky Company.

CHANGES IN THE UNIVERSAL PERSONNEL.

The following engagements have been made with the players for the Universal companies and for general stock work at Universal City: On July 19 Walter Clinton, juvenile, for the Forrester company. On July 20 Ruth Clifford, ingenue, for general stock; Millard K. Wilson, juvenile, for the Ormston company. On July 21 Gordon Griffith to play boy roles in Director Hopper's company. On July 25 George Hall, dancer, to play under Director Lowery. On July 27 Barney Blinn, as utility man in general stock. On July 28 the following were engaged to play character roles in Director Conway's company—Ivor McFaden, Dick La Reno, Harry K. Shields, V. O. Whitehead, Pat Rooney, Tiny Phillips, E. M. Holland, Katherine Campbell and Charles Murphy. Buster Emmons to play boy roles in the same company.

"DAVE" THOMPSON LIFE MEMBER OF NEW ROCHELLE ELKS.

David Thompson, one of the ablest and most popular assistant directors with the Metro forces, has been elected a life member in the Elks lodge of New Rochelle, N. Y. At a big meeting held in his honor he was presented with a solid gold card case enclosing his membership engraved upon the case. Mr. Thompson was Grand Exalted ruler of the New Rochelle lodge and recently represented the local organization at the Baltimore convention.

EDGAR L. DAVENPORT IN "THE UPHEAVAL."

Edgar L. Davenport has been engaged for an important part in "The Upheaval," the new Metro-Rolfe production, starring Lionel Barrymore. Mr. Davenport was also seen in "Dorian's Divorce," in the support of the same star, and in "The Blindness of Love." He is becoming as well known in motion pictures as his family has always been on the speaking stage.

Leaves Law for the Screen

THAT proficiency in the law is not destructive to dramatic talent is proven in the case of Agnes Eyre, who, although only 21, has shown her versatility by leaving the law department of Chicago University within a year of being admitted to the bar of the State of Illinois, visiting an Essanay studio in company with a friend, and being promptly snapped up by a discerning director. This "tryout" was followed by continually growing parts in "The White Sister," with Viola Allen; "Graustark," with Francis X. Bushman; "The Prince of Graustark," a sequel to "Graustark," the Selig Panama-Pacific series, "The Seven Suffering Sisters," and latest "The Sting of Victory," with Henry B. Walthal and Antoinette Walker.

Agnes Eyre.

Now her eyes have turned eastward, and with some flattering offers from producers on this edge of the continent to consider, she is about to try for new honors right in the heart of things filmy. She has been called "La Penserosa" by those who knew her when she was wrestling with Blackstone, Coke and Littleton, and others of the tribe of jurisprudence, but then she was very serious minded. Not that she is less so now, but her seriousness has taken a different turn, and the smile which shines from her hazel eyes shows that the glare of the Cooper-Hewitts has given life a new tinge, and there is much more of the joy of life in winning fame and a modicum of fortune before the camera than in hunting through dusty law tomes for a bunch of antique, moldy precedents and decisions, which don't fit the case in hand at all. The screen needs more girls of the type of Agnes Eyre.

MARGARITA FISCHER IN MUTUAL SERIES.

President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation announces the closing of a contract whereby Miss Fischer will be starred in at least six five-part features for Mutual release. The first of the pictures may be expected by exhibitors late in October with the others following at intervals of four weeks. Miss Fischer will appear under the direction of Harry Pollard, the director with whom she has attained the greatest of her various screen successes.

VOCAL PICTURES.

O. E. Kellum, formerly of Long Beach, Cal., who has perfected talking moving pictures, will continue to present his entertaining vocal pictures at the Theatorium. All who have taken advantage of the opportunity to see the pictures thus far have expressed great delight and have complimented the successful inventor warmly. W. E. Bewley is now associated with Mr. Kellum in promoting the talking pictures.

PATHE SECURES CAMERAMAN EARLE.

Pathe has secured the services of the well-known cameraman Ralph Earle to take a series of scenics in the National Parks of the country. Among the parks visited will be the Yellowstone, Glacier, Mount Rainier, Crater and Lassen. Mr. Earle was for some years one of the most efficient cameramen of the Pathe News, and scored many "scoops." He is an expert in photography.

WILLIAM LIPPERT JOINS UNIVERSAL SCENARIO STAFF.

William H. Lippert, author of "The Nigger," has joined the scenario staff at the Universal City studios. Last winter Lippert had to give up his post as Eastern editor of the company, because of ill health following the completion of "The Lords of Decision," a Red Feather feature, and again has joined the scenario staff.

Harold Entwistle

AN ACTOR with an unusual amount of flexibility of characterization who has been seen to very good advantage in a recent World Film Corporation picture is Harold Entwistle, well-known character actor, and former stage and screen actor and director.

Mr. Entwistle has had a varied stage career, serving with the late Wilson Barret, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall, Mrs. Langtry, Sir John Hare, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, and working directly under the late Charles Frohman for five years, in which time he was actor, stage director, and manager, also having managed several theaters and four road companies at the same time.

Harold Entwistle.

Enjoying a wide and varied experience with many of the most famous stage celebrities of the past and present regime, Mr. Entwistle has played prominent parts in many of the greatest stage successes of recent years, and was, until his advent into the motion picture business two and a half years ago, one of the leading stage directors in the country.

His first motion picture engagement was with the Vitagraph, following the California Motion Picture Company, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the New York Motion Picture Company and the World Film Corporation. He was director for the California Motion Picture Company twelve months, in which time he produced, scenarioized and directed many stellar attractions, including "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Lily of Poverty Flat," "A Phyllis of the Sierras" and "The Surrender" for the Western Universal Company.

Edgar Lewis and Company in "The Barrier."

PRODUCER EDGAR LEWIS AT LIBERTY.

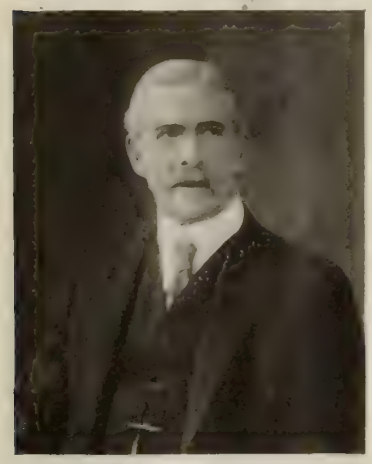
Rumor has it that Edgar Lewis' contract with the Lubin Company will terminate shortly after the completion of "The Barrier," which he is now working on, and we understand there has already been some spirited bidding for the services of this sure-fire director, who in the short space of twenty months has fifteen box office record breaking photoplay productions to his credit. Mr. Lewis in this time has climbed to the very top of his profession.

ARBUCKLE A VENETIAN.

Roscoe ("Fatty") Arbuckle, not the man who roasts coffee, but the jovial comedian who makes people laugh, has leased a house at No. 46 Brooks avenue, and will make his home in Venice, California.

William T. Carleton

OF ALL the members of the supporting cast in "Gloria's Romance," the great George Kleine motion picture novel, featuring Billie Burke, perhaps none has received more favorable comment from photoplay fans and caused more discussion among exhibitors than William T. Carleton, who enacts the role of Pierpont Stafford, "Gloria's father.



William T. Carleton.

He is the same William T. Carleton, who starred for years as the head of the Carleton Opera Company, which toured the United States from coast to coast and from Canada to the Gulf. Born in London, England, he early in life developed a vocal talent that attracted the attention of Sir Julius Benedict, who was the teacher of Queen Victoria and the royal family. Now Carleton's parents were Quakers and had a most deep seated aversion to anything pertaining to the theater, so they objected to his even considering an operatic career, but he finally succeeded in overcoming their objections and finally went on the stage.

He was brought to the United States by Maurice Grau, then manager of the Clara Louise Kellogg Opera Company, and made his American debut at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia, as Valentine to the Marguerite of Miss Kellogg in "Faust." He scored such success that to him fell the honor of creating the title role in "The Flying Dutchman" the first time this opera was ever sung in America. After a brief concert tour, he returned to London to sing the leading baritone roles at His Majesty's opera house. Following a second trip to America at the time Gilbert & Sullivan operas were at their height, he was engaged to create the baritone roles in this series of operas at the Savoy theater in London. On his next visit to the United States he became a star at the New York Casino, and then organized the Carleton Opera Company, which played successfully for more than fifteen consecutive seasons.

More recently Mr. Carleton has devoted his talents to the silent drama and has played roles of wide and varied sorts during the last few seasons. He considers, however, that his selection for the part of Billie Burke's father in "Gloria's Romance" is one of the most enjoyable engagements he ever filled, and everyone agrees that he has played the part in a masterful manner.

GOLDFISH GOES TO COAST.

Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the board of directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who left last week for the studios of the Lasky Company at Hollywood, Cal., will devote a considerable portion of his transcontinental trip to a survey of motion picture conditions in various sections of the United States. Mr. Goldfish, in the future as in the past, intends to devote unusual concentration and study to general trade conditions, not only in the United States and Canada, but throughout the world.

ROBERT GRAU DEAD.

Robert Grau, many years prominent in the theatrical world, died at his home in Mount Vernon, N. Y., on Tuesday, August 8. The immediate cause of death was an overdose of morphine taken to obtain relief from insomnia from which the deceased was a sufferer. During the past few years Mr. Grau had devoted considerable attention to motion pictures.

NANCE O'NEILL MARRIES ALFRED HICKMAN.

Nance O'Neill, well known actress, who has appeared in a number of motion picture features, was married to Alfred Hickman on Friday, August 11, at the home of a friend at New Rochelle. Mr. Hickman has been appearing in pictures with Miss O'Neill. They will make their home at Bayside, N. Y.

Joseph H. Lynch

JOSEPH H. LYNCH, favorably known in the film world for many years, has been appointed general manager of the Unity Film Service for New York State and northern New Jersey, handling the productions of the Unity Sales Corporation. The first offering to the exhibitors will be the sixteen-episode serial entitled "The Yellow Menace," to be followed later on with features and comedies.

Joseph H. Lynch.

Mr. Lynch was born of revolutionary ancestry — Thomas Lynch, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, being one of his forebears—in Middletown, Conn., where he attended the local high school graduating afterward from Huntsinger's Business College in Hartford, Conn. Mr. Lynch's long connection with Metro as a special representative has made him a host of friends especially among the exhibitors, who always appreciated his policy of courteous treatment and a square deal. This latest appointment to a responsible position is viewed by Mr. Lynch's friends as a distinct advancement won strictly on a basis of merit. His popularity with the exhibitors, his straightforward business dealings and his genial good humor are the assets which make his success in the new position a moral certainty.

FLORIDA FEATURE FILMS ABSORBS FIELD FEATURE FILMS.

It has been officially announced that the Field Feature Films, with studios at Miami, Florida, has been absorbed by a new company and the name changed to Florida Feature Films. All of the property holdings and the three five-reel features already completed and ready for state rights distribution have been transferred to the new company. It is stated on the highest authority that the change in name has been occasioned by the control of the company passing to Thomas J. Peters, a Florida capitalist.

The features already produced—"The Human Orchid," "The Toll of Justice" and "Fate's Chessboard"—will be released via the state rights plan as originally intended. These will be followed by other productions that will be marketed in the same manner.

Announcement has also been made by the new company that it has established a New York sales office in the Candler Building Annex at 218 West Forty-second street, in charge of M. M. Feely, where screen examinations of their features can be made without delay.

ADVERTISING SCHEME FOR FEATURES.

Mitchell Fitzer of the Happy Hour theatre, known as a successful and enterprising exhibitor in Syracuse, N. Y., claims to have evolved a novel advertising plan for features, which in his belief will go a good ways in insuring or as the case may be in doubling the ordinary success of a feature. This novel plan, which was born of Mr. Fitzer's long and practical experience, will be found effective, he claims, upon the slightest investigation.

BERNFIELD MARRIES AND MIGRATES.

Wedding bells rang out early in the week for genial Sam Bernfield, head of the Pathe exchange in Boston, but now to have a wider field on the Coast distributing the Mary Pickford pictures. His bride, formerly Elizabeth J. Snyder, is accomplished and attractive. Mr. Bernfield has made many friends in New England who will regret his departure. He will cover California, Nevada, New Mexico and Arizona, making San Francisco his headquarters.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF PETROGAD (Essanay), Aug. 2.—The series of animated drawings that Mr. Bailey has been making of the leading cities of the world has proved to be of much merit. The many points of interest in the Russian capital have a special interest at the present time. As usual, the reel also carries a scenic.

PA'S OVERALLS (Vitagraph), Aug. 7.—This is a rattling good rural comedy, and is capitally played by a new cast of Vitagraph players. The situations are humorous and neatly put together.

THE TELEPHONE GIRL AND THE LADY (Biograph), Aug. 7.—Mae Marsh, Claire McDowell, Alfred Paget, Harry Carey and Charles H. Mailes are the actors in this Biograph reissue, which shows how a telephone girl makes good use of an opportunity to "listen in" on one of her wires. A pleasing bit of romance is the outcome of the girl's act. The picture is an interesting one, and has a well defined thread of humor running through it.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 63, 1916 (Selig), Aug. 8.—Battleship Wisconsin at the navy yard, Charlestown, Mass.; Monmouth Horse Show at Long Branch, N. J.; schooner Great Bear sails from Seattle, Wash., for big game; machine gun practice of Illinois troopers, Leon Springs, Tex.; society children of San Antonio on summer vacation; "Frontier Days," Cheyenne, Wyo.; explosion on Black Tom Island, N. J.

GOOD EVENING, JUDGE (Kalem), Aug. 8.—The Kalem Klip Sheet calls this one-reel picture an underworld burlesque, and the description fits it perfectly. Ham and Bud become crooks, and their adventures are nothing short of remarkable during the action of the reel. The finish is a very happy thought. Ethel Teare and A. Edmondson are members of the robber band.

THAT TIRED BUSINESS MAN (Vim), Aug. 9.—A Vim feature comedy with Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby as the stars, this one-reel photoplay cleverly satirizes the domestic side of married life. The male member of the household thinks that he is terribly overworked and that his wife's duties are anything but onerous. When he makes the mistake of telling her so, she promptly suggests that they exchange work for a day—she will run the office for him, while he has an easy time at home doing the household tasks. Hubby accepts joyfully, but soon learns his mistake. The cook leaves him in a huff and, after trying in vain to put his house in order, he is glad to phone for his wife and acknowledge his defeat. The picture is well staged and acted, the easy method of the two stars fitting smoothly the requirements of the comedy.

DREAMY KNIGHTS (Vim), Aug. 10.—An amusing burlesque of Cervante's immortal "Don Quixote" is the theme of this one-reel picture, Babe Hardy, Billy Ruge and Ray Podfrey heading the cast. Plump and Runt are discovered fishing from a boat. They go to sleep and dream they are the heroes of a great adventure. Although still in the present century, they imagine that they are a pair of bold knights whose mission is to rescue beauty in distress and defeat villainy at every turn. A captured maiden is freed by them, and a pirate stronghold overthrown. Their gallant steeds are an undersized donkey and an underfed goat. Plump and Runt make a ludicrous pair of swashbucklers, until awakened from their pleasant dreams by the upsetting of the boat.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 64, 1916 (Selig), Aug. 10.—Hammond, Ind., armored car ready to be equipped with rapid-fire guns; guardsmen engaged in sewing and other domestic duties, San Antonio, Tex.; Washington, D. C., George L. Covert and son carry letter in donkey-mobile from New York to California; breaking green western horses for artillery work, San Antonio; American Golf Club, London, awards prizes to tournament winners; young Japs in training at Los Angeles.

DAISY THE DEMONSTRATOR (Kalem), Aug. 11.—Raymond C. Hill has furnished a clever scenario for this one-reel comedy in which Ivy Close has the title role. The theme is novel and the action is gingery. Miss Close has a firm grasp on the acting possibilities of her part and is ably seconded by Henry Murdock, Arthur Albertson, C. D. Peruchi, Mary Taylor-Ross and William McKay.

RUSHING BUSINESS (Vim), Aug. 11.—Pokes and Jabbs become the owners of a hat store at the opening of this one-reel comedy. They are tricked into thinking that the establishment does a large business, but quickly discover their error. Pokes hits upon a scheme to bring in customers: he gathers an armful of bricks and bombards the hat of every man that passes the corner. The store is soon filled with buyers and Pokes and Jabbs are rapidly becoming rich when Pokes smashes the head covering of a heavy-weight tough, is caught in the act, chased into the store and the place wrecked. The grotesque acting of Robert Burns and Walter Stull makes the reel amusing. Ethel Burton and Frank Hansor are worthy of mention.

ROMANCE AND ROUGH-HOUSE (Vitagraph), Aug. 11.—C. Graham Baker and Lawrence Seamon are the authors of this one-reel comedy, and Hughie Mack, Patsy De Forest, Wm. Shea and Edward Dunn are the leading members of the cast. The picture is well named. Hughie Mack poses as heavy-weight hero, ever ready to respond to the call of beauty in distress, and the rough-house tactics resorted to by the bunch of villains in the story include an attempt to blow the valiant Hughie off the earth with a dynamite bomb. The spirit of the picture is grotesque farce, and Lawrence Seamon, who directed the reel, has accelerated the action to a surprising degree. Hughie Mack is a flat contradiction of the old adage that "Large bodies move slowly," and Patsy De Forest, late of the Lubin forces, is Mr. Mack's equal in agility. A capital one-reeler.

A WESTERN MASQUERADE (Selig), Aug. 12.—Another one-reel comedy with Tom Mix in the three-ply role of author, star and producer. The erstwhile cowboy forsakes his old calling, however, and makes his first appearance as a stranded actor. He secures the position of school teacher and proceeds to make love to the best looking and wealthiest of his pupils. Jim Withers, the girl's father, finds it out, fires Tom, and advertises for a lady teacher. Tom makes up as one of the fair sex, gets the job and is slightly embarrassed when the school trustee falls in love with him. Withers discovers his mistake when he sees Tom pull off his wig and thrash the bully of the neighborhood for getting too familiar with Miss Vicky. Pa Withers says yes, after that. Victoria Forde, Joe Ryan and Sid Jordan are the other members of the cast. The picture grades up to the usual Tom Mix comedy.

A TEMPORARY TRUCE (Biograph), Aug. 15.—A two-reel reissue, produced by Griffith a number of years ago. Chas. Gorman, Blanche Sweet, Mae Marsh and Robert Harron are in the cast. A Mexican villain and a band of Indian braves on the warpath furnish the excitement. The story is not exceptional, but the staging of the battle with the redskins is unusually well done. The scenes are taken in and about a small town in a semi-arid country.

General Film Company Specials

THE WAR BRIDE OF PLUMVILLE (Essanay), Aug. 5.—An entertaining three-reel comedy-drama on an up-to-date subject, this photoplay belongs to the same class of stories as "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford." Two sharps from the city try to fleece the owner of the Plumville Iron Works with a war contract, but the rural hero defeats them—and wins the girl. A large cast of competent actors includes Nell Craig, Ernest Maupain, Edmund F. Cobb, Harry Dunkinson, Hugh Thompson, Ullrich Haupt and Florence Oberle.

THE BOND OF BLOOD (Vitagraph), Aug. 5.—The three-reel screen version that Van Dyke Brooke has made from Benjamin Webster's well-known drama, "One Touch of Nature," has many points to recommend it. The story is rather long drawn out, but the incidents are full of human interest. The theme deals with stage life, and Mr. Brooke's impersonation of the old actor has feeling and considerable power. Leah Baird is excellent as the daughter, and George Arveine and Jack Ellis have congenial roles.

THE THREE SCRATCH CLUE (Essanay), Aug. 8.—A two-reel crook play, this Essanay reissue is well supplied with lively action. A gentleman crook, whose specialty is stealing art treasures from the houses where he is being entertained, is traced by three scratches on his face, the result of a tussle with his host's private secretary. Francis X. Bushman, Byrant Washburn, Thomas Commerford and Irene Warfield form an excellent cast.

THE FIGHTING HEIRESS (No. 1 of "The Girl from Frisco") (Kalem), Aug. 9.—A review of the opening episode of the new Kalem two-reel serial by Robert Welles Ritchie was printed in the issue of Aug. 5, page 943. The scenes are laid in California, and the first number gives promise of an entertaining series of screen dramas. Marin Sais and True Boardman are the leading actors.

THE FATAL WEDDING (Biograph), Aug. 9.—This reissue of the screen version of the famous melodrama written by Theodore Kramer will be a treat for the lovers of strong "heart interest." "The Fatal Wedding" had a remarkable career on the spoken stage, and much of its appeal is found in the photoplay. The attempt of an unscrupulous woman to steal the husband of her rival, the suffering caused by her act (which is nearly crowned by success), and the way in which the faithful servants of the wife stand by her and help to reunite the estranged couple, form a story which will always find favor with many people. Irene Hawley, Millicent Evans, Walter Miller, Charles H. Mailes, Mrs. A. C. Marston and J. Jiquel Lanoe comprise the cast.

THE BETTER WOMAN (Knickerbocker), Aug. 11.—The plot of this three-reel photoplay constitutes a good grade of melodrama. The head clerk of a wealthy broker is made the victim of his employer's infatuation for his wife. The safe is robbed and Merrill, the clerk, becomes an object of suspicion. After learning of his wife's worthlessness, he is discharged and rapidly goes down hill. Drifting out West, he befriends a girl in a gambling den and is himself befriended by the owner of a mine nearby. The girl's former protector was the man who robbed the safe. She, also, is taken to the mine, and learns to love Merrill. He makes a lucky find, and, his wife having been killed in an automobile accident, marries the better woman. The acting in the opening scenes could be improved, but after the action shifts to the West the efforts of the cast are satisfactory. Reaves Eason, Jimsy Maye and Edward Jobson come first in the order of merit.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE GIRL OF LOST LAKE, Aug. 28.—A beautifully photographed picture made on a lake in the Sierra Nevada mountains with Myrtle Gonzales playing the role of a woodsman's daughter. The story is pleasing and the scenes are extraordinarily picturesque. A review may be found in the issue of August 26.

International Film Service, Inc.

HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 63, 1916, Aug. 8.—Infantile paralysis in New York City, showing conditions on the East Side; hospital scenes of the epidemic; first armored railroad car built for the United States; bagpipe monkey for the New York Zoo; shooting at French and British aircraft, Salonika, Greece; seaside fashions; whale caught in Rockaway Inlet, N. Y.; bathing beach, Chicago; unveiling of statuary on Capitol, Washington; North Sea Fleet at Wilhelmshaven, Germany.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 64, 1916 (Aug. 11).—German submarine is captured by the English at Sheerness, Eng.; Charles Evans Hughes opens his campaign at Detroit, Mich.; exclusive pictures by Nelson E. Edwards, showing the German North Sea Fleet at Wilhelmshaven, Germany; fashion section; Rear Admiral Caperton becomes commander of the Pacific Fleet, San Diego, Cal.; girls of Berkeley University take swimming lesson on dry land; a live shark caught in net at Sayville, L. I.; artillery bombardment of German trenches, "Somewhere in France."

Metro Pictures Corporation.

GOD'S HALF ACRE (Rolfe), Aug. 7.—This five-part production features Mabel Taliaferro in an attractive character role. The charm of this play will be found in the characterization, and the manner in which it has been staged. Many of the scenes take place in a home for the aged known as "Rainbow's End," where Blossom, the maid-of-all-work, drudge and angel of the place, is found by a novelist and incorporated as a type in a novel which he is writing. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

Mutual Film Corporation

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 84, Aug. 9.—Interesting items of this issue are the "Deutschland" leaving Baltimore on her return trip, a memorial parade in London, Eng., entitled "Remember the Lusitania," a drop from an aeroplane in a parachute at Seattle, Wash., a demonstration for preparedness in San Francisco, the munitions explosion at Jersey City, and others items of general interest.

REEL LIFE NO. 15 (Gaumont), Aug. 13.—"The Making of an A. U. S. Jackie," "Our Servants and Our Friends" presenting various fine specimens of the dog kind, and a short editorial entitled "What Would You Do If"— which takes the form of a brief comedy on life, constitute this number.

THE GUIDERS (Falstaff), Aug. 14.—A moderately entertaining comedy in which a couple of idlers get jobs as guides. They make failures of their first attempts, one of them getting into a pretty scrape by falling in love with the feminine adjunct of trial No. 2. This is very slight of plot, and cannot be strongly recommended as a laugh-getting comedy.

PERKINS' MYSTIC MANOR (Beauty), Aug. 16.—An amusing farce comedy in which Pinkney Perkins, a lawyer, becomes heir to an old manor through the whim of one of his clients. Arrived on the property to give it the "once over" he discovers a band of mystics camped there. After some thrilling adventures he takes to his heels, with a resolution to turn down all such inheritances in the future.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials

THE POWER OF MIND (American), Aug. 10.—The question of heredity is the absorbing topic of this three-part number in which Edward Coxen, Lizette Thorne, Chas. Newton and Geo. Gebhardt have the principal roles. The production makes the assertion that no evil can be inherited unless a child is conscious of the existence of that evil in his parents. This theory may or may not be correct. Nevertheless, the picture arouses thought on the subject, and interests thereby.

THE COURTIN' OF CALLIOPE CLEW (Mustang), Aug. 11.—A two-part production featuring Anna Little and Frank Borzage. This number will be enjoyed because of the thoroughly human element which permeates it. The story on which it is based is a very simple one, and follows the fortunes of a Puritan maid in her travels in a prairie wagon over the plains. Her father dies on the way, and Calliope Clew, a cowpuncher, keeps watch over her at a distance, and afterward gains her promise to be his wife.

RUTH RIDLEY RETURNS (American), Aug. 14.—A two-part drama featuring Lizette Thorne. The production is an interesting one, treating of how, upon the return to her office desk after an absence of a couple of minutes, Ruth Ridley finds several hundreds of dollars missing from an amount entrusted to her keeping by her employer. A nicely complicated plot makes up in a measure for a lack of originality of theme.

FOR HER GOOD NAME (Centaur), Aug. 12.—An interesting two-part melodrama in which a blow struck in defense of a woman kills a man. The woman's fan found in the dead man's pocket is stolen from the detective in the night by the man who committed the murder. Faced with an accusation of the crime, he is promised that the fact shall not be revealed if he will name the woman for whom he struck the blow. To save her good name, he refuses, and is led away to prison. Crane Wilbur plays the masculine lead. The production has been attractively staged.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE, NO. 13 (Mutual Special Feature), Aug. 14.—In this number Morton gains possession of the book containing the secret of the submarine, which has been found by Olga in the den of a bandit. Morton wrests the book from her and escapes. Hope upon learning that the U. S. Naval Department are in dire need of the secret, vows to devote his life and wealth to finding it. This number is fairly attractive.

HER LUCKLESS SCHEME (Vogue), Aug. 20.—A two-part comedy that will be enjoyed in spite of the fact that it contains little, if anything, really new in the way of business. The daughter of the owner of a department store enters it as a clerk behind the counter, to be able to offset the impression that the shop girl is ill-treated. Some amusing incidents occur in which a reporter of one of the daily papers is involved. One of the funny points of the picture is the theft and rapid transit of a watch.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

LOSING WEIGHT (Pathe), July 31.—R. Goldberg has surpassed himself in the penning of this cartoon comedy. It is really intensely amusing, and shows the vain efforts of a certain fat woman to reduce. She is even interfered with in an effort to commit suicide. A very good number.

TOKIO, CAPITAL OF JAPAN (Pathe), Aug. 7.—An interesting scenic number giving, in addition to a birdseye view of Tokio, glimpses of its principal streets, buildings, etc. On the same reel with "Jumping Analyzed."

JUMPING ANALYZED (Pathe), Aug. 7.—An unusually interesting and instructive number, showing by means of the rapid camera the play of man's muscles in taking difficult jumps.

NATURE'S TIRELESS ENERGY (Pathe), Aug. 14.—An interesting number giving beautiful views on the Snoqualmie River which supplies power for the electric plants of Seattle, Tacoma, and other cities in that vicinity.

BRAVER THAN THE BRAVEST (Pathe), Aug. 14.—Heinie, willing to try anything, once gives an amusing exhibition in the role of a henpecked husband. Louie appearing on the scenes arouses his ire and after making good his escape from the house he is converted into what the title suggests by a dose of a new elixir calculated to make men brave. Part of this film is amusing, although its style belongs decidedly to low comedy.

LUKE DOES THE MIDWAY (Rolin), Aug. 21.—An amusing farce comedy in which Luke's adventures on the Midway end in rough handling for himself as well as others. Many will find the introduction of the usual Midway sights coupled with Luke's funny personality very entertaining.

THE GRIP OF EVIL, NO. 7 (Balboa), Aug. 28.—"The Butterflies" is the title of this number of the serial, which introduces a couple of blackmailers who try to ruin the good name of a young woman, who, through her sympathetic nature, has placed herself on dangerous ground. John Burton later falls in love with the young woman, and is instrumental in keeping the blackmailing story from being published. Moderately interesting.

Pathe Exchange Inc. Specials

A WOMAN'S FIGHT (Gold Rooster Play), Aug. 21.—A five-part melodrama from Popular Plays and Players, directed by Herbert Blache, and featuring Geraldine O'Brien. Thurlow Bergen is also included in the cast. The production is moderately interesting.

THE GRIP OF EVIL, NO. 6 (Balboa), Aug. 21.—"The Hypocrites" is the title of this number of the series. The story treats of how a farmer destroys the ambitions of his son and daughter, driving them from his home because of their persistence in wanting to be something beyond what their father and mother have been. A young artist befriends them after their arrival in the city, and is later saddened by the discovery that both have fallen into bad company and are unworthy of his efforts to help them.

THE SHINE GIRL (Gold Rooster Play), Aug. 28.—Gladys Hulette has been featured in this five-part production from the Thanhouser studios. A full review of the picture will be found elsewhere. Briefly speaking, the character of the "shine" girl, a bootblack by vocation, is an exceptionally beautiful one. The central theme of the story has been clearly defined, and the production, being human in character, will be enjoyed by all.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company

PIE (Powers), Aug. 20.—An unusually good juvenile subject, by Eugene Ince. The boy who eats too much pie has a dream, in which he is captured by cannibals and escapes only to fight Mexican bandits. This will amuse children greatly.

BROKE BUT AMBITIOUS (Nestor), Aug. 21.—Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appear in this number as two young men who are shanghaied by the crew of a schooner and forced to cook. The schooner settings are good. The plot is only fairly strong, though the situations are amusing.

A DOUBLE DOUBLE-CROSS (L-KO), Aug. 23.—A comic number, featuring Billy Armstrong and others. This is a nonsensical trifle and contains some quick action of a funny sort. The jitney ferryman is an amusing character. It gets several laughs.

THE DEVIL'S OWN (Big U), Aug. 24.—A western number, with a tragic close, featuring Harry Carey, Olive Fuller Golden and Joe Rickson. This is a short, spirited Western episode, in which the spark of honor glows for a moment in the heart of a bandit, and he assists a girl to escape at the cost of his own life. A good number.

CREATING LIFE FROM A DEAD LEAF (Powers), Aug. 25.—Microscopic views of bacteria, water fleas and the like. Also pictures of the Mexican devil fish and larger denizens of the sea. This is instructive.

SAMMY JOHNSON IN MEXICO (Powers).—On the same reel with the foregoing is an interesting comedy cartoon.

A MARRIAGE FOR REVENGE (Joker), Aug. 26.—A character comedy, by Wm. W. Farmer, featuring Gale Henry, Wm. Franey and others. The homely types are amusing and the plot quite laughable. The food throwing at the close makes a disgusting feature and mars the humor. This can easily be cut.

THE LADY FROM THE SEA (Big U), Aug. 27.—A strong tale of the sea, by Francis Powers, featuring Clyde Benson, Claire MacDowell, C. H. Mailes and others. The friendship of the wild rover and Joseph is well depicted. Then comes the rivalry, the wedding preparations and some weird and dramatic events. This is brief and convincing in presentation. A strong subject.

SNORING IN HIGH C (L-KO), Aug. 27.—Gertrude Selby, Reggie Morris and others appear in this comic offering. A wedding, a disappointed suitor and a general apartment house scramble are the principle features. This contains a fair amount of humor.

THE TERRIBLE TURK (Nestor), Aug. 28.—Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean are the principal fun-makers in a farce of good quality. The action is rapid and entertaining, and in the trouble over a valuable ruby there is enough story to carry the reel.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials

THE BECKONING TRAIL (Red Feather), Aug. 21.—A five-reel story, telling of a young Broadway sport who goes West to make good. He is followed by his former sweetheart, who lures him back. Later he returns West to the girl he loves. The motive is familiar, but the story works out with unexpected strength. The clash over the mining claim is dramatic and exciting. J. Warren Kerrigan, Lois Wilson, Ray Hanford, Maude George and Harry Carter appear. Much of the strength of this production is due to the work of the very competent cast. F. McGrew Willis wrote the story and Jack Conway produced it.

THE CASTLE OF DESPAIR (Gold Seal), Aug. 22.—A three-reel offering, featuring Neva Gerber, Malcolm Blevins and Carl Von Schiller. Miss Gerber makes a pleasing appearance as the wife of the neglectful rich man, but the story is a mere repetition of what has been done often before. The wife deserts her husband for another, after a long period of neglect. She then leaves the train hurredly with her child and determines to shift for herself. Two years later the husband finds her and a reconciliation follows. The story does not hold the interest because it lacks complications and contains nothing really new.

YOU WANT SOMETHING (Nestor), Aug. 24.—A two-reel number, by Stella A. Ellers, featuring Max Asher, Gale Henry, Arthur Moon and Wm. Franey. This is a comedy in which a shoe manufacturer refuses to advertise. His daughter and her lover take charge of the business during his absence and prove the power of advertising in an amusing way. The idea is very much like that in the play, "It Pays To Advertise." It is entertaining and contains a good deal of sound business sense.

THE PANEL GAME (Imp), Aug. 25.—A two-reel number, by Jacques Jaccard, featuring G. Raymond Nye, Roberta Wilson and others. The gentleman gambler picks up a susceptible girl crook and gets her to lure a married man to her room. He then appears and they blackmail the victim. This is a close picture of real life, not without unpleasant features, but carrying a needed lesson to married men who are inclined to play with the fire. There is a touch of satire in the closing scene, where the crooks give a blind man fifty dollars. A strongly presented number of the sex type.

THE FOLLY OF DESIRE (Red Feather), Aug. 28.—A very melodramatic picture produced by George L. Tucker. The story is supposed to transpire in England and South Africa, the central plot dealing with the brutality of an aged cattleman who abuses his young wife. Studio sets are used where exteriors would be more effective. A review may be found in the issue of August 19th.

Triangle Film Corporation.

HELL-TO-PAY AUSTIN (Fine Arts Film), Aug. 20.—A very sweet and attractive high comedy, with Wilfred Lucas in the lead and Bessie Love in a role so well suited to her that she has made it a creation. The story is very amusing at times.

LIEUT. DANNY, U. S. A. (Triangle-Ince), Aug. 20.—A romantic story of Mexico much as it is today. Vital and interesting, as well as replete with action.

World-Equitable.

A WOMAN'S WAY (Peerless World-Film), Aug. 7.—A moderately entertaining drama featuring Carlyle Blackwell and Ethel Clayton. The story treats of a domestic tangle, introducing an adventuress who makes trouble wherever she goes. An unwise use of sub-titles is a detriment to the enjoyment of the picture. A full review will be found elsewhere. This number is moderately interesting.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE PRINCE CHAP (Selig), July 24.—This film from the pen of Edward Peple's is admirably produced by Selig under the direction of Marshal Neilan. The story is well transposed into picture form, the settings and photography are good as is the acting. For a more extended review of this feature see page 1098 of the August 12 issue.

THE STING OF VICTORY (Essanay), Aug. 7.—A well visualized, well acted five-act photo-drama, the story of which hinges on the Civil War. Henry B. Walthall shows fine versatility in two of the leading roles, and is strongly supported. The photography is excellent, many of the scenes being of unusual beauty.

THE DAWN OF FREEDOM (Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature), Aug. 14.—A well-staged satire made from a story by William Hurlburt, and directed by Paul Scardon. Charles Richman plays effectively the role of Richard Cartwright, with Arline Pretty in the role of his sweetheart Elizabeth Bradbury, and in the modern portion of the story as Elizabeth McLean. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

"THE TRAP" (Horsley)

William Clifford makes his first appearance as the star of his own company with the presentation of the Centaur feature, "The Trap," a David Horsley production, which will be released by Mutual the week of September 2. It is an intensely dramatic offering with Mr. Clifford in a characterization giving him every opportunity for convincing and powerful acting, the story having been especially written for him by Alvin J. Neitz and Theodosia Harris.

The drama opens up in New York City during the broiling summer, and while a faithful husband plugs at his desk for the little woman he loves, she seeks the cooling surroundings of the seashore and likewise accepts the advances of a flirt. On the eve of her wedding anniversary the wife elopes with her clandestine lover and the husband denounces all women and starts West to live as a hermit of the hills.

The production is beautifully staged and many thrills are supplied by the famous Bostock animals, which are generously used throughout the story. Jessie Burnett is seen as the unfaithful wife, and Alva D. Blake shoulders the difficult part of the flirt in a convincing manner. Victor Rottman has an excellent part in the characterization of a love-sick tenderfoot. The direction is by Alvin J. Neitz.

"Jerry and the Bandits" will be served up as the comedy offering of the week under the Cub brand, with George Ovey starring. The release date is September 1, and it is one long laugh. Claire Alexander, George George, Janet Sully and Jefferson Osborne are the principals of the supporting company.

"THE MYSTERY OF THE RIVIERA" (Gaumont).

No studio sets or open-air displays can rival the celebrated carnival at Nice, France, which is used as the picturesque setting of Gaumont's "The Mystery of the Riviera." This is to be released as a Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, August 24. In addition to placing the action of the photodrama in surroundings of unusual beauty at a time when the whole world seems to be merry-making, a thrilling story has been provided for a remarkably strong cast of Gaumont favorites who were picked from the strength of the various stock companies maintained in Paris.

Carnival life is so different from American festal occasions—except the New Orleans fete—that "The Mystery of the Riviera" will undoubtedly afford great pleasure to those who see it. It is a photoplay that is different. There are pictures of the parade with its gorgeous floats, the thousands of gaily appareled people, and the celebrated masked ball which marks the height of the carnival.

"The Mystery of the Riviera" deals with the successful theft of a valuable sapphire necklace by an international crook who manages to throw suspicion upon the man who is in love with the beautiful woman who owns the gems. The thief is assisted by a woman who masquerades as a governess. As soon as the theft is discovered an astute detective is brought into the case. He is greatly interested, not only because he wishes to catch the thief, but also because he is anxious to clear the accused man.

"THE SHIELDING SHADOW" ON OCTOBER 1.

In order that more episodes might be completed to enable exhibitors to see them and plan a comprehensive campaign on the picture, Pathe will release the wonder-serial, "The Shielding Shadow," on October 1 instead of in September, as at first intended. Meanwhile work goes on at top speed at Pathe's studio and in Pathe's thirty branches looking toward the completion and efficient handling of the "Greatest Money Maker of Them All," as Pathe confidently expects "The Shielding Shadow" to be.

RUTH STONEHOUSE IN TWO FEATURES.

Followers of Bluebird will see Ruth Stonehouse in two features. In one she has been directed by Rupert Julian, who has devised a photoplay inspired by Mendelssohn's "Spring Songs." Her second appearance will be made in "The Saintly Sinners," just completed by the same director.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"Rolling Stones" Completed

Famous Players' Adaptation of Edgar Selwyn's Comedy-Drama Scheduled for Paramount Program on August 21.

THE Famous Players adaptation of Edgar Selwyn's celebrated stage success, "Rolling Stones," in which Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot are being co-starred, has been completed and will be released on the Paramount Program on August 21st. The adaptation was made under the direction of Del Henderson and marks that well-known director's first Famous Players picture.

Scene from "Rolling Stones" (Famous Players).

When "Rolling Stones" was reaping a harvest in New York, the dramatic critics declared that its popularity was due to the peculiar combination of emotions which the author succeeded in playing upon. The plot run the gamut of farce, near-tragedy, drama and comedy, and it is always the unexpected which is happening. With mixed identities, false claims and counter-claims, inheritances at stake, wives spying upon their husbands who are posing as bachelors, and everybody imposing upon everybody else—and with all this punctuated by hold-ups, burglaries and attempted suicides—it begins to sound very reasonable for the author to claim a slight variety of plot.

Of course the wickedest sounding incidents, such as the hold-ups and near-suicides are really the funniest sides of the play and it is not until the very end of this swiftly moving photoplay that one has time to calmly sit back and think what it is all about. One of the chief points of appeal in the picture is the fact that the action transpires for the most part in a boarding house—than which there is nothing which strikes a more responsive chord in the majority of metropolitan breasts.

In support of Mr. Moore and Miss Courtot there appear Alan Hale, last seen in support of Pauline Frederick in "The Woman in the Case," Denman Maley, Gretchen Hartman, Ida Fitzhugh and W. J. Butler. Mr. Moore is Dave Fulton, the less aggressive of the rolling stones, whose charming personality makes him lovable despite his occasional lapses from the strictest of ethical codes and his crass deception in posing as Jerry Braden.

Miss Courtot is Norman Noggs, about whom the whirlpool of fraud centers because, by marrying her under the name of Braden, Dave expects to inherit a fortune—and a candy factory. The candy factory furnishes some of the most exciting and amusing incidents of the play almost sharing honors with Mrs. Branigan's boarding house.

CHATKIN VISITS WESTERN EXCHANGES.

D. J. Chatkin of the United Film Service, Chicago, who are handling the Unity Sales Corporation's sixteen episode serial, "The Yellow Menace" in the West, is making a tour of the principal cities in his territory to direct the booking of the "Yellow Menace" through the Unity's branch office in Kansas City, Denver, Seattle and San Francisco.

FROHMAN TO MAKE "CONQUEST OF CANAAN."

The choice by President William L. Sherrill, of Booth Tarkington's novel, "The Conquest of Canaan," for the next feature release of the Frohman Amusement Corporation has given unusual opportunities to Director George Irving, because of the dramatic vividness with which the book is written.

In the two leading parts, Edith Taliaferro and Jack Sherrill will portray characters that Mr. Tarkington has made noble as they are original. In reading the book, which has exceeded a million copies, one of even small imagination is given the thrill of intimacy with real people living in a real town.

The characters so true to life and a story so varied and clean will have every advantage of making an exceptionally beautiful photoplay, with the splendid cast that has been selected and the technical ability of George Irving and Ralph Dean.

TO HANDLE "THE YELLOW MENACE" IN YORK STATE.

Israel Cobe has been appointed special representative for the Unity Film Service to handle "The Yellow Menace" serial and the other features put out by Unity in New York state. Mr. Cobe will look after the Unity branch offices, making his headquarters in Albany for the eastern part of the state, and Buffalo for the west. Mr. Cobe is well known to exhibitors in this territory and claims that he is going to make a record with "The Yellow Menace" serial.

"THE OATH OF A BOY SCOUT" (Gaumont).

There is not an exhibitor in America who will not be eager to show "Reel Life" No. 17, the Mutual Magazine in Film, since it contains interesting pictures of boy scouts at work and at play. The movement now numbers two hundred thousand boys throughout the country, and the work this non-military organization is doing has received the highest endorsement. Cameraman Walter Pritchard of the Gaumont company took the pictures at Glen Cove, L. I. The company which appeared before the camera was the one which recently was given so much publicity because of its celebrated hike to Oyster Bay, where it was addressed by Colonel Roosevelt. It is Glen Cove, No. 4.

Scene from "The Oath of a Boy Scout" (Gaumont).

The boys are shown on their way to camp, and then engaged in the various scout activities which are designed to make better men of them. A little story was prepared to hold the scenes together with greater interest. It tells of a boy who was a scoffer, yet who finally asked to join because he saw what a good time the boy scouts always had. He is taken into the camp and initiated into the mysteries of scout life. The picture will be released by Mutual, August 27.

On the same reel is a Gaumont tabloid, "What Would You Do If ———," and pictures of strange animals and reptiles found along the Rio Grande.

A BIT OF "GLORIA'S ROMANCE" (Kleine).

The latest chapters of the George Kleine motion picture novel, "Gloria's Romance," in which Billie Burke is the featured star, supported by an all-star cast headed by Henry Kolker, are fairly crammed with action. In fact it seems at times that the author, as though attempting to make up for the lack of quick development of plot in some of the earlier chapters, were putting enough thrill and sensation into these present episodes of the story to make three or four ordinary five-reel features.

Take Chapter Fifteen for instance. This is the portion of the story in which Billie Burke as Gloria finds herself imprisoned aboard the barge commanded by Gideon Trask, the man she has finally traced down as the murderer of Richard Freneau, her lover. Seeking a way to escape, Gloria sets about winning the confidence of Nell, the bargeman's daughter. She aids her in little household taks, and Nell finally permits her to assist in washing the supper dishes. The dishes washed, the girls set about folding up the tablecloth. And then Gloria sets her plan in motion. Like a flash she hurls her end of the tablecloth over Nell's head, draws the ends down and ties the helpless girl to a chair. One opponent at least has been eliminated. Noting a poker beside the stove, Gloria heats it white hot and prepares to face Trask himself when he shall descend from the deck above.

Trask comes, bringing with him a rope with which to bind Gloria. The pretty heroine of the Rupert Hughes novel then indeed proves her mettle. Threatening Trask with the red hot poker, she compels the bargeman to tie himself to a stancheon in the cabin and gags him with a dish towel. Jed, the mate of the barge, is then her only problem. Setting a rocking chair at the foot of the stairs, Gloria turns out the lights and waits Jed's appearance in answer to Trask's shouts for help. As foreseen by Gloria the chair trips the mate and Gloria is able to dash up the stairway and slam shut the hatch covering. She is free at last. But still greater peril is in store for her in later chapters, and theater audiences all over the country will be thrilled by the clever manner in which she outwits her captors.

WHARTON INTRODUCES NEW FILM TRICK.

The motion picture camera has been known to do some remarkable stunts, but it remained for Theodore Wharton, of Wharton, Inc., to make the lens do the apparently impossible.

The Whartons are producing the great photo-play series, "Beatrice Fairfax" for the International Film Service, inc. In the first eposide are two characters bearing a striking resemblance to each other. It is about this resemblance that the plot is woven. One of the charcaters is George McCabe, an honest bank watchman. The other is San De Fargo, a notorious bank robber. Both parts are played by the same actor, George Connors.

In one of the scenes, McCabe is lured into the robber's den and beaten into insensibility. His prostrate form is placed on a couch. On the opposite side of the room is De Fargo. One of the robbers, after helping place McCabe on the couch, crosses the room and takes De Fargo by the arm, for the purpose of accentuating the resemblance between the two men.

A double exposure could easily produce the effect of one man assuming both characters and being in the same scene at the same time. But the remarkable trick that Mr. Wharton performed was to have one of the men cross the room in the scene and touch both Sam De Fargo and George McCabe. It is the first time that such a thing has ever been accomplished. Theodore Warton is the only man who knows how it was done, and Theodore Wharton won't tell.

"THE VICTORY OF CONSCIENCE" (Lasky).

Cleo Ridgely, who for several months has appeared on the Paramount Program in Lasky productions as co-star with Wallace Reid, will be seen in the principal feminine role in support of Lou-Tellegen in the forthcoming production, "The Victory of Conscience." The author of "The Victory of Conscience" is Alexandro de Jannelli, well-known writer.

Miss Ridgely has appeared in Lasky productions for more than a year. She has played in support of many of the best known stars of the stage who have acted before the camera, but it was with the film production, "The Chorus Lady," that she opened a new field for herself. This filmed version of James Forbes' comedy brought together Miss Ridgely and Mr. Reid for the first time. Subsequently they were starred in "The Golden Chance," "The Love Mask," "The Selfish Woman" and "The House of the Golden Windows."

Lou-Tellegen, who is the husband of Geraldine Farrar, has acted already in two Lasky productions, "The Explorer" and "The Unknown." Mr. de Jannelli in "The Victory of Conscience" has given him a role for which his unique abilities are peculiarly suited.

The cast also includes Eliott Dexter, Thomas Delmar, Laura Wood and others.

"ARTHUR'S DESPERATE RESOLVE" (Universal).

Senator Vest of Missouri once wrote a very affecting poem about a dog, and Champ Clark from the same state turned songster in order to immortalize his houn' dawg, but Billie Garwood, the Universal star, has done more for his canine than either.

Garwood has introduced his mutt into pictures, put him into sub-titles and written a scenario half way around him. It all occurs in "Arthur's Desperate Resolve," a Universal-Victor release which will come out of the kennel on September 3.

"Arthur's Desperate Resolve" was written by E. J. Clawson and produced by Garwood, so the director had plenty of opportunity to have close-ups of his dog made as often as he desired. Mr. Garwood appeared in support of his pet, and Lois Wilson in turn supported Mr. Garwood. Alfred Allen, Edwin Bronn and Edward Brady also appear in the cast.

"AL FALFA'S REVENGE" (Paramount).

"Al Falfa's Revenge" shows how an English hunter took Farmer Al Falfa for a goat, and how the quick-witted farmer revenged himself by hitting the Englishman behind the ear with a rock.

The opening scene shows the lanky Englishman, attended by his colored lackey, struggling through the woods encountering wildcats, mountain lions, elephants and the like, some to be killed by the gun and some by the fumes of the hunter's pipe.

Al Falfa is giving himself a treat—bathing his whiskers in a nearby lake. This is the cause of all the trouble, for the hunter mistakes him for a goat and starts a rain of bullets directed at the whiskers, only to scare the life out of Al Falfa.

In the chase that follows Al Falfa surrenders, and upon close examination, the hunter, realizing his mistake, attempts to apologize, but the little farmer, not willing to accept the English way of doing things, ends the argument with bouncing a rock behind the hunter's ear.

"THE UNATTAINABLE" (Bluebird).

The Labor Day release on the Bluebird program will be a picture containing some unusual adjuncts to photoplaying. "The Unattainable," based on Elwood D. Hemming's story, was prepared for the screen by Eugene B. Lewis and Lloyd B. Carleton directed the production. The plot shifts from the Sierra Nevada Mountains to Broadway, its Western scenes involving 3,000 sheep in some of the cinematography. In the final act there is a hospital scene that demonstrates the interesting operation of blood transfusion, the details being worked out on scientific usage exactly as practiced in higher surgery. These scenes were taken in Universal City's splendidly equipped hospital, and the sheep were photographed on an immense grazing ranch at Chatsworth Park, Cal. There are many advertising advantages claimed for "The Unattainable," the advantage of an elevating love story in which the steadfast affection of a rugged shepherd wins out against the Scene from "The Unattainable" (Bluebird).

shoddy admiration of a Broadway millionaire, giving the picture an appeal to the better element in every community. In plot and manner of production Bluebird claims for "The Unattainable" the requisite elements for strong appeal to "picture fans" everywhere. Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson are introduced to the Bluebird program as featured players, with Richard Morris prominent in the supporting company. Roy H. Klaffik has accomplished some noteworthy achievements in photography, particularly in the out-of-door scenes among the foot-hills of the Sierras, where numerous "shots" encompass great flocks of sheep, grazing or "acting" in the various scenes.

"GIRL FROM FRISCO" STARTS WELL.

Kalem officials were unusually enthusiastic following reports received last week on the release of the initial episode of "The Girl from Frisco." "It exceeded our most optimistic expectations," declared one executive. "Though the number of prints ordered in advance topped even that for 'Stingaree' and 'The Social Pirates,' three of the offices reported inability to meet the demands."

In New York thirty-seven houses presented the intial episode, "The Fighting Heiress," as a first run attraction.

"PUBLIC OPINION" (Lasky).

A photoplay unlike any that has heretofore been produced at the Lasky studios, Blanche Sweet in "Public Opinion" will be released on the Paramount Program, August 17th.

Written especially for the star by Margaret Turnbull, the photoplay among its novelties contains a visionary character almost throughout its entirety. Miss Sweet, who continues as one of the most interesting personalities before the motion picture public, has been seen in Lasky productions as a ragamuffin, a member of a royal Russian household, a maid-of-all-work, an anarchist and now in "Public Opinion" she appears as a professional nurse on trial for murder.

How a sensational newspaper report prejudices the mind of the public against this young woman, who is absolutely innocent of all wrong, and how her whole future happiness is jeopardized by what is supposed to have been one false step, is shown in a gripping and entertaining manner.

One of the unusual features of this striking photodrama is the efforts of the spirit of the woman the nurse is supposed to have poisoned to direct the hand of justice towards the guilty person. Throughout the story until the murderer is finally forced to confess the spirit of the dead woman tries to bring the guilty to justice.

Miss Sweet is surrounded by a cast of unusual excellence, including such well-known players as Earle Foxe, Edythe Chapman, Elliott Dexter, Tom Forman and Raymond Hatton.

The production is one of the most lavish the Lasky Company has ever made. The big court room scene is an exact replica of that in which the trial was held upon which the story is based.

"THE SUSPECT" BARRED FROM CANADA.

The thorough-going extent of the implacable censorship set up by England and her Allies as the result of the World War was brought home to the film industry last week when a decree was signed in Ottawa, Canada, permanently barring from exhibition in the province the five-part Vitagraph feature, "The Suspect," which is being released through the V-L-S-E. "The Suspect" is a daring expose of the relentless system of espionage in Russia. It demonstrates in bold outline the severe, unyielding extent to which the Czar's officials pursue political offenders throughout the world, and how the Iron Heel descends upon those offenders against the Crown. In handing down the decree, the Canadian officials explained that "The Suspect" was condemned because of its obvious reflection upon the Russian political system.

"THE FACE IN THE MIRROR" (Essanay).

This is an intensely dramatic photoplay with rapid fire action and intense scenes throughout. It is the story of a rivalry in love, the treachery of a friend and the discovery of the treachery by the girl. The acting of the girl and the man she loved and lost and won again is splendidly carried out by the two principals, although the strongest action lies in the heavy parts, that of the treacherous friend and his accomplice. The story opens shortly after the marriage of the girl to the treacherous friend of the man she really loved, who had been sent to the penitentiary on a false charge. He, still, believing in the friendship of his rival, had advised the girl to marry him, hoping it would bring her happiness. Later he escaped from prison and his convict suit having been found on a body by a creek he is reported to have been drowned. When the girl is looking into her mirror she sees his face. She thinks it is a vision. Later she overhears her husband's accomplice threatening him with exposure if he does not pay him more money for his share in the crime. The woman holds the two men at bay with a revolver while she compels the accomplice to telephone the police and the newspapers. The husband ends his life just as the police arrive, and shortly afterward the former suitor comes to explain that he had exchanged clothes with a man who had been drowned and that it was he who looked into the window when the girl saw his reflection in her mirror. They begin life anew.

MANY NIGHT SCENES IN NEW LOCKWOOD-ALLISON PICTURE.

The five reels of "Mister 44." a new Metro-Yorke wonderplay in which Harold Lockwood and May Allison share stellar honors, embrace more than four hundred feet of film exposed at night. The night scenes depict several camps in the woods surrounding Lake Tahoe, California, where most of the exteriors for the production were made. Novel and unusual effects were obtained by Director Henry Otto and Cameraman Antonio Gaudio, through the use of baby Kliegl lights and radium flares. So carefully were the lighting arrangements planned that some scenes, when projected on the screen, show detail in the giant pine trees that stood more than 250 feet from the camera. A real camp fire in the foreground adds to the realism of the night scenes.

Most of these scenes were filmed on the grounds of Tahoe Tavern, a summer resort popular with California society folk. Naturally, when the stars and their satellites began work at night right near the Tavern, the society people flocked to the location. It was quite an experience for them, and they saw filmed much of the "night stuff," which included several close-ups of Mr. Lockwood, Miss Allison and Lester Cuneo, heavy leading man.

"THE FAR JOURNEY" (Selig).

William E. Wing never wrote a more appealing photoplay story than is "The Far Journey," released Monday, August 21st, through regular service of the General Film Company. The production was directed by Frank Beal and features Harry Mestayer and an all-star cast of players. David Bucklin, sore in spirit, writes to his wealthy father telling the father that he, David, has changed his name and had hidden himself away in a distant city.

David's sole means of support is his beloved violin. He sinks lower and lower in the social strata and finally is on the verge of starvation. He has given all his earnings to the education of a little girl whom in charity he has adopted.

The girl grows to young womanhood and through the advantages gained for her by David Bucklin becomes a famous prima donna. David's pride will not permit him to divulge his circumstances to his ward, who thinks he is wealthy. When she comes to see him he trades his violin for the use of an apartment and proper clothing and he has the girl believe the apartment is his.

How the girl finally comes to understand, how love finds a way to happiness and wealth for both David and his ward, contribute appealing action to an unusual motion picture play.

The scenic effects and photography are all that could be desired, and "The Far Journey" upholds the new standard set by the Selig Polyscope Company in General Film service.

THE PATHE FASHION PICTURE.

The answer to the question "What will the women wear next year?" is contained in the Florence Rose Fashions pictures released by Pathe. These pictures are of great interest to every woman, and Pathe's exchanges report heavy bookings among wide-awake exhibitors. They show the latest cut in bathing suits in Atlantic City, also the new hats and gowns to be worn by the women of the country next Fall. In other words, they are the medium through which Dame Fashion talks to the tens of millions of American women. They are prepared under the supervision of J. A. Berst, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, and Miss Florence Rose, one of the greatest fashion authorities in the country, and they show striking novelties. These are not the Fifth Avenue fashions and the Paris fashions which never get further west than New York. They are the fashions that the women in every city of the country will wear. Twenty of the prettiest girls in New York have been engaged as models for these fashion pictures. Some of the most prominent manufacturers in the United States have offered their support, and photographs for leading creations will be seen in Pathe pictures, after which the patrons of the motion picture theatre can see the actual garment at the leading store.

Metro's Fine, New Boston Exchange

Local Exchange Moves Into Its New Home at Corner of Church and Piedmont Streets and Has One of the Finest Offices in the Hub—Ample Facilities for Cleaning and Brightening Used Films One of Its Features.

By William M. Flynn, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, Mass.—The Metro Film Corporation has just moved into its new exchange building at the corner of Church and Piedmont streets. It is one of the finest and most modern built exchanges in Boston. The building is two stories high and covers over 10,000 feet of floor space. The front of the building is ornamented with fancy brick and the building is a fine example of the most modern fireproof construction.

Manager Louis B. Mayer is installed in a fine office on the first floor, with the offices of Assistant Manager Thomas Spry and publicity man W. E. Furber close at hand. The stenographers, bookers and bookkeepers have fine quarters on the first floor.

There is a model room for exhibitors. Two big Power's machines do the projecting for the run-offs. Forty to fifty exhibitors can be accommodated in the run-off room.

Two of the features of the building are found on the second floor. Here is the biggest moving picture poster room in New England. There are racks containing complete sets of one, three and six sheets for over 700 different feature productions. The posters are shipped from this room to all parts of New England.

A special feature is a cleaning room where the films are brought in every night from all over New England and are run through a specially patented machine that washes, rubs and drys the films. This guarantees the exhibitors against getting a dirty or unclean film. The films are then taken to the light and airy room where there are places for eight girls to inspect the films and see that they are all in proper condition to be sent out again.

There are six big film vaults each with a capacity of 630 reels. This makes the largest storage room for films in New England. The business of the Metro has gained so by leaps and bounds that the new quarters will be none too large to meet the increasing demands of Metro exhibitors all over New England.

Atlas May Build in Newton.

Newton, Mass.—Options on a site for a moving picture studio for the Atlas Film Company have been secured in Newton and the company is now getting bids for the construction of the studio. The company recently conducted a $1,075 scenario contest in the Boston Traveler and the scenarios are now being read by Leon Dadmun, the well known Boston photographer and moving picture man, who is one of the judges. The result of the contest will be announced by the first of next month. Mr. Dadmun is president of the Atlas Company, and speaking of the scenario contest he said: "When the public is given the opportunity to have a taste of the fruit of the labors of some of our contributors, I have no doubt it will be given a treat. When these films are produced they will be seen not only in New England, but in all parts of the country and they will be given a setting that will lack nothing in the finest productions that money can secure."

Green Lights to Rest Patrons.

Boston, Mass.—An innovation in motion picture theater equipment has been inaugurated at the Park theater by Manager Thomas D. Soriero in the nature of a scientific lighting arrangement devised to rest the eyes of the audience. Mr. Soriero obtained the services of leading optical authorities to devise a way to ease the eyes of patrons while watching the pictures. Experiments were made and the problem was finally solved with a green light arrangement. It was installed by E. C. Smith, electrician of the house, formerly connected with the Boston Opera House. The green light, or lights, for there are two of them, are on either side of the screen. They are lighted while the picture is going and prove a wonderful rest to the eyes, as their rays have the effect of absorbing injurious light movements coming from the screen.

Building Big Lowell House.

Lowell, Mass.—Ground has been broken in Lowell for the biggest moving picture house in the city. The theater will have seating room for 1,700 persons on one floor. The location is on Central street in the very center of the city and next to the American House. The theater will be devoted entirely to moving pictures. The Metro feature films will be the specialty of the house.

F. A. Grady Booked by Pathe.

F. A. Grady, the popular manager of the World Film Corporation, is booked to become manager of the Pathe exchange. Samuel Bernfield, of the Pathe company, is reported as going to the Pacific Coast.

Some Wide-Awake Advertising.

Boston.—F. A. Grady, manager of the World Film Corporation exchange in this city, scored a fine bit of publicity in conjunction with the appearance here of the five-reel photoplay, "Sally in Our Alley," featuring Muriel Ostriche and Carlyle Blackwell. Miss Ostriche is the original "Moxie" girl. Mr. Grady made a contract with the Moxie people to exploit Miss Ostriche's appearance here, and as a consequence a big Moxie advertisement two columns wide and ten inches deep headed all the amusement columns of newspapers in Boston for a week. The result was a crowded house daily at the Park theater, where the first run of Miss Ostriche's feature film was made.

E. J. Farrell May Change.

Boston, Mass.—It is reported on good authority that E. J. Farrell, one of the pioneer exchange men of New England, and for some years head of the New England interests of the General Film exchange, will take charge of another large film exchange upon his return from Nova Scotia, where he is now on a month's well-earned vacation. Mr. Farrell is one of the best known film exchange men in the country, and there is considerable speculation about the various houses as to what company he is to go upon his return to Boston.

McGuiness in Horstmann's Old Job.

Boston, Mass.—J. J. McGuiness, for some years manager of the Park theater in Worcester, has become booking agent for the Gordon theater circuit, the biggest moving picture house circuit in New England. Mr. McGuiness succeeds E. H. Horstmann, president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts, who recently retired from the Gordon-Olympia theater interests. There is considerable speculation as to what Mr. Horstmann intends to do. He has made a comfortable fortune in the moving picture business and it is expected that he will take up some new interests in the business in Boston.

M. H. Keleher With World Film.

Boston.—M. H. Keleher has been added to the salesmen staff of the World Film exchange and is now making a tour of Connecticut and Rhode Island. He was previously with the World Film office in New York, and before that was an exhibitor.

Work on Strand Begun.

Worcester, Mass.—Work has been begun on "The Strand," a new theater at Worcester, Mass. It is one of the best theaters in Worcester.

TO EXHIBITORS.

If you are doing something new and interesting at your theatre let our correspondent know about it. It may help others and help you as well.

Helpfully yours,

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

T. W. Dooley Heads Syracuse G. F.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Thomas W. Dooley has been appointed manager of the Syracuse Branch of the General Film Co.

Mr. Dooley is thoroughly familiar with the motion picture business, having managed the Syracuse office of the Greater New York Film Rental Co. for several years very successfully.

He was engaged as an accountant previous to entering the film business, which enables him to handle both the inside and selling end of the business in an efficient manner.

Mr. Dooley will be pleased to meet his friends at the office of the General Film Co. and assures the exhibitors that their wants will be looked after promptly.

British Columbia Letter

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver, B. C.

Good Pictures for a Week's Run.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Manager Hector Quagliotti of the Colonial theater, who recently booked Fox features for exclusive first runs here, has shown conclusively that even in a comparatively small city good pictures can be run with profit for an entire week without change. Backed by rather extensive advertising, Mr. Quagliotti puts each Fox production on for a full six days, and has done a consistently good business throughout the week. This is the first time that week runs for a regular program have been tried in this city, and so far the policy has proved its value.

During the run of the Fox "Carmen" the Colonial cashier and young lady ushers were dressed in Carmen costumes, and the innovation made a distinct hit with local patrons. It is Mr. Quagliotti's intention to carry out the idea of the picture in the dress of the attendants whenever the opportunity presents itself.

I. Soskin Visits With New Serial.

Vancouver, B. C.—I. Soskin, special representative of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., distributors of the Paramount program in Canada, was a recent visitor to Vancouver, having come to the coast in the interests of the Famous Players company's latest acquisition, the Clara Kimball Young pictures, and also of the Unity serial, "The Yellow Menace," which the Allens have also purchased for Canada. Mr. Soskin brought with him the first episodes of this production, and during his stay trade showings were held at both the Colonial and Globe theaters.

Mr. Soskin waxed enthusiastic over the Clara Kimball Young features, and expects to close a contract for them with a local house before returning east.

The w. k. special rep. was very ill on the train coming out to Vancouver and narrowly escaped death. This came as bad news to many of his rivals.

Ben Takes a Holiday.

Vancouver, B. C.—Ben Soskin, manager of the Famous Players' local branch, took advantage of his brother's presence here to take a holiday trip to Seattle, motoring over with friends for a short stay.

"Britain Prepared" Still Goes Well.

Calgary, Alberta.—J. H. Allen, manager of the Calgary headquarters of the Famous Players Film Service, reports that "Britain Prepared," the ten-reel official British picture, is still going strong in the Alberta territory, and breaking attendance records all over the province. Pat Fitter was in Banff recently, and was snapped by Burton Holmes in the same scene with the Duke of Connaught, who was being crowned chief of the Stony Tribe Indians. Three big days were also played at Medicine Hat, and Mr. Martin of the Rex theater, Kindersley, did a remarkable business with the subject. Two copies of this film are working in western Canada, and Ernie Watts and G. M. Colladay are on the road with it. Mr. Watts is to make Prince Rupert, Smithers, Hazelton and Prince George.

NOTES FROM TORONTO.

The Family theater, Chatham, Ontario, has been closed for repairs and renovation. It will be reopened on September 1st.

Owing to the delay in the arrival of materials, the new Regent theater, Toronto, which Mr. Leon Brick will manage, will not be opened until some time in September, it is announced. The opening was scheduled for August 5th.

Cash-Basis Plan in Toronto

Exchange Men Form Association and Notify Exhibitors That, Beginning September Fourth, Films Will Be Strictly C.O.D. to All Theaters Alike—Some Favorable Comment from Established Exhibitors.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street, E. Toronto, Canada.

TORONTO, Ont.—Finding that the percentage of bad debts has been out of all reasonable proportion to the total volume of business, the film exchange managers of Toronto have decided, without exception, to place the film industry, so far as they are concerned, on a strictly cash basis starting Monday, September 4th. On that date every exhibitor in Ontario, bar none, will find that he must pay all rental and express charges on reels before he receives them, according to the arrangements made by local exchanges.

Each of three hundred and fifty Ontario exhibitors has been notified to this effect, and, in connection with the new system, local film distributors have organized what is known as the Exchange Managers' Association. The twelve Toronto exchanges are represented in this organization and the members are bound to live up to the last letter of the cash basis agreement. Canadian photoplay renting companies having branches in Montreal have also agreed, it can be mentioned in passing, to a strictly cash business arrangement for the Montreal trade, the money-down plan going into effect in the eastern city on August 7th. With the case of the Toronto trade, however, the exhibitors are being given a month's notice regarding the cash system and, incidentally, a number of the exhibitors are making arrangements to meet the new plan.

A Vigorous Protest.

In connection with the announcement regarding the cash-first plan, several Toronto exhibitors raised objection to the idea. A meeting was held at which thirty theater managers swore to close their theaters, it is declared, unless the exchanges returned to or, at least continued their present time-payment policies. On the other hand, a number of exhibitors have taken the trouble to praise the Toronto exchanges for their action, as it will tend to discourage fly-by-night promoters and others with temporary intentions. One out-of-town exhibitor, for instance, declared that the step taken by the Toronto companies would eliminate competition which had been paying practically nothing for films for a considerable time through the habit of forgetting to pay bills. The example set by Toronto and Montreal exchanges will be copied throughout the Dominion, it is believed, as the branch exchanges in the various Canadian centers are closely related. The exchanges in St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver will undoubtedly fall into line at an early date.

The letters sent out to Ontario exhibitors by the Toronto film magnates point out that heavy losses have been sustained during the past year through bad debts and that this fact has impelled the adoption of the C. O. D. system of delivery. The saving of the losses will, it is stated, enable the exchanges to improve their services still further and the cash system will protect the interests of both exhibitors and exchanges, it is declared. "The unscrupulous exhibitor who secures service on false pretences will no longer be your competitor," is the statement in one letter seen by the Toronto representative of Moving Picture World.

According to the cash-basis plans, invoices for reels are to be sent out one week in advance, which will give exhibitors time to make remittances, otherwise a shipment of reels will be sent C. O. D. In the case of serials, one Toronto exchange at least requires payment in advance for each distinct episode or chapter, and, in addition, payment for the last two episodes must be made at time of signing of contract for booking. This payment is required to insure fulfillment of contract to the end of the story.

The Exchange Managers' Association, which has twelve members, has elected the following officers: President, Bud Lennon, Universal; vice-president, J. Travis, Pathe; secretary, Clarence Robson, All-Features, Limited, 56 King street, West, Toronto; treasurer, Phil Kauffman, Famous Players; executive: W. C. Gookin, V-L-S-E; Mr. Berman, World, and Mr. Barrett, Mutual.

The members of the Toronto association include the following: Canadian Universal Film Company, Specialty Film Import, Limited (Pathe); Famous Players Film Service, Fox Film Corporation, Standard Film Service, Ltd. (Metro); V-L-S-E, Inc.; Mutual ilm Corporation; All-Features, Limited; World Film Corporation, United Photoplays, Limited, and the General Film Company.

A second meeting of the Toronto association was held on Tuesday, August 8th, when the details of the cash-basis agreement were ratified by the members.

Camp Borden Notes.

Camp Borden, Ontario.—An attempt was made by the Provincial authorities to prevent the exhibiting of the Willard-Johnson fight pictures before soldier audiences at Ontario's great military camp, Camp Borden, but without success.

When Stanley Adams, the Toronto exhibitor, opened his large moving picture tent in Camp Borden he not only threw open the whole show free to soldiers, but provided ice cream cones in the bargain. It was a treat which was highly appreciated. Mr. Adams is using the Universal service.

M. S. Marvin, manager of The Strand theater at Camp Borden, is giving the soldier boys a lot of good pictures for their money. One night recently the program consisted of thirteen reels. Marvin's permanent theater building at Camp Borden was opened on Saturday night, August 5th, with a full house. Several staff officers were present as invited guests. The structure has seating accommodation for 2 200.

Worth Noting in Toronto.

Toronto.—E. A. Langley, formerly of the Specialty Film Import Company, is now in the employ of the Standard Film Service, Limited, the new Metro distributors in Canada.

A Toronto financial syndicate, represented by a Mr. Yolles, has bought Griffin's Hippodrome, Yonge and Shuter streets, and the house is now available for rental on a short-term lease. It is understood that new store and office buildings will be erected.

The Perkins Electric Company, Montreal, dealers in projection machines and theater supplies, have opened a salesroom a. 11 Temperance street, Toronto.

The Pathe serial, "The Grip of Evil," will be seen in Toronto starting August 21. The Mutual continuous release, "The Secret of the Submarine," will be shown first in Toronto shortly at Loew's theater. This house will have a three weeks' exclusive start with this serial, it is understood.

The Cosmopolitan theater, Yonge street, Toronto, is practically the only local house which has been closed for the summer. This theater has been put up for rent.

Newark News Letter

By Jacob J. Kalter, 501 Century Building, Newark, N. J.

Paralysis Epidemic Unbroken.

NEWARK, N. J.—The ban placed by the Newark Board of Health upon the admission of children under sixteen years of age has not yet been removed. Local exhibitors are clamoring for a let-up in the embargo, claiming that their theaters are kept in first-class condition. Since their houses are clean, sanitary and in conformance with all the rules and regulations of the Board of Health, the Newark exhibitors are at a loss to understand why their places of business must be the ones to suffer.

Plan Big Montclair Theater.

Montclair, N. J.—If the Montclair town authorities will grant a license to operate another moving picture theater in this town, the McNally Securities Corporation, incorporated in New York, will undertake one of the biggest building projects ever seen in Montclair. The New York concern plans to spend about $140,000 in the construction of a modern theater building to be erected on Valley road, between Bellevue and Lorraine avenues. The building is to contain ten stores and a moving picture theater seating 1,200. The whole building enterprise, however, will be abandoned if the town council refuses to grant another license.

Gainsborg Back from Vacation.

Newark, N. J.—Lee Gainsborg, popular manager of the Newark branch of the Universal Film, at 286 Market street, has just returned from a pleasant trip to Lake Hopatcong. Lee is now in fit condition to settle down to work again. "Great thing vacation is," says Gainsborg.

Atlantic City Men Arrested.

Atlantic City, N. J.—Twenty-one amusement men who have been keeping their establishments open every Sunday this season, were arrested last Sunday charged with violating the Sunday closing act. All were held in bail for a hearing later in the week. As soon as they were released the amusement men reopened their places and bade defiance to the authorities. If the city authorities persist in prosecuting them the theater owners say they will invoke the old "blue laws" and thus close down everything in the resort.

Rockaway Bereft of Pictures.

Rockaway, N. J.—With the selling of the Rockaway Lyceum this place will be without any moving picture theater whatever. The Lyceum was sold by the owners, T. Gordon Hoagland and Claude H. Miller, to Harry Avrick, who will convert it into a store.

Miss DeVoe at World Office.

Newark.—Miss Mildred DeVoe, of Brooklyn, has assumed charge of the office work at the World Film's Newark branch. Miss DeVoe succeeds Miss Helen Rothacher, who has been trasferred to the New York City office. Miss DeVoe's cheery disposition, her indelible smile and her attentive, courteous manner make her extremely popular with the numerous New Jersey exhibitors who frequent the World's office.

North Carolina Items

Fine New House for Winston-Salem.

By Clarence L. Linz.

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.—Sterling Smith has had plans drawn up for the erection of a new motion picture theater that will cost, it is said, in the neighborhood of $90,000. Mr. Smith formerly operated a motion picture show in the Elks' Auditorium, which building was destroyed by fire recently. It may be that his new house will be on the site of the latter.

Steve Lambert's Eureka Opens.

Fayetteville, N. C.—Steve Lambert has recently opened a very attractive motion picture theater here, known as the Eureka. He was assisted by J. I. Buck, traveling representative of the United Film Service, who made an interesting talk to the large number of colored people who constituted the "first nighters." The house will be run exclusively for colored patrons and Mr. Lambert contemplates giving them the best that is to be had in the open market.

Donation to Flood Victims.

Gastonia, N. C.—The motion picture exhibitors of this place donated 50 per cent. of their box office receipts for the first week in August to the fund being raised in Gastonia for the relief of the people of Gaston county, made homeless and destitute by the recent flood. All of the residents of the county able to do so have come forward with donations. The donation of the film men was highly appreciated and has caused considerable favorable comment.

Goldsboro, N. C.—H. R. Mason, formerly manager of the office of the World Film Corporation in Atlanta, Ga., will soon open the Acme theater here.

Flanagan, who formerly operated the Crescent, has been mustered into the service of the United States as a field officer in the National Guard of North Carolina for duty on the Mexican border.

NOTES FROM VIRGINIA.

New House in Durham, N. C.

NORFOLK, Va.—E. T. Craal, who operates motion picture theaters in this city and in Petersburg, is about to open a new theater in Durham, N. C. This house will be ready for opening about the first of October.

Make Booking Agreement.

Richmond, Va.—R. S. Loving, of the Victoria theater, and E. M. Knight, of the Pastime theater, in South Richmond, have solved the problem of competition by getting together on a sort of joint booking proposition under which there is no conflict of interests. It is said this pair form a novel sight when visiting exchanges in Washington together and making concessions one to the other with respect to the films to be booked for their houses.

Before they joined issues in this manner, it was not uncommon for either or both to show anywhere from five to twelve reels or more in the effort to kill the business of the other. While perhaps their co-operation is not so satisfactory to the exchanges, they find that they can save in film rentals alone from $25 to $75 per week. Their patrons are well satisfied with the shortened shows and the exhibitors are enabled to accommodate a larger number of patrons daily than heretofore.

Tidewater Amusement Incorporates.

Norfolk, Va.—The Tidewater Amusement Company, of this place, has been granted a certificate of incorporation by the State Corporation Commission. The capital stock is named at $15,000. The officers of the company are Jake Wells, president, and Moe Levy, secretary, both of Norfolk.

CAPITAL CITY NOTES.

V. H. Bendell, who was formerly with the General Film Company, has joined the Metro forces and has left for an extended road trip.

The Princess theater on H street, Northeast, heretofore only open on Fridays to continue the showing of "The Iron Claw" serial, has extended its program to cover Saturdays and Sundays also. Richard Waldron is manager of this house. He had figured on closing during the heated period but the requests for the continuation of the serial were such that he did not care to disappoint his patrons and as a result the house is doing a fairly good business.

Builders are at work remodeling the old Colonial theater on Pennsylvania avenue to make it suitable for store purposes.

Theaters, museums and concert halls of the United States paid into Uncle Sam's coffers during the twelve months ending June 30, 1916, the sum of $1,014,911.28, an increase of $224,914.21 over the same period ending June 30, 1915, when the receipts totaled $789,997,07. This information is contained in a preliminary report of Commissioner of Internal Revenue William H. Osborn submitted to Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo on August 14.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers was incorporated last week by certificate filed with the recorder of deeds. The society seeks to promote the motion picture art and advance the mutual benefit of the members. The incorporators are C. Francis Jenkins and Paul Brokett, both of Washington, and Herbert Miles.

W J. Gilmore, manager of the Animated Cartoon Exchange, of Philadelphia, was in town last week with the Mutt and Jeff cartoon comedies. Mr. Gilmore has recently opened an office at 1339 Vine street from which he handles all bookings in this territory. While in Baltimore last week he was successful in booking seventeen houses. He is planning to enlarge his activities for his exchange will shortly market the Katzenjammer Kids, and possibly other similar cartoon films. His territory includes Southern New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Washington C. H.—Action taken by business men and citizens of Bloomingburg, a nearby town, to furnish moving pictures every Thursday evening during the remainder of the summer free of charge, indicates that an enterprising exhibitor might find there a profitable field for the operation of a theater.

Fighting Proposed Federal Tax

H. B. Varner, Secretary of the League in North Carolina, Found Too Little Co-operation from National League and Manufacturers in His Fight Against the Proposed Tax Measure—Crandall, Lust and Wathne Stood With Him.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth Street, N. E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Following his visit to Washington, during which he conferred with members of the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee on the proposed tax of motion picture theaters, H. B. Varner, secretary of the Exhibtors' League of North Carolina, has submitted the following letter to President Percy W. Wells, of Wilmington, N. C.:

"Dear Mr. Wells:

"I returned from Washington, Saturday morning and did the best I could to have the proposed tax of one-half of one per cent. of the gross income of the moving .picture theaters removed from the revenue bill. Senator Simmons, chairman of the Finance Committee, and Senator Hoke Smith, chairman of the sub-committee, agreed with me that the proposed new tax should be eliminated, but they talked like the best thing to be done would be to substitute the present tax that we are now paying for the proposed new schedule. As Mr. Simmons remembered that I was instrumental in getting the old schedule reduced, he seems to think I am trying to run the affairs of the whole nation of exhibitors. I also talked to some other Senators who were in favor of knocking out the tax altogether and there is some hope that it may be eliminated. I did splendidly under the circumstances. I did not get any cooperation whatever from any of the officials of the National League or the manufacturers. The exhibitors in Washington City do not seem to know the meaning of the word 'cooperation.' I found one exhibitor in Washington, Mr. Crandall, who is interested and had talked to some of the Senators. I found Sidney B. Lust and Fritz B. Wathne were interested and willing to do anything they could. It was an exceedingly discouraging trip, to fight alone for the exhibitors of the nation. The national organization may become a power, but at the present time it amounts to very little. Enclosed find copy of request I made of Senators Simmons and Smith, and you may rest assured that if anything is accomplished before Congress in our favor, it was accomplished by North Carolina.

"Sincerely,

"H. B. VARNER."

Vacation Weeks in Filmdom.

Washington, D. C.—Arthur Robb, manager of the Garden theater, on Ninth street, has returned from a vacation of nearly three weeks spent in New York, Baltimore and Philadelphia.

Henry Martin, who has been acting as manager of the Garden theater during the absence of Manager Robb, has joined a party of fishermen who will try out their luck at Piney Point, Md., during the next two weeks.

Tom Moore, owner of the Moore string of theaters here, accompanied by Mrs. Moore, has left Washington on an automobile trip that will carry him across the Canadian line. The journey is to be made in easy stretches in Mr. Moore's new seven-passenger Pierce-Arrow, a veritable Pullman car with respect to the comfort it affords, and stops will be made at all of the large cities en route. After reaching Boston, they will tour through the Berkshire Hills.

Harry E. Reddish, of the Pathe Office, who covers Maryland, is spending his vacation at Atlantic City, N. J.

L. M. Day, president of the local Metro Film exchange, is in Atlantic City, N. J., attending a convention of Metro managers. Mr. Day negotiated the trip in his new Jeffrey automobile. Upon leaving Philadelphia he was accompanied by the manager of the exchange in that city. During the absence of Mr. Day, the genial Abe Dresner is in charge of the office.

Must Put Stamps on Express Receipts.

Washington, D. C.—The Democrats of the Senate are planning the reenactment of that section of the present war emergency revenue law which places a tax of one cent, payable by stamp, on each express and freight receipt, although it had been often said that these and other odious stamp taxes would be eliminated.

Now that there is a prospect of the reenactment of this measure, exchangemen and exhibitors should warn their shipping clerks or others having to do with the shipment of films by express, not to let a single shipment go out or be recorded on the receipt books without having attached thereto the required revenue stamp.

Hardships In Women's Eight Hour Law

Washington, D. C., Exchanges Disturbed by Indiscriminate Enforcement—Law Unpopular With Specialized Women Employes.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The managers of the motion picture exchanges of Washington are somewhat up in arms as a result of the working of the eight hour law for women in the District of Columbia. It seems that the city authorities have come to at least a temporary conclusion that motion picture exchanges are on a par with ordinary mercantile establishments and therefore the female employees thereof are not exempt from the provisions of this law.

The exchanges are willing to concede that the employees of the rewind department come within the provisions of the law, but they hold that those employed in the offices, which offices are sometimes shut off from what might be termed the mechanical departments, should not be so considered. However, as a result of the intervention of the law at least two highly specialized, well paid young women employees of one of the downtown exchanges have gone to other employment, at a lower rate of wage.

The manager of one of the exchanges declares that there is at least one day in each week when it is necessary for the girls to stay beyond the usual hours of employment to make out the weekly reports, etc. This would cause an evasion of the law for the one day, even though the employee might be compensated later in the week for that overtime.

The law is highly unpopular among those of the women of Washington who are desirous of earning the extra money that comes from overtime work. To them it is an injustice. It is contended that better judgment should be shown, especially in cases such as the one in question where the difference from conditions that the law aims to combat is so palpable and clear. The injustice of indiscriminate enforcement may be very galling.

Louisville Masonic-Strand Leased

Judge W. Allen Kinney to Use Well-Known Theater as Temporary Home for Legitimate Attractions While Macauley's Is Being Remodeled—Big Picture Productions Will Also Be Put on There.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—One of the most sensational announcements in Louisville for several weeks was that of Judge W. Allen Kinney, head of the Princess Amusement Co., operators of the Orpheum, Casino and Star theaters, that he had taken a temporary lease on the Masonic-Strand theater, and would operate the house as a legitimate playhouse for a few weeks until Macauley's theater, the Klaw & Erlanger house, is ready to open its winter season, the house now being under the remodeling process from top to bottom.

This announcement means that for the first time in nineteen years the Al. G. Fields minstrel show will open the season in Louisville at another house than Macauley's. The management of this company for years has started off the legitimate season by opening at Macauley's during the early part of September, this year it being September 4.

When the Field company received word that Macauley's would not be ready to open this year Al G. Field wrote to Judge Kinney asking him if arrangements could be made to start in some other house. Judge Kinney leased the old Strand, last winter a moving picture theater, and formerly used for various stage attractions, and has announced that he will handle all of the Macauley bookings probably up to the latter part of November, when that house will be ready to open. In addition to road shows a few big picture productions, such as "Civilization" and other big film spectacles may be shown.

Judge Kinney, with the assistance of his right hand man, J. Johnson Musselman, will manage the theater, Musselman attending to the publicity, and detail work to a great extent. Judge Kinney is the oldest moving picture man in Louisville, from actual years of experience, and has also had considerable experience in other amusement interests. However, the deal is a big one even for the Judge.

New Show Boat Burns.

Augusta, Ky.—One of the worst accidents recorded in Kentucky in several years in the moving picture industry was in connection with the fire on the "Illinois," a show boat which burned a few days ago while lying at the dock at Foster, Ky., near Augusta. Films in the booth took fire and caused a panic among the people watching the show. The boat rapidly took fire, and J. H. Reynolds, of the firm of Nichols & Reynolds, operators of the show, rushed through the flames to save his five-year-old son. Upon reaching the boy, who was enveloped in flames, Mr. Reynolds grabbed him and leaped into the river to extinguish the blaze. The boy was badly burned and had inhaled some of the flame, with the result that he died in a short time afterward. The Illinois was a new show boat, and had been operating on the Ohio for only a short time. There have been several accidents on Ohio River show boats during the past year or two.

New Campbellsville Houses.

Campbellsville, Ky.—Instead of this city having one small upstairs theater there will shortly be two first-class new houses opened on ground floors. One of these theaters will be operated by Joe Willock and W. S. Cloyd, while W. I. Meader will operate the other. Both houses will have artistic fronts and be attractively decorated and arranged inside, including stages and dressing rooms for road shows, vaudeville, amateur events, etc. The Willock & Cloud theater was formerly on the second floor. Campbellsville has a population of about 1,500 people.

Jake Northrop a Daddy.

Louisville, Ky.—Jake Northrop, a moving picture exhibitor of Towanda, Pa., who has been pitching star ball for the Louisville Club, of the American Association, is the proud father of a fine boy. Jake has already stated that the boy will succeed him as a diamond star and exhibitor. Incidentaly it has been announced that Northrop is figuring in a deal whereby he will probably go to the big league next year with Cincinnati.

Louisville, Ky.—The opening of the Palace theater, the new negro house at Eleventh and Walnut streets, has been delayed slightly due to failure of certain equipment to arrive on time.

Louisville, Ky.—Harry Bilger, formerly manager of the old Hopkins theater, now manager of Fontaine Ferry Park, is recovering from a nervous breakdown, and expects to get away from Sts. Mary and Elizabeth Hospital inside of a few weeks.

Louisville, Ky.—Louis Baum, who was recently in Louisville, in connection with the showing at Keith's theater of the film "Where are My Children?" is now manager of the Indianapolis, Ind., Bluebird office.

Asks Patrons Before Booking Serials

Louisville Suburban Exhibitor Takes a Vote Among People in His Neighborhood on Special Serials as They Come Up.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—The Cherokee theater, one of the suburban houses of Louisville, has undertaken an interesting plan of selecting serials and big films which have been run in the downtown houses. In many cases people living in the suburbs have seen one or two episodes of some big serial, and would go to see every performance at a suburban house if the film was booked. Therefore the management of the Cherokee, before booking any of the big serials, prints a coupon on its weekly program which is distributed throughout the neighborhood, and takes a vote of its patrons to see whether the picture is actually wanted or not.

In the case of the "Iron Claw," the management said: "Here is your opportunity! How would you like to have the Cherokee show the 'Iron Claw,' the serial of thrills and excitement?

"If you have read the newspapers you know how interesting and absorbing it is. If you have seen one or two episodes we know that you will be glad to ask the management of the Cherokee to show this big serial. Don't neglect the opportunity to vote if you are interested, as the picture will be secured if sufficient names are handed in."

Of course some people think that this kind of advertising is merely a little boosting, but the company is actually using this system to find out how the public stands, and recently announced after a voting contest on another one of the big serials of the day, that the management had decided not to book the film, as the patrons of the theater had not shown enough interest in filling out the coupons to warrant the company to go to the expense of booking the production. According to the management of the house it was either a question of not enough people being interested or that they felt that their signature wouldn't count. Many people believe in letting the other fellow do the voting, and as a result no one votes. However, the plan appears to be an excellent one.

Memphis Exchange Men Associate

New Organization Formed to Bring About Better Conditions in Local Film Business—Spirit of Co-operation Is In Evidence and the Exchanges Hope to Be of Much Benefit to Bona Fide Exhibitors.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—The formation of a Mutual protective organization, known as the Associated Film Exchange Managers, is an advanced step toward the betterment of the industry in the South. The association was organized as a means of protection to both exhibitors and exchange men, with especial regard to the regulation of credits and for abolishment of the fly-by-night exhibtor. The new organization is composed of a number of the most prominent exchanges in this section, including the United Film Company, Mutual Film Corporation, General Film Company, Monarch Film Service, and the Consolidated Film & Exchange Company.

The managers have pledged themselves to make the association of general benefit to the trade, and the spirt of cooperation is much in evidence, with enthusiasm running high. According to Manager A. H. Kaufman of the United Film Service, the associaton will be conducted strictly along business lines, and he prophesies a winning organization for the Memphis film men. The members recently dined together at the Gayoso Hotel, and discussed business questions, the principal subject being "Undesirable Customers." Those in attendance were Messrs. Abe. Kaufman, manager of United; Thos. James, Consolidated; C. M. Brown, Mutual, and Burt King, General. Much is expected from the Associated Managers.

New Building Law Prevents Panic.

Nashville, Tenn.—An actual demonstration of the feasibility of the new building ordinance recently enacted by the City Commission was had when fire broke out in the operating booth at the Strand theater on August 2d. The new law provides that no theater shall be constructed with the operating room in the front of the house, but that all seats must face the entrance, with the screen toward the street. The Strand was the first theater erected under these provisions, and it was due largely to the new arrangement that no panic ensued when a dense smoke quickly filled the auditorium, for the crowd was compelled to move away from the fire instead of toward it. The blaze started during the showing of "The Scarlet Road," when the film broke and became entangled in the projection machine, spreading quickly to a nearby pile of reels and destroying film to the amount of $2,000. The equipment was damaged about $200 worth, and all losses were covered by insurance. Operator C. L. Wheeler was painfully burned about the hands. Operator Carter was also slightly burned.

New Feature Department for United.

Memphis, Tenn.—Due to the fact that the regular service customers are keeping Manager Kaufman of the United Exchange very busy, a special feature department has been opened in connection with Warren Shorts, who is handling the entire South on the two features, "The Whirl of Life," with the Castles, and "The Melting Pot," starring Walker Whiteside. The Memphis office of the department has been placed under the management of C. R. Carnahan. Mr. Shorts is at present in Dallas, handling Texas and Oklahoma, and reports great business. The Castle picture just closed at the Majestic here, with capacity business.

Tennessee Topics.

Chattanooga.—Manager F. H. Dowler, of the Signal Amusement Company, spent a busy week in New York, during which time he visited the offices of Metro, World, Paramount and Fox.

Chattanooga.—F. E. Denton, manager of the Dayton, Tenn. Airdome, put in a day at Chattanooga, making advance bookings.

Nashville.—House Manager Clyde Felts of the Elite is back on the job after a severe illness.

Memphis.—Wm. Oldknow of the Consolidated Film & Exchange Co. was in town last week.

Nashville.—Two visiting managers in the city were Messrs. C. R. Dean of Columbia and F. B. Wilson of Jackson.

Nashville.—W. E. Sipe, from the Atlanta office of Consolidated, spent several days in the city with his feature, "Where Are My Children."

Among Tennessee Exchanges.

Memphis.—Jas. O. Ford, traveling representative for the Memphis branch of General, is now on a final trip through Arkansas. Mr. Ford states that practically every exhibitor he called on through northern Mississippi and Tennessee, and southern Kentucky, claims business is slow just now on account of the extreme hot weather. S. J. Wood, former road man for the New Orleans office of General, arrived August 7 to take up where Mr. Ford leaves off.

Memphis.—All exchange employees, from managers to porters, have been to the doctor during the past two weeks. No, not sick, just getting shot with typhoid serum.

Chattanooga.—During a trip to Chattanooga, C. R. Buchanan, Atlanta representative of the Southern Metro, went over the fall business prospects with Manager Arthur S. Dickinson of the local office, and laid plans for a big campaign soon to be launched.

Cleaner-Film Crusade in Detroit

Local Newspaper Scores Certain Theaters for Puttting on Risque Films and Takes Special Exception to the Nude—Mayor Threatens and Is Supported by League Members—Interesting Interviews.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Michigan.

DETROIT, MICH.—The periodical crusade against the showing of indecent motion pictures is now under way in Detroit, and came as the result of front page articles in the Detroit News in which several photoplays were "panned" unmercifully. The News commented about the indecency of the pictures also in several editorials. Those houses which specialize in the showing of such pictures—and there are not over a half dozen in Detroit—naturally resented such adverse criticism, yet on the other hand the hundreds of exhibitors who are endeavoring to show clean and wholesome photoplays were in hearty accord with the crusade, because they feel that indecent pictures not only reflect on the house showing them, but on the entire motion picture industry of which they are a part.

Following the newspaper criticisms, the mayor cited the managers of two houses to appear before him on Tuesday morning, August 8, at which time he told them that they must either clean up or get out of business. He also insisted that "No Children Admitted" signs in front of theaters must be abolished.

League Members Support Mayor.

On Wednesday, August 9, four representatives of the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League called on the mayor and assured him that they would support an effort to eliminate the cheaply suggestive and immoral film from Detroit photoplay houses. One thing is absolutely certain; unless Detroit theaters do clean up there will be local censorship in the not far distant future, because the public will demand it.

The World correspondent called on the mayor following the visit of the league exhibitors, and this is what he was told: "It has always been the policy of this office to be broad-minded and most liberal in the handling of the motion picture houses, despite the fact that we have received many complaints against certain pictures. In fact, we are receiving complaints right along from mothers and fathers who have taken their children into certain theaters and then found something that was unfit for them to see. Notwithstanding these complaints, we have continued to be lenient with the theaters, contending that what one mind might consider unfit, another would see nothing wrong in it. However, of late some of the theaters have really gone a bit too far in the showing of what might be called "indecent" pictures, and when we investigated we found that often the pictures were not as bad as the posters and signs in front of the theaters. These managers purposely paint the picture as bad as they can in their signs in order to get the morbid crowds, and I wonder if these managers realize that such posters are a direct insult to the respectable men, women and children who daily have to pass their places of business. Detroit exhibitors must clean up on their posters and on their pictures; if they don't they alone will suffer the consequences."

Against "No Children" Signs.

Then the World representative called at the editorial department of the News, which paper is responsible for the crusade against indecent motion pictures. And this is their side of the story: "Every so often we inaugurate a clean-up campaign against vice of all kinds, and this time we had to include the indecent photoplays in this crusade because certain theater managers were becoming bolder and bolder, both in their grade of film and their advertising matter. We have had to throw out more than one advertisment from our columns because the reading matter and the story of the film was unfit. We also object strenuously to theaters who have to advertise 'No Children Admitted.' Everybody in the family takes a glance at the newspaper. Yet managers expect us to run suggestive reading matter and when we refuse they tell us that the educated minds of men and women would understand and would not object, but they don't realize that children—boys and girls—also would read such matter and would not understand, and furthermore, it is not the kind of reading matter that young minds should have. Not in many, many years can we recall where the dramatic playhouses ever used such sensational and obscene posters or where the managers of such theaters asked the newspapers to run so much suggestive and indecent reading matter as at the present time with the motion picture houses. After all, is it necessary for motion picture houses to show pictures of nude women to secure patronage? Too much nudity appears under the guise of art. The producers of to-day are turning out films of astounding nakedness. They are attempting exhibitions which would never be permitted on the speaking stage. And they are doing it in the name of 'art.' No doubt some of these films are artistic, but does the public view them in the same spirit in which it visits an art gallery? The answer lies in the crowds which flock to see such movie exhibitions and the empty corridors of the museum. The light opera stage has been cleansed; the burlesque theaters are now undergoing the process; it should be applied also to the movies."

Permits No Children Performers.

Detroit, Mich.—The state labor commissioner of Michigan has notified owners and managers of Detroit motion picture houses through one of his deputies that children under sixteen years of age will not be permitted to appear on the stage of such theaters. A law prohibiting their appearance has been in effect for a number of years, but has never been strictly enforced. The commission now says that the law will be carried out to the letter and asks that theaters therefore comply with the ruling.

Arthur Hoganson, formerly with the Broadway Feature Film Co., and Gillingham & Smith houses, in Grand Rapids, is doing special work in connection with Mutual serials through the Detroit office.

Another Gilligham Theater in Detroit

Plans Are Being Prepared for New House on Adams Avenue West—Owner Hugo Scherer Will Lease to Gilligham.

DETROIT, Mich.—The World is the first to announce that Detroit is to have still another downtown theater which will require an enormous investment and which will be for motion pictures, according to present plans. This house will be located in the rear of the Fine Arts building on Adams avenue west, between Woodward and Park streets. The auditorium will be on Elizabeth street, while the entrance proper will be from Adams avenue, facing Grand Circus Park.

C. Howard Crane, with offices in the Dime Bank building, is now designing the theater for Hugo Scherer, who owns the property, and who will erect the theater, leasing same to A. J. Gilligham, of Detroit, and John P. Harris, of Pittsburgh. The seating capacity will be around 2,000, while there will be a lobby capable of holding another thousand people. Work on the enterprise will start early this fall and will be completed some time in the early part of 1917. A. J. Gilligham owns the Empire theater, at 189 Woodward avenue, and also operates a chain of theaters in Grand Rapids. Mr. Harris is well-known as a theatrical magnate, controlling houses in Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, as well as other cities.

Ambitious New Amusement Co.

W. M. Patch, of Pittsburgh, Announces New Operating Concern to Put on Big Films—Pitt Theater in Pittsburgh and Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia Its First Properties—Will Have Other Theaters.

By Pittsburgh News Service, 6013 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—Announcement is made by William More Patch, of this city, of the formation of a new concern to operate with big feature pictures the Pitt theater, at Penn avenue and Seventh street, Pittsburgh, and also the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia. The proposition is backed by prominent persons in Philadelphia and Washington, but will be under the direct guidance of Mr. Patch, who will continue to make his headquarters here. Negotiations are now under way for similar arrangements with the owners of theaters in Detroit, Baltimore and Cleveland.

The Pitt theater is one of the largest and finest houses in the country devoted to screen dramas staged on an elaborate scale. It has been under the management of Mr. Patch for the past year and a-half, and during that time marked success has been scored with many notable productions. A lease has been secured on the Pitt, while the Chestnut street opera house, Philadelphia, is to be conducted by an arrangement with the lessees of the property. The latter theater is now being renovated and new seats installed to bring it up to a high standard of comfort and beauty. The Pitt is likewise undergoing some improvements, including the re-arrangement of the stage on a more lavish scale and redecorating the interior and lobby, which will be completed before the reopening date, August 28. The Philadelphia house will not be ready for opening before the middle of September or the first of October.

The first attraction at the Pitt theater will be "The Birth of a Nation" for a three-weeks' run, this being its second run at the Pitt and its third in Pittsburgh. Next the ten-reel Metro production of "Romeo and Juliet" will be shown for two weeks, beginning September 18. Mr. Patch will follow this with the Thomas Ince peace film, "Civilization," and then the Annette Kellerman spectacle, "A Daughter of the Gods." As soon as the Philadelphia house is opened the same pictures will be shown there, simultaneously with their appearance at the Pitt. A number of pictures running in New York and productions that are still in the making have been contracted for. Accompanying all the pictures will be a symphony orchestra of thirty-two pieces. The same scale of prices will be retained during the coming season, the admission being 25 to 75 cents at matinees and 25 cents to $1 for the evening performances. James H. Carroll is continuing in the capacity of house manager of the Pitt, and practically the same staff as heretofore will assist Mr. Patch.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Making Arsenal Theater Beautiful.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Arsenal theater, Butler and Main streets, Pittsburgh, of the Rowland & Clark chain, is being remodeled and converted into one of the most beautiful houses in that section of the city. The exterior will be transformed by a marble front of pleasing design, while a foyer of the same material will be installed. New decorations inside and out will also greatly increase the attractiveness of this theater. A new illuminating system, with side lights, new floor covering and other improvements are to be carried out. The work is not interfering with the evening business, although the matinees are discontinued for the time being. W. J. Bernardi, manager of the Arsenal, is personally looking after the details.

Geo. Logue Takes Over the Evaline.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Evaline theater, at Penn avenue and Evaline street, has been taken over by George Logue, a well known exhibitor of the North Side. New equipment is being installed and the house redecorated in preparation for opening in the near future. The Evaline was built about two years ago by Page Brothers, a real estate firm, and was later sold out to Harry Mintz. It was conducted by Mr. Mintz until last summer; since which time the theater has been dark. The Evaline is a medium sized house and excellently located in a populous residential section.

Fleckenstein Building in Phillipsburg.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—A modern 800-seat theater is being erected at Phillipsburg, Pa., by G. J. Fleckenstein. The foundations have been laid and the house is expected to be ready for opening about January 1. It will be of fire-proof construction and up-to-date in every respect.

Geo. W. Lederer, Jr., Weds.

George W. Lederer, Jr., of the Pittsburgh Mutual exchange, was married recently to Miss Beatty Grimsley, of Monessen, after a courtship of only a few days. Mr. Lederer came here from New York several weeks ago in the interests of the Mutual. On July 30 he attended the outing of the Pittsburgh Screen Club at Wexford Park, where he first saw Miss Grimsley. The following Friday, five days later, the two went to Wheeling, W. Va., and were made man and wife. Mr. and Mrs. John Stout, of the Wheeling Mutual office, acted as witnesses.

The Crystal theater, Braddock, Pa., has been closed for remodeling and will remain dark for about two weeks. The theater will be generally overhauled, redecorated throughout and new equipment added.

There has been a large number of Seeburg pipe organs installed in leading moving picture theaters in the Pittsburgh district during the past few weeks, with the general preparation for the opening of the autumn season. The Dome theater, Washington street, New Castle, now has a Seeburg pipe organ, which cost $10,000 to install. The Mirror theater, Mt. Oliver, recently acquired a Seeburg Style S. The Luna theater, Sharon, has just purchased a $5,000 Seeburg, to be installed soon.

Al. W. Cross, of the Hudson Feature Film Company, Pittsburgh, has been visiting at Altoona and Harrisburg, en route to New York City, where he is now spending a ten days' vacation. Mr. Cross will combine business and pleasure, it being his intention to look over the feature picture market while in the East.

Buffalo Strand's New Manager

Earl L. Crabb Succeeds Harold Edel, Who Goes to New York's Strand.

By Joseph McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—"Our policy will be unchanged for the present, but later, as I get better acquainted with our patrons, I will inject new ideas that will meet the demands of the public."

This was the statement made by Earl L. Crabb, who has just been appointed manager of the Strand theater, Buffalo, to succeed Harold Edel, who, as already announced in this column, has gone to the Strand, New York. Mr. Crabb came here from the Casino moving picture theater, 58 West Madison Street, Chicago.

"The Casino is in a busy section," said Mr. Crabb. "Some claim a million persons pass that theater every day. Our lobby was always crowded with people waiting to see the show and we had to handle the crowds with speed and good judgment. At the Strand, as at the Casino, I will nearly always be found at the front of the house, where I can mingle with our patrons, study their wants and see that everybody is satisfied. In the future, as in the past, the Strand music will be the best obtainable. The music of the Strand orchestra and pipe organ is famous. In connection with these no changes are contemplated. Although the weather has been very hot, business has been holding up wonderfully. People can enjoy our shows in comfort because our theater is very cool."

Mr. Crabb has had a wide experience in the moving picture business. He has directed moving pictures, worked the camera, developed films and taken out several patents pertaining to moving pictures. He has also owned his own theaters. For five years, beginning in 1902, he managed penny arcades in Indianapolis for the present owners of the Strand. He then opened two moving picture theaters for himself in Fort Wayne, Ind. He later sold his houses and next went with Carl Laemmle in the film exchange business. He has been associated with Mr. Laemmle for several years.

"The newspaper campaigns at the Strand have been very extensive," said Mr. Crabb, "and we intend to increase the publicity."

Fire in a Kenmore Theater.

Kenmore, N. Y.—The Elite moving picture theater, Kenmore, a suburb of Buffalo, was recently damaged by fire. The interior of the house was ruined. A. Pappalardo, who operates the house on a lease from the owner, Fred B. Eberhardt, lost $1,000. Mr. Eberhardt's loss was about $4,000. Both are insured. The building was formerly used as a public gymnasium.

Mutual May Cut Prices Here.

Buffalo, N. Y.—G. H. Christoffers, manager of the Buffalo Mutual office, and his road representatives had an important meeting on Sunday. It is rumored that plans for a reduction of prices of the Mutual pictures were discussed. While Mr. Christoffers declined to be specifically quoted on this subject, he said: "The Mutual is ready to meet competition throughout our entire territory, and our men are prepared to clean up the field with big orders."

The Mutual exchange is open twenty-four hours every day. In the night time exhibitors who find the front entrance, 106 Pearl street, closed, may gain admission at 64 Erie street. The Mutual is arranging for an exceptionally strong booking on Charlie Chaplin in "One A. M."

Many Picture Theaters Reopen.

Buffalo, N. Y.—It is reported that the several large moving picture theaters in Buffalo, which recently closed on account of the hot weather, will open on or about August 20th.

"We shall open the Allendale on that date," said Charles Bowe, manager. "The house has been thoroughly renovated and our feature programmes will be bigger and better than ever." The other houses that will open this month include the Elmwood, Victoria, Ellen Terry, Marlowe, Frontier and Circle.

"The people have been fasting from pictures for a few weeks, and they ought to crowd our houses this fall," is the way one exhibitor expressed his views on the subject. The Bijou theater, Canandaigua, N. Y., and the Bijou, Salamanca, N. Y., recently closed on account of the extreme heat in these cities. The closing of several of the big theaters in Buffalo has helped business at the theaters at Crystal and Erie beaches and at the airdrome which recently opened at La Salle, N. Y.

Buffalo News Items.

Buffalo, N. Y.—G. J. Diefenbach, traveling representative of the Buffalo branch of the Exclusive Features, has returned from a New York State trip. He booked "The Unwritten Law" in several cities.

The Fairy Film Co. of New York recently took pictures of Oswego, N. Y., school children, appearing in the production, "The Old Woman and the Shoe." The film was later shown in that city to obtain funds to help build a club house for the Home Symphony Club, Oswego.

An optimistic letter that throws light on the bright prospects for the film business this fall was recently sent by John Child, traveling representative of the World Film, Buffalo, to J. R. Levy, manager of the local offices of the company. Mr. Child wrote from Courtland, N. Y., where he booked Dillon Bros.' Courtland theater. He said in part: "Everything looks fine. I believe we will be swamped with business when cooler weather sets in. They are all hearing about Brady-made pictures."

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kennneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati, O.

Local V-L-S-E Notes.

CINCINNATI, O.—Manager C. E. Holah, of the V-L-S-E exchange, had the honor recently of entertaining Assistant General Manager A. W. Giff, who visited Cincinnati on a trip taken for the purpose of getting an accurate grasp of the general situation. He was enthusiastic over the strides which the "Big Four" have been making, and left for New York prepared to speed up the entire organization in order to meet the increasing demand for pictures to be handled on the open booking basis which the V-L-S-E has established. Incidentally, Manager Holah has been strengthening his own organization materially by the addition of some first-class material. Paul Allison, formerly manager of the Paramount exchange at Indianapolis, is now covering that city for the V-L-S-E, traveling out of Cincinnati, while R. O. Laws, formerly Paramount manager in Cincinnati, is booking manager in the V-L-S-E office.

Publicity Man for Local Paramount.

Cincinnati, O.—A Department of Publicity is the latest thing in the Paramount organization. Manager W. C. Bechmeyer, of the local exchange, which is known as the Famous Players Film Service, has appointed J. Maurice Ridge as publicity manager in this vicinity. The idea is having national application in Paramount exchanges, in line with the company's policy of keeping its productions and progress before the public as prominently as possible.

Business Notes.

Cincinnati, O.—The Cincinnati Motion Picture Company has sold to the Y. M. C. A. Department of the Kentucky National Guard, encamped at Fort Thomas, across the river from Cincinnati, two complete portable "portoscope" projectors, designed for use in showing moving pictures in camp.

Urbana, O.—The film dramatization of Hall Caine's "The Eternal City," with Pauline Frederick in the leading part, was seen recently at the Lyric theater, where it drew heavily. The picture was booked several months ago, but the print in use in Ohio was destroyed by fire and had to be replaced.

Cleveland Union's New Demands

Increased Wages and Changes in Working Conditions Asked by Local Operators—Will Mean Considerable Increase in Expenses to Most Theaters, Though Some Are Now Paying More Than the Union Scale.

By Hubert Persons, 410 Standard Theater Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—Demands for increased wages and changes in working conditions have just been submitted to the owners of 150 moving picture theaters in this city by the moving picture machine operators, affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E. The demands, signed by M. B. Winton, president of the local union of the operators, are prefaced yith the declaration that the same have been ratified by the International Alliance and the Cleveland Federation of Labor. The operators want the new wage scale to become effective September 3.

The demands are as follows:

Section 1.—All theaters in our jurisdiction running evenings and one matinee per week shall pay $20 per week. Should the matinee run continuously to the time of the evening performance, the operator shall receive 75 cts. for supper hour and shall not work more than nine hours. Extra matinees to be paid for at the rate of $2.50, not to be over four hours.

Section 2.—All theaters running a daily matinee and evening performance shall pay $30 per week, matinees not to exceed four hours and evening performances not to exceed four hours. This section shall not apply to theaters running one reel or less to each performance.

Section 3.—All theaters running ten hours per day shall employ two operators, each working one-half of the total time and each to receive $20.50 per week.

All theaters running twelve hours, two operators, each $24.

All theaters running fourteen hours, two operators, each $26.50.

All theaters running sixteen hours, two operators, each $30.50.

Section 4.—Special entertainments for Sundays and holidays, etc., and for shows less than one week, shall pay $3 for each performance, said performance not to exceed four hours. Setting up and taking down machines in connection with these performances shall be charged for at the rate of $2.50 for each machine.

Section 5.—All overtime to be paid for at the rate of 75 cents per hour, or fraction thereof. Overtime in connection with theaters in Section 3 shall be computed by adding the total amount of time per week and charged pro rata.

Section 6.—All overtime where said time is not taken to finish a performance and shall be used for rehearsals, trying out film, etc., shall be called broken time and paid for at the rate of $1 per hour or fraction thereof.

Section 7.—Two operators working at same theater at the same time shall receive the same scale as when working alone except where an assistant operator is required for special entertainment, etc., as in Section 4; said assistant shall receive 50 cts. per hour.

Section 8.—Operators engaged for road work shall receive scale as required by the wage schedule of the International Alliance at the time he is engaged.

Section 9.—Operators shall not be permitted to carry film, banners, posters, etc., to or from theater or film exchange either with or without compensation.

Section 10.—Eastern Standard time shall be recognized in accordance with this wage scale.

These demands were submitted to the exhibitors individually, but unlike the demands made a year or so ago, the operators have this time recognized the exhibitors as a body and have sent a copy of the demands to the Northeastern Ohio Moving Picture Exhibitors' League. The demands were discussed at a meeting of the league August 7, but because the copy had just been received no action was taken.

If the demands are granted it will mean an increase of several dollars a week in the operating expenses of most houses. Some, however, are now paying more than the union scale.

Committees have been appointed to consider the matter with the operators. It is not known whether the exhibitors will act in a body or treat with their individual employees.

C. R. Seelye Visits Cleveland.

Cleveland, O.—Greater centralization of interests in the moving picture industry is predicted by C. R. Seelye, business manager of the Pathe company, who has just passed through Cleveland on a tour of the principal cities of the country.

While here Mr. Seelye also announced that in addition to C. E. Shurtleff and A. M. Holah, formerly in charge of the V-L-S-E branch here, J. A. Conant and Paul H. Tessier had also come over to the Pathe exchange with Shurtleff and Holah.

"Snow White" Shown.

Cleveland, O.—"Snow White," a fairy moving picture play with more than five hundred Cleveland children in the cast, has just been completed by Charles H. Weston, director general of the Regent Photo Play Company, a new organization. The picture was given a private showing before a group of club women and educators August 14. The play was completed in six weeks and no child more than fifteen years old was used. Weston says his next picture will be "Swiss Family Robinson," and that he wants to use 2,000 school children in the cast. The company will make only children's films and will picturize many world-old fairy stories.

Success Film Company Formed.

Cleveland, O.—Robert H. McLaughlin, president of the Reserve Photo Plays Company has just announced the incorporation of a new moving picture concern. It will be known as the Success Film Company, and has purchased a picturesque farm in Geauga County as the site for a modern studio.

Mr. McLaughlin will be president of the new concern. He will be associated with H. O. Van Hart, of the First National Bank; A. C. Reinecke, broker, and E. J. Maska, of the Cleveland and Youngstown Railroad. The company is said to have purchased the rights to twenty plays and it is understood will build theaters in Cleveland, Pittsburg, Chicago and New York.

Cleveland, O.—Officials of the Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation have just announced that Paul Panzer, villain in "The Perils of Pauline," has been engaged to take the leading male role in the Sunbeam's first picture, "Hyphenates." Panzer has long been associated with George Ridgewell, the Sunbeam company's director.

C. A. Meade Heads Local V-L-S-E.

Cleveland, O.—Charles A. Meade, who has been manager of the Dallas, Texas, branch of the V-L-S-E, is the new Cleveland manager, succeeding C. E. Shurtleff. Before becoming affiliated with the V-L-S-E organization he was with the General Film company and has handled the state rights for some of the biggest film productions on the market.

"No Children" Sign--Another View

Kansas City Film Men Discuss Shades of Meaning Implied by the "No Children Admitted" Sign—Several Approve It as Promising an Adult Show Free From the Annoyance of Youthful Prattle.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—That sign "No children admitted," has caused a good deal of discussion in Kansas City; and the sentiment in regard to it varies as widely as the purpose of the people who use the sign.

C. G. Bard has put this prohibition over the New Rialto, and now it is over the Columbia. But the injunction is in these cases not primarily a bid for the attention of those who look for risque stories. Another film man, who approved the sign, said:

"The sign means primarily, to most men and women, that they will not be disturbed by children in the theater; that they will be allowed to sit and look at the film, and listen to the music, entirely undisturbed. Naturally, children could not pay the close attention to problem plays and such pictures as are being shown, as they would to comedies; but if the prohibition as to children were not made, many women would bring their small children to the houses, to the discomfort of others. Boys and girls of 15 to 18, who go where they please, would not get the best there is in these pictures; and they would grow restless, half understanding, and half misunderstanding.

"It is for the protection, therefore, of the patrons, adults, as much as for the protection of the children themselves, that the prohibition is imposed. And if you will talk to the patrons, you will find that nine out of ten of them appreciate the theaters having such signs, for the exemption from the annoyance of children under these circumstances."

Screen Club's New Quarters.

Kansas City.—The Kansas City Screen Club will hold its first meeting soon in its new quarters, and there will be a celebration, the nature of which is being kept secret. Special attention is being given the decorations of the quarters, and they will be such that visitors will remember them pleasantly.

A House That Caters to Women.

Kansas City.—The new Columbia theater, formerly the Tenth street, has opened as a house catering to women, with "The Little Girl Next Door." C. G. Bard, manager, did some excellent work in connection with the picture. For instance, he secured moving pictures of the red light district of Kansas City in its present state—it has been abolished as a red light district—and these were run for comparison with the scenes of the story. He secured also recommendations of the pictures from prominent social workers, most notable being the statement of Nat Spencer, secretary of the Society for the Suppression of Commercialized Vice, who declared: "It is my personal opinion that every man and women should see this great picture."

United Branch in Omaha.

Kansas City.—A branch of the United Film Service has been stationed at Omaha, Neb. William Beckenstein has been put in charge of the branch. Joe Levy, manager of the Kansas City exchange, announces that the branch at Omaha will handle only the advertising of "The Yellow Menace."

R. C. Cropper to Have Assistant.

Kansas City.—As a result of R. C. Cropper, of the local exchange of the Universale Film & Supply Co., being made district manager of the Mid-West Universal territory, which includes the exchanges at Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha, Oklahoma City, and five branches which come under these exchanges, Mr. Cropper will have to do considerable traveling. So B. O. Reese, who has had charge of the detail and correspondence work of the office, has been made assistant manager, to take Mr. Cropper's place when he is traveling. Mr. Reese had worked in the local exchanges of Kansas City for some time before he came to the Universal office and his experience will fit him for the place.

From Local Exchanges.

Kansas City.—At the latest regular meeting of the salesmen of the V-L-S-E, August 5 and 6, the following were in attendance: J. M. Kilinsky, Oklahoma; R. L. White, Iowa; Y. Darnell, Kansas; J. E. Storey, Missouri; Milton Field, Nebraska; F. F. Gettinger, A. J. Reed, Kansas; R. N. Abbey, General Salesman, L. J. Scott, manager of the publicity department, E. R. Pearson, manager, and F. F. Nine, who has charge of the booking department. The question as to how the Kansas City branch could better its operation was discussed to a broad extent.

Roy Bettis, who left his position at the United Film Service to go to the border, will return some time in November, according to a letter received in Kansas City.

M. A. Levy, president of the United Film Services, with D. Chatkin, left Kansas City recently, which branch he had been visiting on a trip which will include every exchange in the western territory. "The Yellow Menace" will be particularly advertised in free picture exhibits given for the benefit of the exhibitors of the respective localities.

C. W. Potter, who has been working at the Kansas City office of the Universal Film & Supply Co., has been added to the forces of the United Film to work in the publicity of the new serial.

MINNEAPOLIS NOTES.

By G. Carroll Johnston, 802 Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis.

Foster Brings Chinatown Subject.

St. Paul.—"Doc" Foster, formerly connected with the Gaiety theater here, has returned to the city after an absence of five years spent in San Francisco. Foster brought back with him a feature film on San Francisco's Chinatown. While on the Coast Foster was an official guide in the Chinese districts and had the feature film taken for his exclusive use. He has released the film through S. R. Thompson of the Feature Film Company, and has one print booked almost solid until the 1st of September.

V-L-S-E Cuts Melon.

Minneapolis.—Twelve hundred and fourteen dollars in profit-sharing checks was distributed among the fifteen employees of the Minneapolis V-L-S-E exchange. The $1,214 was part of the national distribution fund which is divided among V-L-S-E employees every three months. Twenty per cent. of the profits of the "Big Four" are divided among its employes every quarter, and despite the fact that ninety-two persons were added to the national forces since April 8, the fund increased 40 per cent. The Minneapolis "Big Four" office under the management of C. W. Sawin, reports an increase in business every week for the past seven.

Atlanta Censors To Have More Power

Will Now Pass on Screen Productions and Many Things Connected with the Stage, Both Vaudeville and Legitimate.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Avenue, Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—The power of the Atlanta board of censors now under direction of the Carnegie library, is to be extended, under a proposed ordinance, not only to passing on the morality of moving pictures, but also to passing on the moral features of costumes and speech of actors and actresses appearing on the theatrical stage, and costumes of the silent drama also. The ordinance committee of the Atlanta Board of Aldermen passed favorably on the ordinance Tuesday afternoon, and it now goes to city council for indorsement.

Georgia May Tax Shows.

Atlanta, Ga.—Moving picture shows and vaudeville houses will have to contribute to the support of the State government if the bill of Representative Jones, of Coweta County, is made a law. The bill was introduced in the House, Friday morning. It provides:

> Upon every manufacturer or producer of motion picture or moving picture films in the state of Georgia an annual tax of $200 shall be levied, and upon each and every picture, electric show or exhibition of moving or motion pictures, or illustrative songs, and each and every place where vaudeville performances are given, either with or without electric shows or moving pictures, a tax of $7.50 per month for each and every show or exhibition which has a seating capacity, seats or chairs, for not to exceed 200 people.
> The gradation of taxes runs until the house with a capacity of over 500 people will have to pay $25 a month.

"Contest" Bill Passes Senate.

Atlanta, Ga.—Senator Wohlwender's "popularity" contest bill brought forth considerable debate Friday in the Senate of the Georgia Legislature, but carried by an overwhelming vote.

Briefly, it prohibits the holding of any so-called "popularity" or "beauty" contest involving the soliciting of votes for a prize of any sort, by any newspaper or other business enterprises. It is aimed directly at newspapers and publications who have been holding moving picture and other contests.

Early in his speech Senator Wohlwendere offered an amendment to his bill under which weekly newspapers would be exempt from the law's purview. He said the bill should apply to dailies, and he did not think contests conducted by weeklies are harmful.

Senator Edwards, of Haralson said he formerly was proprietor of a weekly himself, and "I know what sort of contests the weeklies 'pull off' sometimes; and they are just as bad as the dailies. I'm for the bill without the amendment."

The amendment hadn't a chance of enactment, but the bill was voted against by only about ten Senators.

Decatur, Ill.—Six hundred names were submitted for the new moving picture theater which Joseph Allman has let the contract. "Alma" was a name favored among the judges because it suggested the enterprising exhibitor, who is putting up the new $30,000 house.

Rock Island Theater Burns.

Rock Island, Ill.—Damage of $500 was done by fire in the moving picture theater at 904 Eighth street, which is operated during the winter months by R. H. Griffith. A projection machine and several thousand feet of film were saved.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Theater Stands Up for Rights

Nicholas Theater of Council Bluffs Will No Longer Be Imposed Upon by All Kinds of Police Badges Flashed at the Door—"Straw Bosses" of the Street Repair Work Will Now Have to Pay Like Other Citizens.

By Frank H. Madison, 628 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.—Exhibitors who have been grafted upon by municipal employees of all kinds who flash police stars and demand free admission will admire the courage of the management of the Nicholas theater, which has protested to the city council against this abuse. The city officials have promised an investigation.

"What right have the 'straw bosses' of the street repair work to wear police badges and 'flash' them when entering places of amusement?" asks the Nicholas. "What right have officers, regular and special, to enter these places of amusement, taking in their familes, neighbors, sweethearts and other persons? A member of the street repair department claims he is an officer and has the right to go into these places of amusement and also has the nerve to say he shows his badge at the theaters in Omaha and gets in by doing so. These entertainments cost the managers money to present to their patrons, it is the commodity they buy and sell the same as a merchant buys and sells them to his patrons. Now would these city employees go into a store and take the merchant's goods? When we want protection we have to hire a special officer and pay him for his services. We are willing to permit regular police officers and firemen free admission, but we do not propose to admit their families and others, or special policemen, street repair men or street supervisors, without paying the same as anyone else."

Donahey Theater Reopens Soon.

Council Bluffs, Ia.—Barney Gillinsky will use only moving pictures in the old Donahey theater, which will be opened some time in September, but provision has been made for adding vaudeville if it seems politic. The remodeling work was delayed by a fire early in the summer, but recent progress has been rapid. The efforts of the management to make it one of the safest houses in Iowa in case of fire have won the commendation of the State fire marshal. There are no turns in the stairs to the balcony and there are two exits from the balcony leading direct to the outside. On the main floor there are four main aisles and four emergency exits. Some of the possible seating capacity has been sacrificed in order to give each patron plenty of room. The outside lobby is to be studded with electric lights set in bevel plate mirrors. The house will accommodate well one thousand patrons.

Will Film Hospitals in Europe.

Waterloo, Ia.—Dr. Joseph A. Jerger, of this city, accompanied by Mrs. Jerger, has been making arrangements for a 34,000-mile tour of the Orient. He will take with him a motion picture camera and will make films in the great hospitals of the East. As his itinerary includes Russia and Siberia and possibly some other European countries, he expects to get some good pictures of the surgical methods used in the larger war hospitals. He also will vist Australia, where at Sydney he will work among the returned Anzacs or Australian territorials.

"Nation" Film in Airdome Pays.

Storm Lake, Ia.—"The Birth of a Nation" was shown here al fresco. Manager Skiff instead of exhibiting the film at the opera house, secured the big auditorium at the Chautuauqua park, and with the increased capacity was able to make the top price at $1, instead of $1.50. The film ran three days, August 14, 15, 16. Getting the famous attraction at a time when roads were good for motorists and showing where patrons could be comfortable was a good bit of managerial ability.

Changes in Iowa Theaters.

Clarion, Ia.—W. F. Smith, having disposed of the Cosmo theater at Goldfield, will devote his entire time to the Colonial theater here.

What Cheer, Ia.—Charles Chapman of the Hadley theater at North English, has leased the Masonic opera house for a year.

Centralization in Eau Claire

All Photoplay Houses in City, Except the Orpheum, Now Under One Control.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

AU CLAIRE, WIS.—Centrally controlled moving picture theaters began operation in Eau Claire August 1. All the photoplay houses except the Orpheum theater on the north side are now under the same general management. One of the first steps was the closing of some of the houses during the warm weather and diverting the business to the other houses where patrons could be given better programs. July was a losing month and under old competitive methods August would have been probably more disastrous.

The business will be carried on by the Eau Claire Theater Company. Mike Homs of the O'Klare theater is the prime mover. The company takes over his theater as well as a real estate business. The Unique and Lyric theaters have been purchased from Hiller Brothers. The Grand opera house, used for theatrical attractions, has been leased. B. J. Bostwick will remain there as manager. All the films for the three picture houses wil be booked by H. A. Schwann.

The directors of the company are Emil Weinfeld, Mike Hons, H. R. Johnson, G. J. Lange and C. D. Moon.

Wisconsin Theater Changes.

Edgerton, Wis.—P. W. Palmer, of La Crosse, has taken over the Lyric theater.

Phillips, Wis.—Neuman's opera house has been leased to M. C. Martin.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Construction of the new $14,000 moving picture theater which the Pearl Amusement Company will erect at Fourteenth avenue and Mitchell street has been started.

Benton, Wis.—C. M. Vail is erecting a theater here.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The work of razing buildings for the new Plankington theater at Second and Sycamore streets has started. The theater project alone calls for the expenditure of $1,000,000. The place will seat 1,800.

Menominee, Wis.—Manager H. C. Inenfeldt has completed changes at the Majestic theater which includes increasing the seating capacity of 250 and redecorating.

J. B. Dugger Heads Local V-L-S-E.

Takes Charge of the Dallas Office When C. E. Meade Is Transfered to Executive Position in New York—Has Steadily Risen to His Present Position in the Dallas Office Through Proven Business Ability.

By E. E. Belcia, 902 West 2d Street, Ft. Worth, Texas.

DALLAS, TEX., July 28th.—Among the most important news of the week is the many shifts in film circles here. C. A. Meade, manager of the V-L-S-E in this city since its organization, left to-day for New York City, and it is reported by rumor that he will hold one of the executive offices in the sales end of that organization either there or will have some office of the V-L-S-E under his jurisdiction. C. A. Dugger, for some time past his handy right hand man in the Dallas V-L-S-E office, was appointed manager of that office before Mr. Meade left. This young man is one of the coming men in this territory, having only been here a short time and creating a host of friends throughout the state who wish him the best of everything in his present post.

J. B. Dugger.

Films on Interstate Circuit.

San Antonio, Texas.—L. B. Remy, manager of Triangle Film Corp. at Dallas, Texas, was among this week's visitors, and while here closed a contract whereby the Interstate Amusement Company will use Triangle first run pictures in their Majestic theater (formerly an exclusive vaudeville house). The Majestic will use Triangle films Mondays and Tuesdays of each week, the vaudeville bill not starting until Wednesday. It is understood that this arrangement will greatly facilitate matters on the Interstate time, as they will not now experience the difficulty of moving their entire bill over night on long jumps across the State. This is the first time Interstate houses have changed even for a day to exclusive picture house. Alfred Raymond, formerly of Keith's, in Detroit, will be manager of the Majestic here the coming season. We understand that the Grand theater (Jack Burke, manager) that heretofore has had first run Triangle will run second run Triangle during the coming season on the open dates not filled with the big road attractions. The Majestic will open on August 13.

Other Dallas visitors this week were: O. L. Shields, of Navasota; Miss Bowen, Navasota; Ben Lewis, Tyler; Ben Meyer, Tyler; Mike Levine, Corsicana; Jno. Sayeg, Ennis; Geo. Bell, Galveston; Tom Gaines, Hillsboro; Jno. Morris, Jacksonville; Pierre Levy, Fort Worth; E. A. Self, Mineral Wells.

Mr. Mussleman, of Paris, was here today and reports that since the Paris fire he has been showing in a tent, but that his $50,000 1,000 seating capacity picture house will be ready on September 1st and that he will open it with a Triangle program. He has not yet decided whether he will install a pipe organ or big Wurlitzer instrument.

The Strand will open under the management of A. E. Wittles at an early date, it is understood. The policy of the house has not yet been learned.

Policy Change at the Wichita.

Wichita, Falls, Texas, July 28, 1916.—The Wichita theater, owned by Messrs. Moskovitz Bros., now under the management of Sol Dann, formerly a strictly road show house, commencing September 1st will change policy and present two days of Interstate vaudeville. The other four days will be devoted to feature photoplays, which will make the Wichita one of the foremost amusement places of the city. Sol Dann was formerly with Forest Park Highland, Louisville, Ky., and is also well known in Memphis, Tenn.

Lydia Margaret Closed.

Wichita Falls, Texas.—The Lydia Margaret theater, one of the oldest and best known exclusive picture houses of the city, which has a seating capacity of over 1,000, was closed recently. It is understood that Messrs. Wrenn and Berry, formerly owners of this theater and also the Majestic, have dissolved partnership—Mr. Wrenn retaining the Majestic. It is not known what disposition will be made of the Lydia Margaret. Mr. Berry has removed to Fort Worth and engaged in the automobile business. This marks the passing of one of the best known exhibiting firms in this part of the State.

Ben Lewis Now in El Paso.

El Paso, Texas.—The Grecian theater, Lewis and Andreas, owners, have announced that Ben Lewis, formerly manager of the Old Mill theater, Dallas, and Liberty theater, Houston (both Hulsey houses), will be their future manager. He has been succeeded in Houston at the Liberty by Harry Northfleet. Mr. Lewis is one of the best known figures along picture show row in Dallas. He inaugurated the "Lewis System" for picture theater advertising many years ago.

Soldiers Here Good Spenders.

El Paso, Texas.—More than 45,000 U. S. soldiers are encamped in and around this city. Pay day was on the 19th, and ever since that date the city has been packed and jammed with soldiers eager to spend their money. Needless to say, the picture houses are doing capacity business, and many fly-by-night airdromes, etc., are trailing the camps up and down the river.

E. H. Hulsey Gets New Mercer.

Dallas, Texas.—E. H. Hulsey, owner of the numerous Hulsey theaters throughout the leading cities of the State, recently bought a new Mercer high-powered roadster to be delivered by water at Galveston, Texas. Mr. Hulsey, accompanied by his general manager of publicity, Herchel Stuart, went to Galveston and received the car and drove it to Dallas, a distance of almost 300 miles, making the trip in less than a day's time, notwithstanding the fact that a stop was made in Waco for several hours and that this was the first time Mr. Hulsey had ever driven the car. Mr. Sydney McDonald, of Galveston, treasurer of the Hulsey Enterprises, accompanied them on the return trip. It is said the 70-mile-an-hour mark was reached on nearly every stretch of good road. That's "goin' some."

Road Notes from Dallas.

J. L. Lynch, of the Lynch enterprises, is also a Dallas visitor this week.

Among the road men here for the week end is Ed. Kennedy of Gloria fame, Al Raymond of World, Harry Botto of Triangle, C. E. Momand of World. All report fair business for the past two weeks, notwithstanding the recent hot weather has hurt business considerably over the State.

T. B. Newman, auditor of the World Film Corporation, has been here for past week.

Operators' Union Increase Scale.

The Operators Union have increased their scale, and it is understood only two or three of largest houses have signed up new contracts—the smaller houses feeling that they are unable to stand the increased scale, which they believe is prohibitive. The trade in general is watching with interest the outcome of the controversy. It is understood that in Oklahoma City that non-union operators have already been put to work by the leading houses of that city.

Peebles Wins Medal.

Dallas.—Harry T. Peebles, known throughout filmdom as a "live wire," and now the popular manager of the Houston branch of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, had the honor and distinction recently of winning the medal and cash bonus offered by the company, having placed the largest amount of business on the books of his exchange of any other branch office manager. Mr. Peebles has been in charge of the Houston office since the early part of May, but with his business-producing qualities the Houston office is setting a hard pace.

Hulsey Publicity Man Visits Houston.

Houston.—R. Rocco is to open another colored theater. This will make ten colored theaters in Houston, which is probably more than in any other city in the South.

Movie Inn in Omaha Store

Local Screen Club Now Makes the "Inn" Its Regular Meeting Place.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

OMAHA, NEB.—A "Movie Inn" in a department store is an innovation in Omaha. It is in the Brandeis stores, which have fittingly equipped a room that appeals to those interested in the photoplay—both as business men and as patrons.

The place had its formal opening when Proprietor R. C. Phelps gave a dinner to the Omaha Screen Club. The result was that the club has passed a resolution making the new "Inn" the regular place for its Thursday meetings.

Prominent among the portraits of photoplay folk are Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin, Holbrook Blinn, Henry B. Walthall, Edna Mayo, Francis X. Bushman and Mme. Petrova.

Sunday Evening Films in Church.

Hooper, Neb.—Rev. W. W. Whitman, pastor of the Methodist church at this place has installed in his church a projection machine, and every Sunday evening during the summer will use religious and educational pictures in connection with the regular services. T. C. Shipley, a local electrical contractor, who made the installation, will have charge of the projection.

Nebraska Notes.

Crofton, Neb.—The Star theater was badly damaged by fire after it had been struck by lightning.

Central City, Neb.—The new moving picture theater here, which will be managed by D. L. Donelson, will be known as the Donelson theater.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA NEWS.

Roseville, Cal.—The Dorris theater has been sold to J. E. Edmonds, formerly of Los Gatos, Cal., and this house has been combined with the Rose theater.

Del Monte, Cal.—Moving pictures are now being shown in the famous Del Monte Hotel, Paramount service being featured.

Manager George E. Chamberlain.

San Francisco, Calif.—The accompanying photograph is a splendid likeness of George E. Chamberlain, manager and owner of the Independent Film Exchange, 122 Golden Gate avenue, one of the best known and most popular exchange men on Film Row. Mr. Chamberlain is a friend of the small theater owner and understands his needs, having been an exhibitor himself for several years, and his stock of films is particularly adapted for use in small houses, churches and educational institutions where high rental prices cannot be paid.

His experience in the moving picture field began at Portland, Ore., in 1909, where he opened a small store theater and in the four years that he was an exhibitor he had no less than five houses. In 1913 he went to Honolulu with R. E. Hasbrook, and the Independent Film Exchange was opened there. Late that year he returned to San Francisco and a film exchange of the same name was opened in the Grant building at Seventh and Market streets, the Honolulu exchange being continued for a time. Later the local exchange was moved to 116 Golden Gate avenue, and recently a change was made to better quarters a few doors away.

Geo. Chamberlain.

Mr. Chamberlain has in stock many productions made several years ago. He selected the choicest of these, and believes that a good picture, no matter how old it may be, has its place on the program of an exhibitor. He has made a large collection of films of an educational nature and finds that there is a steady demand for them. A large country business is done and much of this is secured without the services of a road man, prices having been made attractive to exhibitors. He is a charter member of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco and is always ready to lend his assistance to any movement to benefit the film industry.

Children's Matinee Idea Grows

In Berkeley, California, and Around San Francisco Bay, Exhibitors Are Beginning to Note the Success of the Beach & Krahn Strand Theater's Special Matinee Shows for Children—How the Movement Started Here.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, California.

BERKELEY, CAL.—The children's matinee at the Strand theater conducted by Beach & Krahn, at College and Ashby avenues, has become an established institution in the college city and has made such a pronounced success that exhibitors in other cities around San Francisco Bay are commencing to give the proposition of special performances for children more attention. This plan was adopted by Beach & Krahn shortly after the opening of the new house and after being operated for a year is more of a success than ever, the results greatly exceeding expectations.

Saw the Demand for Special Shows.

The idea was originated following a campaign by Berkeley club women for better films. During this campaign the censorship question was brought strongly to the front and H. L. Beach, who was then president of the Exhibitors' League of California, appeared before various organizations and spoke against censorship, with the result that the idea was dropped. The need for a special performance for children was strongly impressed upon him, however, and the cooperation of several Mothers' Clubs was enlisted to assist him in placing the plan he had formulated in operation. The women are consulted as to the suitability of the films presented and they make up a list of subjects they desire to have shown. Permission has been secured to announce the matinees in the public schools of the city and the theater has thus become a widely known place of amusement, instead of merely a neighborhood house.

Strand Is in Residence District.

The theater is located in one of the most exclusive residence districts in Berkeley and children from many of the wealthiest families attend the matinees regularly. This location in a measure accounts for the success that has been met in featuring a matinee for children at 10 cents, instead of 5 cents, as is usually the case. In speaking of this Mr. Beach said: "It is no easy matter to secure films regularly for a program of this kind and more time and energy is expended in booking subjects than is the case with our regular shows. No objection has ever been made to the 10-cent price, and frequently we have an attendance of from 600 to 700, practically filling our house. Six reels of pictures constitute the regular matinee program, as compared with seven in the evening."

A few adults always attend the matinee performances, but these are outnumbered twenty to one by the children. Either Mr. Krahn or Mr. Beach are always on hand to preserve order, but little difficulty is experienced in this line. The children are allowed to make as much noise as they please, as long as it is in the nature of applause, but are kept to their seats as much as possible to prevent confusion. When an especially attractive program is offered, club women may be seen bringing the children to the theater by the automobile load and many families permit their children to come here unaccompanied, knowing that special care is taken of them and that suitable pictures will be shown.

Visual Instruction Broadening.

Berkeley, Cal.—The Bureau of Visual Instruction, of the University of California Extension Division, has completed its first year's work and is now ready for the second season. Many new films are being added and the work of the bureau will be greatly extended during the coming year. Moving picture equipment is now being added to most of the large schools of the State and many of the country districts are now being served by traveling outfits. Wallace Hatch, secretary of the bureau, is endeavoring to interest the manufacturers of the State in having moving pictures made showing the methods employed by them and delivered a very interesting talk some time ago before the Home Industry League of California at San Francisco on "How Manufacturers May Extend Information Concerning Their Industrial Processes to the People and tothe Future Buyers of California." Many fine films made for use at the Exposition at San Francisco last year have been turned over to the bureau and some will be made this year for its special needs.

To Enlarge Factory.

San Francisco, Cal.—The American Photo Players Company, for several years located at 130 Kearney street, but which has recently fitted up splendid new quarters in the Film Exchange building at Golden Gate avenue and Jones street, is preparing to enlarge its large factory at Bonar and Addison streets, Berkeley, Cal. An addition is to be erected at once, covering a ground area of 200x100 feet, and the added space will be given over to the pipe organ department.

Opens Factory at Los Gatos.

Los Gatos, Cal.—The Masteroll Perforating Machine Company has removed its equipment from the Kohler & Chase building at San Francisco to this city and will shortly commence the manufacture of music rolls for use in connection with moving pictures. General Manager F. L. Grannis recently returned to the Coast after spending four months in New York and Chicago.

Five Cameragraphs at the Rialto.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Rialto theater has just added two new Powers No. 6 B. Cameragraphs to its equipment, making five of these machines in all that are installed in this house. The two new ones have been set up in a reviewing room on the same floor as the operating room and here all pictures shown at the house are carefully reviewed by the management.

Supply House Issues Noteworthy Book.

San Francisco, Cal.—G. A. Metcalfe has just commenced the distribution of a compendium of moving picture theater equipment called the "A. B. C. of Moving Pictures." This is an illustrated work, arranged in a very comprehensive manner, and a heavy demand is already being noted for it on the part of exhibitors.

San Francisco Items.

Work on the Searchlight theater at Church and 28th streets was seriously interfered with during July by the strike of longshoremen, which prevented deliveries of lumber from being made and the opening of this house has been delayed.

Ralph H. Clark, representing the California Motion Picture Corporation, is now covering his Northern California territory in a fine new Dodge automobile.

Improvements are to be made shortly to the front of the Market street theater, a marquee to be installed to add to its attractiveness.

G. A. Metcalfe has installed a Minusa gold fiber screen in the public reviewing room fitted up in the quarters of the American Photo Player Company in the Film Exchange building.

30,000 Sign for Fairer Censorship

Portland, Oregon, Photoplay Patrons Stand Behind Local Exhibitors—Eager to Sign Their Petition for Fairer Censorship—Club Women Against Censors—Publicity Campaign Ends.

By Abraham Nelson, 809 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The motion picture men's campaign before the people for a fairer censorship ordinance closed August 1. When the petitions the motion picture men had placed in their lobbies for signatures were called in, it was found that about 30,000 people had signed in their favor. The enthusiasm on the part of the theater patrons did not once diminish during the campaign and it could have continued effectively for the whole month had there been any question as to the sentiment of the people on the issue. The campaign was closed when it was obvious that the people were about unanimously with the exhibitors.

The formal plea to the City Commissioners has been postponed to the middle of August, because of the Commissioners' vacations. The question is, will the Commissioners abide by the will of the people? This, of course, will determine the success of the campaign.

After the close of the campgain before the general public, many prominent club women of the city were interviewed and the situation was explained to them. This was done by the motion picture men because, prior to the enactment of the present no-appeal ordinance, the club women exercised semi-official authority as censors. With one exception, the heads of the women's clubs who were interviewed stated they were with the film men for an ordinance providing for an appeal to the courts. The exception was a woman who refused to have the situation explained.

The club women complained that the present censorship was ineffective and several stated that the city's pictures were apparently being subjected to ridiculous cutting for no purpose.

Children's Matinees Suggested.

Two club women stated that the local censorship sky could be cleared entirely if the exhibitors would provide special matinees for children. One of these women stated that if such special shows were provided, there would be no occasion for any legalized censorship whatsoever.

Publicity Committee Finishes.

The committee from the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association, which handled the campaign before the people, consisted of F. M. Simonton, Standard Feature Film Company; M. O. Leonhart, T. & D. theater; Louis Christ, Pickford theater, and Abraham Nelson, Moving Picture World. The matter has been turned over to the association's attorney to be presented to the Commissioners.

Censors May Quit.

McMinnville, Ore.—After raising "Old Harry" in McMinnville's film circle, which surrounds its two theaters, and getting honorable mention in a New York daily paper, by Heck, the censors here have subsided. In fact, they have announced that they are going on a vacation for a month and will leave the morals of the people entirely in the exhibitors' hands. If, when they return, there is no crying demand for censorship, they will quit for good.

Mutual Representative Calls.

Portland, Ore.—Edward Auger, special representative for Mutual from New York, paid the Portland office a visit during the height of the campaign for fairer censorship. He reiterated the statement made by former travelers into the city that while Portland's censors were notorious the country over, the real gravity of the situation cannot be conceived without making the Rose City a visit and consulting the exhibitors. Speaking of the situation with reference to his company, Mr. Auger stated that the Portland office was no longer a buying exchange, as it was formerly, but that Seattle now enjoyed this distinction. Manufacturers, he said, deemed it inadvisable to send films to Portland to be reviewed by the Portland censors until they have had their runs in other places in this territory.

Mr. Auger is well known in Portland, being the man who was here to open the Pathe exchange in 1914.

Harrington Back With Mutual.

Seattle, Wash.—Jay Harrington has not gone into the theater business, nor has he gone with Alec Pantages and his Western Civilization Corporation, as rumor seemed to have it since he quit Universal. He went back to his old job on the road for Mutual, August 5.

The Mutual managers in the Pacific Northwest met with Edward Auger during his visit here. This was soon after the Mutual had moved into their new quarters. G. A. Reed and A. S. Kirkpatrick came from Portland for the occasion.

Many Prominent Visitors.

Portland, Ore.—The censorship campaign and the national Knights of Pythias convention brought many visitors to the city who are more or less famous in film circles.

Frank Hudson, who manages the G. F. exchange at Seattle, called on L. A. Todd, manager of the local office.

George Bligh came from Salem minus his famous vest and cheered the boys from the side lines in their campaign for fairer censorship.

Jensen and Von Herberg, who operate the Columbia theater here, came down from Seattle and passed some pertinent remarks about the inconsistency of Portland's censors.

Lew Cullins and wife, from the Casino, The Dallas, Ore., were in Portland for the K. of P. convention. Mr. Cullins has the state rights here to Damon and Pythias, essentially a K. of P. picture, and showed the production at the Heilig, Portland's biggest theater.

Other visitors were M. E. Mead, road man for Triangle; S. Danz, Star theater, Astoria; James Webb, Cozy theater, Union; H. C. Murphy, Yacolt, Wash.; Percy Lever, Scenic theater, Coquille, and C. C. Waters, Salem.

Cameraman Royally Treated.

Portland, Ore.—W. A. Van Scoy, cameraman for Pathe, recently returned from the Wallowa mountains in eastern Oregon, where he had been taking some scenic pictures. His trip was the first that any cameraman had ever made into this region and the taking of motion pictures was made a gala event. The whole town of Wallowa turned out to a watermelon feast on the shores of Wallowa lake and incidentally watched the cameraman photograph its beauty spots. Mr. Van Scoy and L. Vergere, who runs the local theater, were the lions of the occasion.

An Organ for T & D.

Portland, Ore.—The Wurlitzer people have just completed the installation of a $25,000 Hope Jones unit orchestra at the T & D theater. The model is the same as the one used at the San Francisco exposition and is also similar to the one recently installed at the T & D at Reno, Nev. An orchestra of ten pieces formerly supplied the music at the T. & D.

Heard on Portland's Film Row.

Milton, Ore.—Simpson & Burton have bought the Sunset theater from H. Long.

Bend, Ore.—L. C. Rudow, owner of the Dream theater, will have his new house ready to open next month. Its seating capacity is 500. The Dream will close.

Burns, Ore.—Julian Byrd, who now operates the Tonawanna theater, is contemplating building a new and larger house.

Portland, Ore.—Wm. Graeper has announced that he will make extensive alterations in the Union avenue theater and increase its seating capacity.

Portland, Ore.—C. W. Cornell is now managing the Ideal theater. Mr. Cornell worked for the People's Amusement Company for about six years at the Tivoli and also at the Ideal as operator.

Portland, Ore.—Oswego Lake, near here, is the film men's summer rendezvous. Among the film fraternity who have established camps there are Fred Simonton, Ed. Myrick and Sam Fleishman.

Portland, Ore.—E. E. Goehler has been employed as road man for Pathe. He was formerly an auto salesman.

Seaside, Ore.—G. W. Reed, who formerly operated the Orpheum theater, is now located at the National. O. C. Cacheralis is again managing the Orpheum.

St. Paul, Ore.—H. C. Wirple opened a theater here August 6. The equipment was furnished by Pete Sabo of Portland.

SPOKANE NOTES.

By S. Clark Patchin, 1811 Eleventh Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

S. E. Rork of Keystone Here.

SPOKANE, WASH.—S. E. Rork, of Los Angeles, Cal., personal representative of Mack Sennett maker of Keystone Film comedies on the Triangle program, was a visitor to Spokane during the past week. While here he was the guest of Manager Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty theater, which is the Spokane home of Triangle pictures. Mr. Rork is enroute to New York City and will visit northeastern cities on the way. He said:

"We are getting better acquainted with exhibitors and sounding seniment on the Max Sennett Keystones with a view to improving them and making them bigger and better. Mr. Sennett, who personally supervises every Keystone comedy his fourteen companies make, has never been fully satisfied with one of them. He wants bigger thrills, more laughs and a more human touch in all of them.

"He has just completed his new studio at a cost of $150,000, and it covers 15 acres and is regarded as the most complete in America. He can make Keystone comedies, rain or shine, day or night, in the new plant. He employs 14 directors and has 500 regular Keystone players on his pay-roll and sometimes as many as 2,000 are employed at one time.

"In the near future Mr. Sennett will present Mabel Normand in an eight or nine-reel production to cost $100,000, made by her own company under his supervision. He has had her company of 30 people on his pay-roll for eight weeks waiting the start of the picture. Mabel is determined to do a better picture than Billie Burke in 'Peggy.'

"Mr Sennett is now in New York, and I expect to meet him somewhere across the continent. He is bringing 'Fatty' Arbuckle and his New York company back with him to Los Angeles."

"Feast of Life" a Hit.

Clara Kimball Young, of the World Film, in her portrayal of the role of a Cuban beauty in "The Feast of Life," drew capacity audiences to the Class A last week. Miss Young became a favorite here in "Trilby" and "Camille," and Manager C. E. Stilwell experienced no trouble in keeping his seats filled during this engagement.

THE FAR JOURNEY (Three parts—Aug. 21).—The cast: David Bucklin (Harry Mestayer); David's father (William Sheerer); Dorothy, as a child (Lillian Wade); Dorothy (Marion Warner). Written by William E. Wing. Frank Beal, director.

David Bucklin denounces his father, changes his name and hides away in a far city.

An accomplished violinist, David secures an engagement through the medium of a vaudeville team. He has made friends with little Dorothy, daughter of the actor and actress, and consequently the parents take an interest in the unfortunate young man.

Dorothy becomes ill, a lamp explodes, and she is saved from death by fire through the courage of David. Later the parents of little Dorothy die and David adopts the child. He spends most of his meager salary to educate the little girl, and as she blossoms into young womanhood he sends her to a fashionable young ladies' seminary. Dorothy inherits her parents' theatrical talents and later becomes a prima donna.

In the meantime the fortunes of Bucklin go from bad to worse. He loses his position on the stage; later is discharged from a cabaret and is almost starving in a tenement district. David is ashamed to meet his ward, for he has made a pretense to her that he is wealthy.

Dorothy returns from a prolonged and successful tour. David concludes to sell his violin to a connoisseur in return for the privilege of occupying the wealthy man's home for a short time in which to receive his ward. Dorothy calls and he tells her that she owes the world her services.

Dorothy suspects something is wrong. She discovers her guardian has merely borrowed the home in which to receive her. She obtains David's address, visits the tenement where David is starving, and through her love his stubborn pride is defeated, and together they attain happiness.

ROPING A SWEETHEART (Aug. 26).—The cast: Tom (Tom Mix); Vicky (Victoria Forde); Sid (Sid Jordan).

Vicky Weathers arrives home at the B-O Ranch, after a long sojourn in the east. Her father sends Tom and Sid, two cowboys, to the train to meet her. Both boys fall in love with the beautiful girl. Each demands that the other stay in town while Vicky is driven home. Both become fierce rivals in the game of love and en route home each insists on doing his individual share in driving the horses, which very nearly precipitate a runaway.

Tom secures an ancient ram and Sid a calf, and they practice marriage proposals, not knowing that Vicky, her father and the other cowboys form a hidden audience which greatly enjoys the performance. Finally each resolves to capture Vicky in any event, and they engage in a roping contest. Tom ropes the girl and receives nothing but a scolding for his pains. Sid believes he has won her hand, but soon discovers that she will have nothing to do with him either. The two cowboys finally determine that all women are fickle.

Starting on their honeymoon, young Mrs. Plump decides to carry her cash in the form of gold pieces sewed on her coat as buttons. Attacked by tramps, the coat is stolen and the shock makes ma-in-law ill. Wifey telephone to Mr. Plump to hasten home. He is arrested for speeding and put in jail. Here he recognizes one of the thugs, pinched for another crime. The judge is told of the thug's attack and Plump phones to tell wifey of his capture. The lost coat is discovered among the tramp's belongings and Plump, tearing off one of the buttons, cheerfully pays his fine and once more breathes the fresh air.

THE TRYOUT (Aug. 25).—The cast: Pokes (Robert Burns); Jabbs (Walter Stull); Ingenue (Ethel Burton); Tramp (Robin Williamson); Cameraman (Harry Naughton).

Pokes is told by his landlady not to return unless he brings the money necessary to pay up his back board bill. Therefore, when Pokes sees a sign hanging in front of one of the picture studios "Extra Wanted," he jumps at the opportunity and is told to report the following morning for a tryout. Jabbs, the director of the company to which Pokes is assigned, is in no pleasant mood when Pokes reports on the following morning. Instead of taking heed to his cues and entering the stage in the proper moment Pokes is either busy rehearsing his business behind the sets or thinking of the reward that is coming to him when he rescues the pretty ingenue from the villainous tramp that is to attack her. After several rehearsals Jabbs is almost frantic and determines to give Pokes only one more chance. This time when the cameraman is grinding and everything is running smoothly, Pokes really does appear, but instead of following the routine ordered by Jabbs, runs amuck and starts shooting at everybody in the cast. At the time that Jabbs' scene is taking place, several other directors are working on the stage and each company is busy with its respective scenes. When Pokes emerges from the set chasing everybody before him at the point of his revolver, consternation reigns on the big studio stage, and all of the members of the various companies seek refuge behind wings and chairs. Pokes continues on his wild journey until finally Jabbs in self-defense unites all the studio employees to turn upon the luckless Pokes and succeed in subduing him after a hard struggle.

AN AERIAL JOYRIDE (Aug. 31).—The cast: Plump (Babe Hardy); Runt (Billy Ruge); his sweetheart (Ray Godfrey).

Runt is a sport and he leads his girl to believe that he is about to buy a swell auto. He examines several, but the prices do not suit him and he finally gets what he thinks is a bargain—a broken-down Flivver for a small sum. Plump, an out-of-work chauffeur, is engaged as driver and they sally forth for the girl's home. Being a two-seated car, Runt is obliged to sit on the axle, and during the ride is lost. He calls the police and they pursue the flying couple, who leap through the clouds in their attempt to escape. A shot from below blows up the flying Flivver and in the ensuing excitement the police car is driven clean through the wall of a garage, just in time to catch Plump and the girl, who, unfortunately, drop through the ceiling.

BIOGRAPH.

THE ADOPTED BROTHER (Aug. 21—Biograph Reissue No. 74).—The cast: The daughter (Dorothy Gish); the adopted brother (Robert Harron); the father (W. Chrystie Miller); the son (Elmer Booth); his friend (Charles Gorman).

Oftentime it has been proved that the own children of a family have proved less loving and considerate than those who have been adopted. And so it was in the case of the adopted brother of this family. He became the sole support, while the old gray-haired father sat by the fire, the young daughter looked after the house and the degenerate brother went off to the saloon with his questionable companions. The money for his debauches was often supplied by the adopted young brother.

The brother has just left for the saloon, and the adopted son follows him to the village, just in time to see the drunken crowd throw a stranger out of the saloon. He is jestingly known as the "book-writer," and his drunken debauches are the talk of the good people and the abuse of those of his kind. The boy befriends the author by taking him to his cabin. Here while he sleeps off his drunken stupor, the boy reads some of the manuscripts lying on the table. When the author awakens the boy seeks to encourage him into a fresh start and begins to arouse new courage in the writer.

Meanwhile back in the saloon there is another fight. A drunken farmer coming out is met by one of his former hands who demands the pay that is coming to him. The farmer underpaid the man. There is a struggle between the two and a large roll of bills is displayed. The degenerate brother and his friends coming out of the saloon see the money and decide to follow the man and rob him. They do this. The boy returning home from the author's cabin comes upon them and is an unwilling witness to their crime. They see him, and pursuing him into the nearby bushes they threaten and abuse him until he agrees to keep silent. As he is passing the sheriff's house he sees the man who had been robbed on the porch while the hand who had previously quarreled with him is also there and being accused of the crime. A strong sense of rebellion against his degenerate brother arises in the boy's mind. All his life the other man has made people suffer. The boy decides to stand by the truth and he goes to the sheriff and tells him the true story of the crime. Thus the degenerate brother and his friend are brought to justice.

Some time later while they are working on the stone heap not far from the prison a fight arises between an unruly prisoner and a guard. It is an opportunity they have long been looking for and they make good their escape. Successful in evading the guards, they hide under a rocky cliff. Presently upon the height above they see two men fighting—one renders the other unconscious and the two convicts see in this a chance to cover their own tracks. They steal up behind the two men and rob them of their clothes.

In their new garb their first thought is for vengeance on the adopted brother who had been the cause of all their suffering. They seek him at the home, but he is bidding goodby to the author, who is leaving that locality, a changed man, due entirely to the boy's influence. They intimidate the girl into telling his whereabouts, but on their departure she goes to the house to find the boy. She meets him on the street returning from the author. The two convicts, however, had seen him from a distance, and jumping on two horses they find by the roadside they follow in quick pursuit. The girl runs for the sheriff and the chase continues. The author on the outside of the town, however, had stopped to rest. The boy, followed by the two convicts, pass by on their horses. He takes in the situation at a glance and following after the two, he reaches them just as they are about to fall upon the boy. In the struggle he kills one and he himself is shot by another. The other convict falls into the hands of the sheriff. Thus the good done another returns to the boy and frustrates the evil design that was to be perpertrated against him for the price of a life.

Tommy, the mail boy, forgot to deliver to Bill Brown.

Ben tried to make love to Becky, Bill's daughter, but she informed him she had no ambitions to be Mrs. Callahan. Then a young stranger arrived, who told Becky that her father knew all about him, so she said that he could take the cabin in the woods till her father came back. As the days passed they grew to love each other and Ben became very jealous.

Then came a notice saying that Richard Stanley was wanted for a murder, giving a description that fitted Stanton. When Becky found this out she was very much worried and sent Tommy to warn her lover of his danger.

Stanton, seeing that there was no way to prove his identity, tried to get away and hid in some nearby bushes. But by accident the men fired some shots and one found its way into the bushes, wounding Dick. He managed to drag himself to Becky's cottage and she hid him in the attic. Some tell-tale drops of blood revealed Dick to the sheriff. The men decided to lynch him. Becky pleaded in vain, so as they took him away she sent Tommy for her father.

Tommy rode as hard as he could and met Bill on the way home. Now he remembered the letter which he had forgotten to give Bill and when he opened it Bill read that Dick was a government forest expert. Hard and fast they rode to save an innocent man and succeeded in arriving just as Dick was about to be hung. After all the explanations were made Dick was freed and Ben foiled in his attempt on Dick's life, retired to safer parts.

He is attracted to Ruth, admires and covets. She accepts his attentions, but not in the spirit in which they are offered, being loyal to her husband.

One night Ruth gives a big dinner—it is their wedding anniversary—and Alden is so busy that he forgets all about it. But the climax is reached when he brings along Mortimer to take her to the opera after he has kept her waiting for over an hour. She consents to elope with Mortimer and that night finds her leaving with Margery. Once aboard the train, however, she regrets what she is doing and gets off.

Then for a couple of years he is cold, and hard, and cynical. But there comes the time when he sees a painting done by his wife and memory will give him no peace until he has put forth every effort to find her and the baby. The detectives locate her humble dwelling and while she has gone to the art dealer's he comes and kidnaps Margery. Returning home, Ruth is frantic, but at police headquarters is told that a lost child was reported as being taken to a certain hotel and Alden's detective offers his assistance. Alden hears them coming and hides behind some draperies while Ruth rushes to the sleeping Margery. When she looks up she sees her husband standing beside her and once more the family is united.

To cap the climax he has fallen in love with an actress, Georgette Fallon, and is about to marry her when he is informed by his lawyer that his whole estate is squandered and there is nothing left but a mine in Hell's Canyon Desert, California, so Carter sets out for Desert to make his fortune.

The town of Desert is run by a boss, "Placer" Murray. The mine which Carter owns is being worked by Helton, although he has no legal claim to the property, and a short while before Carter arrives Murray tries to take possession of the mine by force. In this he is not successful. Without revealing his identity, Carter secures a job in the mine.

As time goes on Carter falls in love with Mary. But all this while Murray has the mine watched and when he finds that they are about to strike it rich, he has the mine blown up out of spite, so that the partners have to begin all over again. The two stick it out and begin the work anew.

At this time Raymond receives a telegram from Georgette saying that she is coming to visit him.

The day of her arrival Carter and Helton go down to the station to meet Georgette. Murray, seeing the two in town, thinks it an ideal time to settle his score once for all. So he calls the two into his office and there begins a battle royal. In the end Carter and old Helton succeed in fighting their way out.

At last the time comes for Georgette to leave and she begs Carter to go with her. At last he succumbs to the call of the white lights and agrees to go.

But Broadway seems tame to Carter after living in the open, and he soon finds himself on the way back to the West. Reaching Desert, he is told that Murray now has possession of the claim, which he bought from Helton for a song. The latter is broken in mind and body and is living in a little hut, attended by Mary.

Carter goes to the sheriff and presents his deed to the mine and then goes up to the claim to settle his private score with Murray. When he gets there he is attacked by the whole crowd and forced to fight for his life.

In the meanwhile Mary has found out what is happening and has the presence of mind to telephone the authorities in the next county, as the sheriff in that county is being held up by Murray's men. After doing this she goes to Carter's aid and the two of them fight off the attacks of their opponents until aid arrives.

Raymond makes Mary a partner in the mine and his partner for life.

LIBERTY (No. 1, "Fangs of the Wolf"—Three parts—Aug. 14).—The cast: Liberty Horton (Marie Walcamp); Bob Rutledge (Jack Holt); Pedro (Eddie Polo); Major Winston (Neal Hart); Manuel Leon (Bertram Grassby); Pancho Lopez (G. Raymond Nye); Jose Leon (L. M. Wells); Theresa (Maud Emory); Col. Dalton (Roy Stewart).

James Horton dies at his hacienda in Mexico, leaving a will which makes Major Richard Winston and Senor Pancho Lopez the trustees of Horton's vast estate, and they are created guardians of his daughter and only child, Liberty Horton, aged seventeen years, the will commanding that Liberty must not marry before reaching the age of twenty-one without the written approval of both trustees.

Liberty spends a year at the Winston home, and then goes to her late father's estate in Mexico. A fiesta is held in honor of Liberty's arrival, with feats of horsemanship. Theresa, a Mexican girl, is in love with Manuel Leon. She becomes maid to Liberty. Captain Rutledge is in love with Liberty and she has much affection for him, but Trustee Leon's son, Manuel, becomes Rutledge's rival.

A grand ball concludes the fiesta, and here Pancho Lopez secretly plots against his employers by conspiring to abduct Liberty, the prospective money to be used to finance a revolution. The plan succeeds. Padro escapes from his captivity with the Lopez band and hurries back to the Horton estate, where he tells of the abduction of Liberty and the Texas Rangers are summoned. Manuel tries to dissuade the rangers from setting out on the rescue mission, claiming the quest too hazardous; but Rutledge spurns his advice, and the latter finally concludes to accompany the expedition. The Lopez gang succeed in carrying Liberty to a high mountain fastness.

A message is found demanding $10,000 as ransom to release Liberty. Rutledge shouts up the mountain side that if Liberty is harmed all the Lopez gang will be punished by death when caught. Lopez sends words to an insurrecto chief, Alvira, to prepare for an attack on an American town near the border. Pedro, the servant, manages to creep into the Lopez camp, finds Liberty and aids her to escape. Alvira and his insurrectos meanwhile are marching to attack the American town. Captain Rutledge and Manuel Leon quarrel, and agree to fight a duel.

LIBERTY NO. 2, "Riding With Death" (Two Parts—Aug. 21).—The cast: Liberty Horton (Marie Walcamp); Bob Rutledge (Jack Holt); Manuel Leon (Bertram Grassby); Lopez (G. Raymond Nye); Pedro (Eddie Polo).

While Liberty is attempting to make her escape Pedro is hurling dynamite at Lopez and his men and in so doing blows up a part of the hut.

Manuel and Rutledge are fighting on the top of the cliff. Manuel forces his opponent over the edge of the cliff, but Rutledge manages to retain a hold by hanging in midair. This is seen by Liberty and Pedro and they start to the aid of Rutledge, but before they arrive Rutledge has managed to regain his foothold.

When they arrive at the camp of the Major Liberty tells him of the attack. The Major thinks that by riding hard they will be able to warn Colonel Dalton. This is heard by one of Lopez's men and he leaves to warn Lopez. Just as the Major and his men are mounting they are attacked by Lopez and forced to seek shelter. Liberty offers to ride to the Colonel's quarters and warn him, and so she and Pedro leave, pursued by three of Lopez's men.

Manuel has not entered the fight, but is watching from behind a rock. Just as Rutledge is loading his gun Manuel fires at him and the bullet tears the gun from his hand. As he starts to fire a second time the Major walks up behind him and knocks him down, warning him to stop. The fighting continues.

Liberty is closely pursued by the Mexicans. She strings a rope across the trail just at a bend. It is effective, and two Mexicans are knocked from their horses. She reaches the camp.

TIMOTHY DOBBS. THAT'S ME, No. 1. "The Sody Clerk" (Two Reels).—The cast: Timothy Dobbs (Carter De Haven); Jeff (Robert Milash); Mary (Vola Smith); Millie (Helen Leslie); Clarkson (L. M. Wells). Produced by Wallace Beery). Written by Bess Meredyth.

The story opens in a drug store in Centerville. The elite are there, and Timothy Dobbs, the elegant dispenser, the male Pavlowa, is dispensing drinks to Mildred, the banker's daughter. The girls all adore him, and the boys despise him accordingly. Mary, the plain daughter of old Clarkson, adores him in secret.

Timothy lives with Jeff in an old farmhouse which his mother left him, and incidentally an income of three hundred a year. Jeff adores him, is his valet.

The boys stand it as long as possible, then frame up to catch Timothy on his way to the dance hall. They toss him into the water. Jeff catches him in his arms so that he does not even get wet. Timothy is more of a hero than ever.

All goes well until Gwendolyn Bates comes to visit Millie. It is Gwendolyn who sows the movie hero-worship seed in the heads of the girls. Timothy is deserted, hurt and humiliated. Mary alone remains true. No longer is the soda fountain patronized.

Timothy can stand it no longer and impulsively tells Millie that he, too, is to become a movie actor. Millie, electrified, rushes forth to spread the news, and an hour later the drug store is again crowded and Timothy the idol of the town.

The boys, disgruntled, go in and tell him that they do not believe him or that he is going. Timothy is taken off his guard, but when he sees the fair girls gazing at him, he says impressively he is leaving for California Saturday.

The first episode closes with Timothy disappearing on the observation platform of the departing train.

TIMOTHY DOBBS, THAT'S ME (No. 2, "A Thousand a Week"—Two Parts—Aug. 21).—The cast: Timothy Dobbs (Carter De Haven); Jeff (Robert Milash); Mary (Vola Smith); the Emperor (Gilmore Hammond); the Leading Lady (Ruby Cox); Roman Hero (C. Norman Hammond).

After an uneventful trip Timothy arrives in California, attended by Jeff, now called Jenkins. After a rest Timothy and Jenkins set out for one of the large studios. He offers one of the men $2 for his ticket and the man almost has heart failure hurrying to take the offer.

The extras are cast for work in a Roman picture. The action is started and the extras told how to carry their parts. But the director's theory of how to carry out the scene and that of Timothy's are not the same. Naturally the director's idea is to have the hero rescue the heroine. Timothy being quite confident in his powers, decides to play the hero himself and the director has one spasm after another in trying to start the picture right. At last the scene is about finished. The extra men rush in and the hero starts "killing" them. Timtohy will not die in spite of the curses and pleading of the director and his assistants for him to die. At last he does die, and with a sigh of relief the director and his men start for Timothy with blood in their eyes.

Jenkins has seen the way things are happening and valiantly comes to the escape. He picks Timothy up bodily and carries him to safety.

Jack hears this and, sneaking to the hiding place, tells Willy the news. Willy decides to sacrifice himself rather than have Molly thrown out of her home and surrenders himself to the soldiers.

SNORING IN HIGH C (Aug. 27).—The cast: The Husband (Reggie Morris); the Wife (Gertrude Selby); the Jilted Man (Kitty Howe).

Reggie was a fortunate man and the ceremony was being duly performed and everything going fine, but just about the finish there happened to appear on the scene an old suitor of Gertie's, accompanied by a minister ready to tie the knot for him.

Gertie was called away and the ardent suitor was about to make a bigamist of Gertie before she knew what was happening. But she tartly told the old suitor that he was too late. The old suitor hied himself to the brewery and this placed him in no frame of mind to forget the jilting he received.

Reggie's father in the meantime telegraphed his beloved son that he was on his way with a eugenic bride for him. So Gertie had to disguise as a boy to be near her hubby and the eugenic bride-to-be fell desperately in love with Gertie.

The jilted suitor by this time had gathered enough strength and courage to start on the warpath and Gertie, in trying to elude the fair maiden, ran amuck of the jilted suitor, who took a few shots at her. Things for a while looked rather dubious for Gertie, but love always triumphs.

SAMMY JOHNSIN IN MEXICO (Aug. 25).—Little Sammy Johnsin was a foolish boy when he failed to heed the sign that was posted, warning the worthy denizens of Cartoon Land to keep away on account of blasting. So it happened that Sammy was given a free ride to the land of cactus and hot tomales. Upon his arrival Sammy procured a gun and set out to capture the bandit and thus win the reward offered to the man who brought him in dead or alive. Sammy found the bandit, but just as he was on the point of killing the dangerous character a little chicken flew across the path. Now when a colored man sees chicken all his interest in bandits just naturally fades out. Sammy got neither and just as he was about to be killed by the ferocious Mexicans he awoke from his terrible dream.

THE MADONNA OF THE NIGHT (Three Parts—Aug. 3).—The cast: Mary Martin (Nita Davis); Phillip Dean (E. Forrest Taylor); Mrs. Martin (Bessie Banks); Mr. Dean (Al W. Fordyce); Mrs. Dean (Madeline Fordyce); Martha (Dixie Stuart).

Philip Dean, a New York society youth, carries his gambling too far, and finds his father has refused any further loans to him. Philip is told he is a disgrace to his family and is advised to leave the city. He does. A few months later finds him in a small mining camp, in the West.

Mary Martin is a student at the convent of San Rafael. At the Christmas holidays she leaves for her home. That night, just as she is about to get into her berth on the train, she decides to go out on the back platform of the observation car. The train stops. Mary seats herself on the steps of the car swinging her feet. Over her night dress she has a white dressing sack. Suddenly one of her slippers flies off and rolls down over the edge of an embankment. Mary goes after it and just as she obtains it the train pulls out. When she reaches the track, the train is disappearing in the distance.

It is Christmas Eve. Nearby Philip and his companions are celebrating noisily. Mary finds her way to the cabin and opens the door. Some of the men, seeing her standing in the doorway, reel toward her drunkenly, but Philip, desiring to protect the girl, overthrows the lamp and in the darkness escapes with her.

Some miles away Philip takes the blankets strapped on his burro and arranges a bed for Mary. Exhausted, she falls asleep. Nearby Philip sits and watched her. He bends down by the sleeping girl. She awakens with a start. Confused and ashamed, he tells her that he had only wanted to see that she was all right. Again she falls asleep, with Philip, now brought to his senses, watching over her.

With the dawn Philip places her on his burro and starts for town. He stops in a cabin on the way, and there finds a woman of the dance hall. He begs some clothing from her for Mary. She offers him a gaudy dress, but he throws it on the floor angered at the thought of a woman like Mary wearing such a costume. Martha reads his thoughts and goes to a small trunk on one side of the room. From it she takes a simple white gown, which brings memories of happy days. With this dress and a pair of old shoes Philip starts back, when the woman stops him and pleads to accompany him. He agreeing, they come to Mary. The woman bathes the bruised feet of Mary, and then from a distance watches the couple disappear over the brow of the hill. Slowly she enters her cabin, picks up the gaudy dress, and then hurling it from her, kneels by her bed sobbing.

The train comes and Philip tells Mary that some day, when he is a better man, they will meet again.

Another Christmas comes. Mary recalls her adventure in the hills, and brings out the same dressing sack and night gown she had worn on that occasion. She dons them and goes out into the garden, thinking of the man who had done so much and yet so little for her. And there in the garden he finds her.

THE LITTLE TROUBADOR (Two Parts—Aug 7).—The cast: Minta (Vivian Rich); Frank Towne (Alfred Vosburgh); Joshua Quimble (George Periolat); Tom (Otto Tullah). Directed by Carl M. Leviness.

Minta, an orphan, has long been an abused slavey in the junk store of the Millers. She is fond of reading and her favorite book is that of Cinderalla. Miller objects to her reading. When he catches her disobeying his order he beats her. Minta's cries are heard by Frank Towne. He forces Miller to desist. Miller continues his abuse of Minta and she resolves to run away. In carrying out her resolve she takes with her an old accordion. She spends the night in an old drygoods box when she is pursued by a policeman. In the morning she finds a cat and several newly-born kittens in the box. She steals milk for them. Minta manages to earn a livelihood with the accordion. She becomes known as "The Little Troubador."

Joshua Quimble, president of the bank where Frank is employed, is a millionaire. He has one curse and one passion; namely, gout and fishing. He has a standing offer of $1,000 to the person who will make him forget his gout. Frank Towne is studious and ambitious. His roommate, Tom, also employed in the bank, cares more for cards than for study. She plays before Quimble's home, and he is so delighted that he orders his housekeeper to take care of her in his own home. He learns that she is of good parentage.

Summer time comes. Frank and Tom are spending their vacation near Quimble's home. She recognizes Frank as the same young man who stayed Miller's hand when he was beating her. Frank buys a lottery ticket. When he learns from Quimble that gambling in any form is against the rules of the bank he crumples up the lottery ticket and throws it toward the waste paper basket in his room. Both Frank and Tom fall in love with Minta. She likes Frank.

Frank receives a letter from his sister, Julia, that her husband has embezzled $500. His only hope to avoid disgrace is to obtain the money from Frank. Frank has not that much money, and he tries unsuccessfully to borrow from Tom. While walking with Frank and Tom, Minta wrenches the stone in a diamond ring and hands the ring to Frank and asks him to have it fixed.

Frank learns that he has won $400 on his lottery ticket. Combining that with money he had, he telegraphs $500 to his sister.

Frank and Tom quarrel over Minta. They permit Quimble to decide by asking him whose prospects are the best. Unfortunately they are the cause of Quimble losing the biggest trout he ever hooked. He angrily declares that neither can court Minta until he has landed the trout they made him lose.

Tom, by mistake, receives a telegram addressed to Frank. In it Frank is thanked for the money. The message is signed "Julia." He scents a love affair.

Frank, on the way to deliver Minta's ring, drops it in a creek on Quimble's estate. He tells Minta. She believes him until Tom appears, produces the telegram and accuses Frank of selling the ring to send money to the mysterious Julia. Minta demands an explanation. Honor forces Frank to remain silent. Minta accepts this as a confession. She is just sending him away when Quimble bursts into the group with the big trout the boys made him lose. Not only this, but he has the diamond ring which Frank lost—the trout, attracted by the bright object, has swallowed it when Frank dropped the bauble in the creek. Minta now recognizes the treachery of Tom and sends him away and shows by her actions that she loves Frank.

RUTH RIDLEY'S RETURN (Two Parts—Aug. 14).—The cast: Ruth Ridley (Lizette Thorne); Hal Jackson (George Field); Arthur Strong (Edward Coxen); His Mother (Dixie Stuart).

Arthur Strong, a struggling young author, finds himself in desperate straits at the time when he needs but a few weeks' grace to complete his first novel. Through the efforts of his devoted mother he was able to proceed thus far but while Arthur fondly appreciated his mother's love and kindness, he fails to appreciate to what lengths she has gone to afford him his opportunity. The Strongs are threatened with eviction. Mrs. Strong hides their distressing circumstances from Arthur while he concentrates on his work and pleads for an extension of time on the payment of the rent.

Ruth Ridley is a trusted employe of the realty company. Upon the day of Mrs. Strong's visit she is checking up the monthly cash balance and before her on the desk near the cashier's wicket lie several piles of currency. These tempt Mrs. Strong when she calls. Returning home, Mrs. Strong explains to Arthur that she has secured a loan to carry them through. Back in the office the money is missed, Ruth is accused and later convicted of the theft and sent to prison.

Arthur's success is assured. His mother loses her sight. In her affliction, she secretly believes her blindness to be retribution.

Ruth, released, is hounded by Jackson, a fellow-employe, and exposes her to the various managers of the places in which she seeks work. He endeavors to force her to split with him the money he believes she stole and secreted. Ruth becomes desperate.

At this time Arthur advertises for a stenographer and Ruth secures the position. She makes good, but the strain of the situation tells upon her. She realizes she is working for the son of the woman who caused her ruin and yet she dare not tell Arthur of his mother's guilt, for Arthur loves her and she returns his affection. Eventually she comes to live with them.

Jackson resumes his blackmailing tactics. He writes that unless she leaves the library window open that night he will tell Arthur all. Ruth refuses, but through a mistake on Arthur's part the window is nevertheless left open. Jackson enters and is shot by Arthur as a burglar.

Arthur now finishes his story, suggested by Ruth, and based upon her prison experience. The manuscript completed, Ruth reads it to Mrs. Strong, and as the tale is unfolded a full understanding comes to her. She realizes now who Ruth is and a full confession is followed by Ruth's forgiveness. Between them they agree Arthur shall never know. The last barrier gone, Ruth accepts Arthur's proposal.

THE HOLLY HOUSE (Three Parts—Aug. 17.)—Revised cast: Lord Sylvester of Brangdon (Harry McCabe); Lady Sylvester (Gordona Bennett); Stephanie, her companion (Vivian Rich); Rolin Henderson, writer (Alfred Vosburgh); Dr. Cartman, village doctor (Hugh Bennett); Hardly, caretaker (William Spencer); Mrs. Hardly, his wife (Madeline Gebhart); Landlord (Clarence Burton).

The scene is laid in England at a deserted estate called the Holly House, the mansion of Lord Sylvester.

A young writer, Rolin, seeks the locality because of its beauty, and the air of mystery surrounding it. His interest is deepened by the fact that twenty years before Lord Sylvester, after spending his fortune in gambling and dissipation, ordered his wife from the place and later deserted it himself.

Rolin arranges with the caretaker to use the musty but dignified library in which to write. He takes the history of Lord Sylvester for the basis of his novel. The story is unsatisfactory to him.

One night a carriage comes by the lodge gate. Lady Sylvester, helplessly ill, is taken out and brought into the house. Rolin himself carries her up and deposited her in bed. A young woman with her is supposed to be her daughter. She is called Stephanie by Lady Sylvester, and to villagers she soon becomes known as Lady Stephanie. Rolin himself falls in the general misunderstanding, believes her Lady Stephanie, and finishes his novel on that hypothesis. He also falls in love with her and she with him.

Lord Sylvester suddenly arrives at the inn. He is amazed to hear he has a daughter, who, with her mother, is now at Holly House. He goes there, and for one brief hour revels in the delights of fatherhood, welcoming the girl who is said to be his daughter. Stephanie has promised to give Rolin a definite answer to his love the next day, but first she believes the right to remove the mistaken impression that she is Lord Sylvester's daughter. She finds Lord Sylvester in the library and tells him the truth that she is only the companion of Lady Sylvester.

Sylvester turns Stephanie out. She goes to the house of the gardener. In the morning Rolin visits her and after hearing her story tells her that he loves her just the same and that to him she will always be "my Lady Stephanie."

THE SPITE HUSBAND (Two Parts—Aug. 26).—The cast: Catherine Mortimer (Mae Gaston); Mrs. Cochran (Ida Lewis); Horace Castlebury (Harrish Ingraham); Ethel Castlebury (Jessie Burnett); Van Allen (Claude Mortenson); "Bill" (Crane Wilbur).

Katherine Mortimer, a rich and eccentric young woman, spending the summer at the seashore with Mrs. Cochran, her aunt and chaperon, learns she has been jilted by her fiance, Horace Castlebury, who has eloped with Ethel Van Eltinge, a brewer's daughter. The headstrong Katherine vows to marry the first man she meets. She swims out beyond her depth and is rescued by Bill, a fisherman, who takes her to his cabin on the shore. He revives her and as he is the first man she has met she straightaway proposes to him. Bill is gifted with the talents of a great painter and aspires to become famous as such. Katherine persuades him to become her husband and he accepts her proposition in view of the fact that her money will further his ambitions. After the marriage ceremony, Katherine informs him that she is to be his wife in name only, but as the weeks pass by he finds himself falling in love with her.

Castlebury and his bride come to the seashore, and there Katherine triumphs in her own mind as she introduces him to her "spite husband." Castlebury, however, sees through the ruse and immediately starts another affair with Katherine, whom he finds a willing victim. He neglects his pretty wife. This state of affairs is finally brought to Bill's attention by the neglected wife and Bill brings matters to an abrupt climax when he interrupts a secret meeting and soundly thrashes Castlebury. Bill renounces Katherine in a stormy scene and returns to his fisherman's hut on the shore. It is then that she discovers that she really loves her "spite husband," and the following morning she follows him to the cabin and pleads with him to take her back. Bill at first will not listen to her, but when she takes possession of the place in her feminine way and starts to clean it up and wash his breakfast dishes he realizes that the girl has at last found her true woman's heart.

News, is going to investigate working conditions in the department stores. Her father being the owner of the largest store, she is not altogether pleased with this news. Showing the article to her father, he tells her he is negotiating for the purchase of that paper to try and stop the scurrilous articles Bryson is writing about them. Blanch then remembers an article that Bryson wrote about her and she resolves to work in her father's store as a shop girl, hoping for a chance to meet Bryson and in some way revenge herself upon him.

She is behind the counter when Bryson appears and starts quizzing her to gain some locale for his article. Lefty Jonas, a pickpocket, slips a watch in Bryson's pocket and Blanch sees the incident. In spite of herself she has taken a small liking for Bryson, and she takes the watch from his pocket and slips it in a basket with some articles a customer has purchased. The cash boy, taking the basket, passes Dowdy Donnelly, the store porter, and he, seeing the watch, takes it and thinks he will keep it for himself.

The floorwalker has Jack arrested by a store detective. En route to the office they pass Donnelly, who, hearing that Jack is accused of theft, is afraid to keep the watch, and slips it back in Lefty Jonas's pocket. Jack is let go as the watch is not found. He threatens to expose the frame-up in the newspaper and leaves. Jonas tells Whitney that he put the watch in Jack's pocket, but Whitney is suspicious, and searching Jonas, he finds the watch, and with the aid of Donnelly, who despises Jonas, as he is his rival for Dot Kernan's hand, they throw Jonas out of the office.

Jack returns and makes a date with Blanch. At the luncheon, she brings tears to his eyes describing how she lives on four dollars a week. He asks her to marry him right away and she consents to run away with him that night. He writes an article for the morning edition, entitled "The Shop Girl," while Blanch arranges with Dot Kernan and her father for Dot to elope with Jack. She would tell the town about it and make Jack the laughing stock among newspaper men. Jack, after writing his story, leaves to purchase a wedding ring. In the jewelry store window he sees a picture of Blanch and learns her identity. This makes him angry.

Jack induces Donnelly to take his part in the elopement. That night from a doorway in the slums, he sees Donnelly take a heavily veiled girl from the tenement, and enter a waiting car with her. This car was provided by Blanch. Jonas, who discovered that Donnelly was to elope, suspected the girl was Dot, and he arrived with her father, and might have prevented the getaway, only Jack laid them both low. Jack went to the newspaper office and searched for his story of the shop girl, who turned out to be only a dream to him. He failed to find it and went home while Blanch discovered that she was the victim of her own joke, and her friends laughed at her expense.

Donnelly, sore at having Dot mixed up in this kind of an escapade, was appeased when Blanch allowed the minister to marry them, and the completion of the ceremony was interrupted by the entrance of Jonas and Kernan, who followed on a tandem. They were thrown out of the house and Dot married the ideal of her dreams, the store porter Donnelly. Whitney, who had bought the newspaper that afternoon, resolved to discharge Jack in the morning for writing the shop girl story, and told Blanch so. She found the story on her father's desk that night and read it. She knew then that Jack was the man for her, as no one ever spoke of her except as a pillar of wealth.

Norton has a daughter, Lois, still at school. His wife is an invalid. The Norton family go to the seashore, followed by Yvette, who succeeds in meeting her prey. On the return to the city Norton is seen frequently with Yvette. She learns that he is planning another killing on the street and so informs Ranson.

THE MYSTERY OF THE RIVIERA (Five Parts—Aug. 24).—The cast: Clarice Corcini (Jane Mea); Lorenzo Corcini (Paul Manson); Detective Kips (Maurice Luguet); Lord James Pearce (Max Darthigny); Lady Stanley (Valentine Petit).

The funds of Lorenzo Corcini, an international thief, are getting low. With his wife, Clarice, he is living at Nice, the most fashionable resort on the Riviera. Suddenly there comes a chance to recoup his fortune by robbing Lady Stanley. She is the possessor of a beautiful sapphire necklace. By forging a letter of recommendation Corcini is able to get his wife introduced into the household of the wealthy woman as a governess.

Upon assuming her duties, Clarice discovers that Lady Stanley is in love with Lord James Pearce. The night chosen for the theft is ideal for Corcini. Lady Stanley has been engaged with Lord Pearce all evening. Quite unobserved, the thief is able to make his way into her room with the aid of his accomplice. He is about to secure the gems when Lord Pearce himself appears, having come for a coat for Lady Stanley. He throws aside his own automobile coat and forgets it in his haste to take the warm coat to the woman he loves. Corcini breaks the gold string which holds the sapphires and slips two of the jewels into Lord Pearce's coat. He then makes his escape.

When Lady Stanley discovers her valuable necklace has been stolen, there is an immediate outcry. The two jewels are found in Lord Pearce's coat, and the examining magistrate is reluctantly forced to accuse him. However, Lady Stanley immediately employs Detective Kips to uncover the real criminal. Clarice, still masquerading as the governess, learns that Kips is on the job and warns Corcini. Kips discovers a clue that leads to Corcini and has the latter's house watched.

It is the carnival season at Nice, and the thief escapes from his home, taking refuge in one of the handsome floats which will figure later in the day in the parade. He overcomes one of the men on the float who leaves the platform during the parade, and dresses in his Pierrot costume. Thus disguised he manages to slip to the ground and into the carnival crowd. He is overcome with horror when he finds that the necklace has been removed from its hiding place, but takes courage when he finds a note in code from Clarice saying that she has the necklace, because she fears the police will make a search.

Corcini immediately writes Clarice to take a box at the great masked ball that evening and bring him both the necklace and enough money for him to leave France. The woman goes to the great ball magnificently attired. Lady Stanley sees her depart and becomes suspicious.

Kips and Lady Stanley follow and find that Clarice is met by Corcini. The criminal, recognizing that it will be difficult for him to escape when hampered by a woman, has decided to get rid of Clarice. This he does at the ball by means of poison. However, he is already under surveillance, and is unable to escape. Arrested by Lady Stanley herself, who had trapped him into waltzing with her, the man is taken away to prison. The necklace is found in his possession. The cloud which rested upon Lord James Pearce is lifted, and all ends happily.

and provisions, she sets out for the mountains, without her mother's or brother's permission.

The ever-watchful El Diablo sees her, and, taking her to be a man, engages in a gun fight with her, finally wounding her. Then coming upon her, he finds her to be a woman. A posse sets out at full speed to find Tina.

El Diablo finally tells Tina why he has become a bandit, and why he hates sheriffs.

During the telling of a pathetic story, Tina looks off and sees her brother and his men approaching. By a ruse she succeeds in getting the drop on El Diablo, but tells him that if he will promise not to harm her brother she will let him get away. This he promises, and when Tom and the posse appear, Tina tells them that she has seen nothing of the bandit.

As the days go by El Diablo dreams of the girl he had captured, and finally, risking all, he goes to Sagebrush. Pulling his hat down over his face, he enters the restaurant. Tina comes to wait on him and they recognize each other. A Mexican has seen the much-feared outlaw enter, and goes for help. In the kitchen Tom and Mrs. Morton become suspicious. The Mexican and several men start for the restaurant. El Diablo sees them coming and retreats to the kitchen. And there, as he gazes at Mrs. Morton, he recognizes in her his wife, and she learns that he is her husband. While Tom, finding that he is the son of the bandit, goes into the restaurant to put the men there on the wrong trail, but one of them catches a glimpse of El Diablo and a shot that is fired through the doorway, hits and wounds the terrorizer of Sagebrush.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE, NO. 14 (Two Parts—Aug. 21).—Hope has lost all trace of Cleo and is in despair. She has obtained a position in her native town as a nurse girl. Hook continues at the old room doing his own cooking. Morton is still intent on the secret. In a dingy apartment house he is thumbing "Robinson's Philosophy."

About this time there is a great public clamor for preparedness. Hook cheers wildly while carrying a banner in the parade. Hook and the peace advocates get into a wrangle in which Hook at last meets Hope, though plainly indicating he is no longer friendly because of Hope's supposed ill-treatment of Cleo. Hook attempts to assault Hope with the banner staff, but Hope good naturedly protects himself. After relating the whole story to Hook the latter is satisfied of Hope's sincerity and high purposes and consents to tell Hope that Cleo has returned to her home town to find a position to support herself. They arrange to start at once to find Cleo. They can obtain no trace of Cleo.

Passing by a recruiting station Hook declares he will enlist in the navy. Hope fails to dissuade him and Hook enters only to be stalled by the officers in charge. He hurries out to overtake Hope, who, in the meantime, has gone down to the dock to see the submarine. While there Cleo, who has wandered disconsolately down to the dock, approaches. She plans to commit suicide.

Hope fails to recognize her because of a heavy veil. She walks to the edge and is just on the point of plunging into the water when Hope rushes up and saves her. Recognizing him, she falls into his arms, refusing to notice Hope. Instantly that explanations are made, however, a pathetic reunion of Cleo and Hope is effected.

That night Olga obtains access to Morton's room and, armed with a dagger, demands the book of the startled Morton. Across the court Mahlin is watching from a window. Olga takes a packet from her bosom, flaunts it in Morton's face and tells him she holds the secret of Montgomery, that Morton is a pauper and Cleo is Montgomery's daughter.

Morton retaliates by charging that he saw her murder Dr. Burke. Olga rushes for Morton with a dagger. Morton grabs the knife and plunges instantly, recoiling from the sight in horror. There is a smash at the door. Mahlin dashes in, and after a fight with Morton, grabs the packet and the book and makes his escape by the window.

Two policemen enter. Olga rises, faintly points accusingly at Morton and falls backward. They handcuff him. Just as they take him Mahlin, with book and packet, drops off the lower section of the fire escape and gets away.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

A WELSH SINGER (Five Parts—Aug. 17—No. 127).—The cast: Mifanwy (Florence Turner); Evan (Henry Edwards); Tom Pomfrey (Campbell Gullan); John Powys (Malcolm Cherry); Laissabeth Powys (Una Venning).

Evan and Mifanwy are the shepherd and shepherdess of John Powys, brutal master of Powys Hall. Although neither knew it, Powys is the father of Evan. Years before he had cruelly turned his wife away from his door. Shortly after her babe was born, the mother died. Kindly cottagers had brought the babe up as the foster brother of their own baby, Mifanwy. Mifanwy possessed a wonderful voice, and Evan, as he grew older, found means of expressing his love for the beautiful in modeling.

Laissabeth, niece of John Powys, found pleasure in Evan's company and grew bitterly jealous of the little shepherdess. In her anger, she spitefully pushed a sheep, left in Mifanwy's care, over the cliff, hoping that her uncle would punish Mifanwy. Evan, however, assumed the blame.

There came a day, however, when Evan and Mifanwy, hopelessly in love, had to part. Befriended by a famous sculptor, Evan went to London and Rome to study, and at last came back famous. Meanwhile, Mifanwy had been engaged as maid by Mrs. Pomfrey, of "Pomfrey's Royal Circus," managed by her son Tom. Her voice, however, attracted considerable attention, and after a period of hard struggles, she made her debut on the operatic stage under the name of "La Belle Russe." Immediate success was hers.

As time passed Evan grew to love "La Belle," never suspecting her identity. Laissabeth, meanwhile, had not forgotten her early interest in Evan. She sought his society on every occasion and showed jealousy toward "La Belle." Once she visited the singer in her dressing-room and warned her against Evan. Leaving the dressing-room, she discovered the place on fire. Hurrying back, she turned the key in the lock, making Mifanwy a prisoner. She did not know that Evan was in the room. Evan, conscious of the fire, dashed toward the door. It was locked! To save them, however, Tom Pomfrey, who had always loved Mifanwy secretly, laid down his life, happy in the knowledge that he was leaving Mifanwy with the man she loved.

"La Belle" reached Wales before Evan. When he arrived he found her dressed again as the little shepherdess. And so these two had found everlasting happiness in the place where they had known its dawn—the hills of Wales.

THE ROOKIE (Aug. 25).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); father (Jefferson Osborne); mother (Janet Sully); daughter (Claire Alexander); Lieut. Jack (George George); Drill Sergeant (Harry Jackson); Corporal (Ray Lincoln); Billy St. Vitus (Arthur Mund); Gardner (Gordon MacGregor); Desk Sergeant (Joseph Von Meter).

Jerry lands a job as a gardener. His work is suddenly interrupted when he spies the pretty daughter of his employer and at once falls in love. Jack, a lieutenant in the army, is the girl's sweetheart, and when he sees Jerry attempt to embrace his sweetheart he is furious and reports the episode to the father. The girl tells Jerry that she will love only a soldier, and Jerry prepares to enlist.

At a recruiting station, Jerry is rejected because of his size. After forcing his way past the corporal, who is guarding the entrance, he enters the recruiting room. Lieutenant Jack suddenly appears and Jerry attempts to seclude himself behind a gun rack, but is detected. He is informed that there is absolutely no chance of his joining the army because he is so small. Jerry argues and soon a free-for-all fight is in progress. During the brawl Jerry grabs a uniform and a gun and rushes out.

Attiring himself in full military style, Jerry comes back to the station in time to fall in line with the recruits who are put through a drill. He is soon discovered by Lieutenant Jack and as he is being ejected he starts a fight. The police arrive and they mix in with the soldiers and Jerry again escapes.

Jerry goes to the home of his late employer and now, a soldier as far as dress is concerned, he presses his affections with the girl. She is different in her attitude toward him and believes him real gallant and brave. The father also has changed his attitude toward Jerry. Jerry's hoax is not successful for soon the lieutenant appears. He recognizes Jerry and PERKIN'S MYSTIC MANOR (Aug. 16).—The cast: Pinkney Perkins (Orral Humphrey); Princess Murad (Josephine Phillips); Mogul (Joe Massey); Mecca (Jo Taylor).

Pinkney Perkins, who juggles law for a living, is willed a large estate by a grateful client. Unknown to him, the mansion, long deserted, has been usurped by a pair of Hindoo mystics—Princess Murad and her assistant, Mogul—and their slavey, Mecca. Perkins goes to inspect his new property and the Hindoos invoke the mystic power of the Sacred Sceptre of Old King Jam Boree to warn him to keep away. Ignoring the warning, Perkins enters the house and finds himself in a room fitted up in Oriental style, where he is seized and questioned by Mogul. He announces that he is the owner of the place, but Mogul refuses to vacate and Princess Murad resorts to vampire tactics to gain permission from Perkins to use the mansion.

Mogul's jealousy is aroused by her apparent fondness for the intruder. The Princess and Perkins go into the garden and the lawyer falls under the spell of the wiles of the Hindoo maid. Mogul plants a bomb under the bench on which they are sitting, intending to blow them up, but Pinkney discovers the explosive and makes a hasty retreat from the danger zone. Murad explains to Mogul that her fondness for Perkins was only pretended and a reconciliation follows. Mecca is in love with Mogul and when she discovers him embracing the Princess she lights the bomb in a jealous rage and kills them both. The Sacred Sceptre is broken in the explosion and Mecca flings it to the ground. Enraged at her insolence, it explodes, and Mecca meets an unexpected finish. At his office Perkins reads that he has been bequeathed another large estate. But once is enough for him, he decides, and he tears the will into bits and drops them in his waste basket.

HELL TO PAY AUSTIN (Fine Arts—Five Parts—Aug. 20).—The cast: Hell-to-Pay Austin (Wilfred Lucas); Briar Rose (Bessie Love); Dad Dawson, her father (Ralph Lewis); Doris Valentine (Mary Alden); Harry Tracey (Eugene Pallette); Jack Dale (James O'Shea); Daniel Marston (Clyde Hopkins); Old Sallie (Marie Wilkson); Fred, Peter and Bill (A. D. Sears, William H. Brown and Tom Wilson).

"Hell-to-Pay" Austin came by his title honestly. Dad Dawson, father of the one kid in the lumber camp, dies. He had been a preacher. No one in camp but "Hell-to-Pay," the overseer, knew that "Dad" had died from drink—his one and only fall from grace. When the question of where the Rose shall live arises, she willingly accepts the guardianship of "Hell-to-Pay," with "Old Sallie to learn her female ways."

Gradually the association of the young girl softens the bitter man but he does not realize until Jack Dale comes home from college what the girl has come to mean to him. Jack is son of the mill owner and soon the camp settles the fate of "Briar Rose" and Jack to its own satisfaction.

Jack and Briar Rose return from a fishing trip one day with a stranger—a beautiful woman who is a tourist and who has wandered away from her party. The woman wins Briar Rose's confidence and exacts a promise that some day she will come to New York to see her. Then the woman, Doris Valentine, meets "Hell-to-Pay" and as suddenly decides to leave camp. He had met her on his one and only trip to New York and had been a victim by her and her paramour by means of the old badger game. It is at his urgent suggestion that she gets out quickly.

The camp eventually decides to send Briar Rose to the city for a little polishing. Snubbed by the young girls at the seminary to which she has been sent, Briar Rose runs away to her one friend, Doris Valentine. The latter makes use of the girl to provide herself with a trip to Europe, but Hell-to-Pay interferes just in time to save the little girl. He makes a flying trip to New York and arrives in the midst of a gay party. With Briar Rose tucked safely beneath one arm, Hell-to-Pay faces the crowd and in a fine old-fashioned rough-house more than holds his own. Then Hell-to-Pay gets the surprise of his life. On his trip to New York he had been led to believe he had killed the man who had trapped him with the woman. Instead the man was alive all the time and the police, who are on his trail, arrive in time to put an end to the fight and capture the man.

Hell-to-Pay and Briar Rose return to the camp, but it is not until Jack Dale marries a co-ed that Hell-to-Pay realizes fully and confesses that all the time his own heart has been safe in the keeping of Briar Rose.

LIEUT. DANNY, U. S. A. (Ince—Five Parts—Aug. 20).—The cast: Lieutenant Danny Ward (William Desmond); Senorita Ysobel Ventura (Enid Markey); Senora Marie Ventura (Gertrude Claire); Don Mario Ventura (Thornton Edwards); Pedro Lopez, "The Butcher" (Robert Kortman).

Lieutenant Danny Ward, trotting along at the head of a platoon of cavalry, patrolling the border, sees through his glasses a caleche being furiously driven toward the Rio Grande, with Mexicans in hot pursuit. As the caleche nears the border Danny and his men appear and the baffled Mexicans retire cursing.

The occupants of the caleche are Senora Marie Ventura and her daughter, Senorita Ysobel Ventura. The senora is a haughty aristocrat; her niece a far-famed beauty. They are fleeing from their hacienda to escape the vengeance of Pedro Lopez, "the butcher," a marauder who once had been a peon on the Senora's estate. Danny escorts the woman and girl to the army post and places them in the safe keeping of the Colonel. Then he promptly falls in love with Senorita Ysobel.

One day the senora's son, Don Mario Ventura, arrives at the post and assures his mother that Pedro and his bandits have withdrawn and that it will be safe to return to the hacienda just across the border. The senora, her son and Senorita Ysobel start for home leaving Lieutenant Danny, disconsolate, behind.

As the days go by, the call to Danny becomes stronger and one midnight he steps away from the post, crosses the border and joins Ysobel. He arrives at the hacienda just in time, for Lopez has returned and presently the house is in a state of siege.

The defenders are hopelessly outnumbered and Pedro, athirst with lust and vengeance, prepares to pay off old grudges against the Senora and possess Ysobel.

Early in the fighting Don Mario is killed and his mother is stricken with paralysis, leaving the severely wounded Danny and the courageous Ysobel to hold on until relief comes. When every desperate strategy seems to have failed and Ysobel seems doomed to fall a victim of "the butcher," a shot from Lieutenant Danny's pistol kills Pedro Lopez.

Carrying Ysobel in his arms, Danny manages to reach the frontier and is hailed with delight by his old comrades. There is a wedding at the post and Ysobel salutes the flag of her new country.

Major Ainslee is a dignified Southern gentleman who loves a racehorse best and a good horse race second. All that, of course, excepting his daughter Betty. The old Major's generosity and utter disregard for business details brings him to the point where he is on the verge of being impoverished. He is not particularly worried, however, for the big race of the year is only a short ways off and his horse, Miss Minta, is as sure to win it as he is sure Kentucky is the grandest State in the Union.

And then the Rev. Thomas Hayden, who comes from New England, arrives on the scene and immediately starts a campaign to do away with horse racing in the State. What's more, he wins his fight and the law making it illegal to race horses is passed just in time to make it impossible to hold the big race the Major has been counting on.

The minister has fallen in love with Betty, but she spurns him when he takes up his fight against that which her father loves best. The young minister is genuinely fond of the family, however, and when he hears of their financial embarrassment he tries to lend them what little money he has. His offer is scorned as coming from one who has shown himself to be anything but a real friend.

Through Doc. Witherspoon, a friend of the major, the young minister learns that if the Major had the money to send Miss Minta to a neighboring State where the big race is to be held he could undoubtedly recoup his fortunes. The young man fights it out with himself and finally decides to put aside his conscience and go to the aid of the people he really loves. With Doc. Witherspoon as a fellow-conspirator, he gets the Major to accept his money, the latter, of course, being unaware from whence it really came.

Miss Minta wins and the Major is restored to financial ease. Doc. then betrays the minister and the Major takes the young man into his heart and his home.

HOME (Ince—Five Parts—Aug. 27).—The cast: Bessie Wheaton (Bessie Barriscale); Bob Wheaton (Charles Ray); Inez Wheaton (Clara Williams); Allan Shelby (George Fisher); Clara Wheaton (Agnes Herring); Jeremiah Wheaton (Thomas S. Guise); Daisy Flores (Louise Glaum); Count d'Orr (Joseph J. Dowling).

The Wheaton family are among the "new rich" and their sudden prosperity has turned their heads—that is, the heads of all but Bessie, who has gone abroad and comes home more sensible than ever and thoroughly disgusted with all her people.

Young Allen Shelby is greatly attracted by Bessie. He is unprepared, however, for the change that takes place in the supposedly sensible Bessie when she, out of patience with her people, determines to teach them all a lesson.

Her brother has engaged himself to a chorus girl. Bessie cultivates the girl's acquaintance and stimulates her way of acting, much to her brother's shame and to the astonishment of Shelby. Her sister is setting her cap for an impecunious nobleman and Bessie flirts so astonishingly with him that he transfers his affections, only to be sent on his way when the sister finally turns from him herself.

In such fashion Bessie proceeds to reform the entire household, and when the family finally determines to take her to account for her ways, she turns on them and flings at their feet a diary she has kept in which she sets out their faults in plain language.

When Bessie finally attempts to run away from the home that is so distasteful to her, Shelby meets her and forcibly compels her to return. The family has had an awakening in the meantime and receive Bessie back with open arms.

PILLARS OF SOCIETY (Fine Arts—Aug. 27).—The Cast: Karsten Bernick (Henry Walthall); Lona Tonnesen (Mary Alden); Betty (Juanita Archer); Johan (George Beranger); Karsten's mother (Josephine B. Crowell); Mme. Dorf (Olga Gray).

Karsten Bernick, last of the house of Bernick, whose shipyards are the mainstay of the town, is forced to return home from a Bohemian life in Paris to assume the management of the business which is nearly bankrupt. He breaks an engagement to Lona to marry Betty, her rich half-sister. With her fortune he saves the company and eventually comes to be known as a Pillar of Society.

Then a certain Mme. Dorf, an actress, arrives in town and threatens to expose an episode in his history which occurred during his days in Paris. He persuades his brother-in-law, Johan, to take the blame for him. Johan agrees to do so for his sister's sake and then leaves for America with his sister Lona.

Mme. Dorf dies and leaves her little daughter to Karsten's care. Karsten really fears to refuse the guardianship and wins new honors as an upright benevolent citizen.

In the midst of his security in the community, Johan and Lona suddenly return, the former to clear his name, the latter, who still loves Karsten, to persuade him to establish his place as a Pillar of Society on a foundation of Truth instead of lies. Karsten defends himself vigorously on the grounds that a Pillar of Society must resort to suterfuge and deception to order to protect society which depends upon him.

Johan falls in love with Karsten's little protege, the daughter of Mme. Dorf, and renews his insistence that Karsten clear his name. Desperate, Karsten connives at their departure on an unseaworthy ship, but his plan reacts on himself, for his only child, Olaf, has run away and been discovered on the ship as a stowaway. The ship catches fire and there is a thrilling rescue of the little boy in a motor boat.

Karsten is awakened to the truth of his position and at a reception given him by the townspeople as a tribute to their leading citizen, confesses the truth. Thus he learns that the Spirits of Truth and Freedom are the true Pillars of Society and not man, however, powerful.

THE GRIP OF EVIL (No. 6—"The Hypocrites"—Two Parts—Aug. 21).—While boarding at a farmhouse in a simple little country village John Burton seeks an answer to his eternal question, "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?"

The farmer is a God-fearing man, but lives in a very narrow world of his own and feels that if he keeps one hand on his Bible he can be excused for many things he does with the other. He has two children—Jessie, who has artistic inclinations, and whose sketches show promise, and Peter, who has an inventive leaning. Burton takes a deep interest in both, and his sympathy and understanding of their ambitions wins him their everlasting friendship. Their father objects to their devoting their time to anything except drudgery on the farm and destroys Peter's plans and Jessie's sketches, putting an end to their "foolishness."

While strolling through the woods Jessie meets an artist sketching and innocently agrees to pose for him. Here the man whom her father desires her to marry discovers her and carries her home. Her father starts giving her a horse whipping and Peter, in a murderous rage, aims a gun at his head and stops the brutality. Disowned and driven from home, Burton tells them to come to him in the city and he will help them. He furnishes them with ample funds to complete the studies dearest to their hearts. While in the city Jessie meets the artist again and Peter falls in with bad company. The money advanced by Burton is used for their pleasures and studies and ambitions are forgotten. Burton learns through a woman cast off by Peter of his proteges' deception and ingratitude. Disgusted with the outcome of his misplaced confidence his question, "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?" is still unanswered.

THE DAWN OF FREEDOM (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Aug. 14).—The cast: The Patriot (Charles Richman); Elizabeth McLean (Arline Pretty); Dick Cartwright (James Morrison); Irving (Thomas R. Mills); Count (Templer Saxe); Strike Leader (Edward Elkas); Nancy Cartwright (Billie Billings). Director, Paul Scardon.

"The Dawn of Freedom" is a stinging satire on the death of those ideals that prompted the founders of the United States. It contrasts in bold outline the spirit of '76, when every American worked for the welfare of the new-born country, with the attitude of the modern-day American who looks only to his personal gain with no thought of his country.

Richard Cartwright, a revolutionary patriot, like hundreds of others, was granted a plot of land in the Alleghanies. Cartwright was engaged to wed Elizabeth Bradbury, and, in company with a small party, he left for his plot of land, promising to return in the fall. Arriving at this land, he was captured by Indians. Later he was rescued by Ambrose, a missionary, who had spent many years in India. Ambrose's efforts to save Cartwright came to naught.

Ambrose was versed in Eastern hypnotism, so he decided that rather than to have Cartwright tortured and probably burned at the stake, he would put him in a trance and have him buried, after which he would exhume him and bring him out of the trance. But after the burial, Ambrose himself was killed. Before being put under the spell Cartwright wrote his will, giving his land half to his brother and half to his fiancee.

One hundred and thirty-nine years afterward we find Cartwright's little plot of land is made up of coal mines worth millions, with a descendant of Philip Cartwright, brother of Richard, in sole control and with Elizabeth McLean, great-granddaughter of Elizabeth Bradbury, the daughter of one of the miners, dependent upon the scant wages of a miner. In his grasp for power Cartwright has frozen McLean out of what was his half of the property and the latter is now living in poverty.

The miners go out on strike. Cartwright refusing both demands, violence is resorted to and one of the coal mines is blown up. In the terrific explosion, the aluminum casket holding the body of Richard Cartwright is blown to the surface, where its top is blown off. Dick, son of the coal baron, encounters the casket just as Cartwright, delivered from his trance by the impact of the explosion, steps out of it. He is emaciated and has much the same appearance as a butterfly emerging from its chrysalis.

The patriot is taken to Dick's home, where is witnessed the insidious inroads of a war—not the Revolutionary War, but a war of a social kind, where each individual is engaged in walking on the necks of his brethren. He learns from Dick of the rapid growth of the United States and of the marvelous inventions. These are unbelievable until he is shown some of them, but he encounters an even more unbelievable phenomenon—that all these things have been achieved and yet the people of the country are not happy.

He witnesses the riotous scenes attending the coal strike and learns it is all the cause of Cartwright's refusal to pay a living wage and to improve the working conditions of the miners. He also learns that McLean, whose ancestors owned half of the property, now is poverty-stricken.

Confronted by the patriot and by the rioting strikers, Cartwright dies of heart failure and the patriot, attempting to quiet the strikers, is mortally wounded, but his courage and spirit—that of '76—is transfused to Dick, the son, and everything ends happily for the workers.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE (Chapter 11, "The Fugitive Witness"—Two Parts—Drama—July 31).—The Stafford family, having arrived at David's country home, prepare to sally forth and enjoy the skating and tobogganning. Gloria is in a sombre mood, but is finally persuaded to join the merry party. Mulry, now a guest of his friend Davidson, who lives near David Stafford, looks from his window and sees the skating party on the lake nearby. He tries to persuade his jolly companions to abandon their cards and highballs and join in the outdoor sports, but his pleadings prove futile. On the following day, however, Mulry surprises his companions by bolting, clad in a regulation tobogganning suit, and a few moments later they are amazed at seeing the genial fat man sliding down hill with Gloria Stafford.

Mulry, quite unaware with whom he is sliding, is surprised and delighted when Gloria, who has recognized him, invites him to David's home for a hot toddy. He immediately accepts her invatation and a few moments later they are in a tete-a-tete in the big living room. Suddenly Gloria rounds on the astonished Mulry with the question, "Why did you mail the letters from Freneau to me?" Before the disconcerted Mulry can answer, Dr. Royce enters and deliberately puts an end to the conversation. Mulry, at a glance from Royce, excuses himself and departs, exclaiming as he goes, "Good-bye, I'm off for Palm Beach, Florida." As he is about to leave the house Lois intercepts him and asks him if he has seen her letters among Freneau's effects. Mulry replies in the negative.

Gloria, angry at Royce for his apparently rude interruption, surprises her father by a sudden demand to be taken to Palm Beach, Fla. A few days later, hard on the heels of Mulry, the Stafford family arrives at Florida. Mulry quickly learns of Gloria's presence and is forced to unusual exertions in trying to evade her. The chase finally becomes too hot for him and he seizes an auspicious moment to decamp.

Gloria, one day, meets the Indian who once threatened to make her his squaw. He is now educated and again requests her hand in marriage, quite in accordance with the white man's code. He is surprised and saddened by Gloria's refusal and is about to turn away when he spies Dr. Royce. His face darkens with sudden hate, and Gloria, quick to see the sudden change, questions him. To her horror she learns from him that Dr. Royce and not Freneau was her rescuer.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE, NO. 12, "Her Fighting Spirit" (Two Parts—Aug. 7).—The cast: Gloria Stafford (Billie Burke); Dr. Stephen Royce (Henry Kolker); Richard Freneau (David Powell); David Stafford (William Roselle); Pierpont Stafford (William T. Carleton); Lois Stafford (Jule Power); Judge Freeman (Henry Weaver); Gideon Trask (Frank McGlynn); Frank Mulry (Frank Belcher); Staas Casinur (Maury Stuart).

Failing to overtake Mulry at Palm Beach, Gloria Stafford, her father, brother and Doctor Royce return to New York but Gloria continues to mourn over the loss of Freneau, her fiance, and grows more pale and wan with each passing day. Doctor Royce, noticing her pallor, searches for something that will divert her mind from her grief. Then Judge Freeman rises and explains that he must hurry away. Royce instantly decides a visit to the night court and a glimpse of the seamy side of life may prove just the shock Gloria needs to turn her mind from her own troubles. Accordingly Royce, Gloria and Pierpont accompany Judge Freeman to the court and sit as spectators while one case after another is tried. A humble waiter named Casinur, whose wife has just died, is brought before the judge, and Stass, his little boy, is about to be turned over to the children's society when Gloria intervenes and promises to give the lad a home and find a job for her father. Pierpont objects, but Royce thinks the plan a good one since it will give Gloria something new to think about, so the millionaire reluctantly consents.

Mulry is brought before the court for speeding, and Gloria gets Judge Freeman to commit him to jail till she can question him. A tramp, charged with being "drunk and disorderly," is then arraigned, and Gloria recognizes in him Gideon Trask, the man who murdered Freneau, attempts to scream out her accusation, but faints before she can utter a word. She is borne away and Freeman nods wearily and orders the man released, since it is his first offense. Later when Gloria recovers and tells her story she finds the man is gone, and sets out to follow him.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE, No. 13, "The Midnight" (Two Parts—Aug. 14).—The cast: Gloria Stafford (Billie Burke); Dr. Stephen Royce (Henry Kolker); Richard Freneau (David Powell); David Stafford (William Roselle); Pierpont Stafford (William T. Carleton); Lois Stafford (Jule Power); Judge Freeman (Henry Weaver); Gideon Trask (Frank McGlynn); Staas Casinur (Maury Steuart); "Choey" McFadden (Rapley Holmes); "The Hag" (Adelaide Hastings).

Gloria Stafford after recognizing in Gideon Trask the murderer of her lover, Richard Freneau, and recovering from the swoon that follows the recognition of Trask, sets out to follow the murderer. She traces him down into an evil part of the city and there is set upon by thugs, from whom she escapes with difficulty. Resuming her pursuit of Trask she follows him into a saloon in a tough district where she is seized by Choey McFadden, who insists upon her dancing with him. Doctor Royce, immediately after Gloria left the chambers of Judge Freeman, sets out to follow her to protect her from harm. She moves so swiftly from place to place, however, that Royce is never quite able to catch up to her, and only arrives at the saloon after Gloria has been insulted by McFadden. Royce knocks the burly character down and then the police are summoned to break up the riot which follows. Gloria, Royce and McFadden are arrested and taken to night court, where Judge Freeman and Pierpont Stafford are astonished to behold Gloria and Royce in the toils of the police. Trask has escaped from the saloon during the melee.

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION

GOD'S HALF ACRE (Five Parts—Aug. 7).—The cast: Blossom (Mabel Taliaferro); Henry Norman (J. W. Johnston); Rose Norman (Helen Dahl); Bess Norman (Lorraine Frost); Perry Westley (Richard Neill); Prof. Sterling (John Smiley); Parker (Daniel Jarrett); Lucy, "the dragon" (Miriam Hutchins).

Henry Norman, a successful novelist, is engaged in writing a book. He decides he must delve into real life for his material, as his previous work has been too idealistic. The new book is about aged types, and his friend, Perry Westley, gives him an opportunity to live a while at a home for the aged called "Rainbow's End."

Westley is in love with Mrs. Norman, and is openly paying her attentions, but Henry believes implicitly in the honor of his friend. Henry, unsuspecting, takes up his temporary residence at Rainbow's End. More interesting than all the aged types is the forlorn young maid-of-all work, Blossom, who, scarcely more than a child in years, is old before her time. Henry laughingly calls her "The Little Old Young Lady," and in her he finds the inspiration for his book. She tells him all about her aged charges, and aids him in gathering material. He becomes the knight of her dreams, and unconsciously he is drawn toward her. Another who feels the charm of the stranger is Lucy Hargreaves, the matron, commonly known as "The Dragon." In spite of her ugliness, she is determined to make him love her.

Henry's thoughts are concerned only with his work. A letter brings him tickets from a playwright friend to attend the opening of a new play. He throws the tickets into the wastebasket, but seeing the wistful expression on Blossom's face, he asks her to accompany him, intending to write a chapter on "The Little Old Young Lady in Society." Her delight knows no bounds, especially when Henry brings some of his sister's clothes for her to shine in. The inmates of Rainbow's End joyfully watch her and her escort leave for the theater—all except "The Dragon," who is wild with jealousy.

Henry's wife and Westley are also at the premiere, and Rose Norman, seeing Blossom with her husband, decides that the time has come for her to run away with Westley. Blossom found a page of Henry's manuscript, in which a proposal of marriage is made to "The Little Old Young Lady." She thinks it is meant for her, and before saying good-night to him, she asks, innocently, "when are we going to be married?" Henry, in surprise, is obliged to tell her that he is already married. She creeps upstairs, to cry herself to sleep, when she is confronted by the angry "Dragon," who drives her out of the house.

Henry goes home, only to find that his wife and his false friend have eloped in an automobile which is shortly struck by lightning. Both are killed. Blossom takes refuge in God's Half Acre, an asylum for crippled children, presided over by Cynthia Huckaby, and she helps Cynthia with the children. Time brings her an opportunity to save the life of Henry Norman's little son, and in this way Henry finds her again.

He promises to make her over into a young young lady, instead of an old young lady, and then writes the last words of his new novel, "They lived happily ever after."

THE PRETENDERS (Five Parts—Aug. 21).—The cast: Helen Pettingill (Emmy Wehlen); Hubert Stanwood (Paul Gordon); Silas T. Pettingill (Charles Eldridge); Maria Pettingill (Kate Blancke); Inspector Burke (Edwin Holt); Macklin Thurston (William Davidson); John Stafford (Howard Truesdell); Joseph Bailey (Jerome Wilson); Rita (Jean Hume); Andrews (Hugh Jeffrey); Dugan (Harry Neville).

Silas Pettingill strikes oil and becomes immensely wealthy. His wife Maria and their daughter Helen demand that they move from their middle western home to a mansion on Fifth avenue, New York. Even then they are dissatisfied, for they have no fashionable friends. Helen is constantly reading books about royalty, and she bewails her fate because she knows no lords or earls. Silas wearies of their complaints. He goes out and makes friends with a taxicab driver, an agreeable young man named Hubert Stanwood, and as the hour grows late, takes him home with him to bed.

In the morning Mrs. Pettingill demands to know who the stranger is. Not daring to tell her he has brought home only a chauffeur, he introduces Stanwood as Count Erlütt. Mrs. Pettingill runs to tell Helen the glad news, and they plan a series of social functions to introduce their guest. Soon the "Count" is seen everywhere with Helen. He does not want to pose under false colors, but Pettingill implores him not to let them know that he has deceived them.

At a tea dansant they meet Macklin Thurston, who is introduced to them as the Earl of Bradwood. Stanwood starts when he hears the name, for his own grandfather is the Earl of Bradwood and his older brother the heir. He does not know that both have died, and that Thurston, discovering that the second son, Hubert, has been missing for several years, has appeared as a false claimant for the title. Stanwood decides to say nothing, but to investigate.

Thurston is really the proprietor of an international employment agency. He uses this position to supply Huntington Lodge, the Adirondack home of the Pettingills, with two servants, Rita and Dugan, who are clever crooks. Both Thurston, as the Earl, and Stanwood, as the Count, are invited to a house party at the Lodge.

Helen and Stanwood have fallen in love with each other at their first meeting. Stanwood proposes, and Helen accepts him. But Thurston tells Rita she must find a way to compromise Stanwood. She does so, and Helen breaks her engagement to Stanwood, and announces her engagement to Thurston, known as "the Earl." Stanwood engages a detective to unmask Thurston, but he has manufactured credentials, and Stanwood himself is unmasked as a false count by a man who knew him as a chauffeur. Helen orders him to drive her guests back to their hotel from the lawn fete that is in progress.

Thurston goes to Helen's room and tries to persuade her to elope with him, but she refuses. Under cover of night, Rita and Dugan attempt to steal Helen's jewels. Stanwood returns in time to prevent them, but he is injured in the struggle, and when Helen enters she thinks it is he who is the thief.

Still loving him, however, she urges him to escape, but the real thieves are apprehended. Detective Burke is about to take both Thurston and Stanwood into custody, not knowing which one of them is the false Earl of Bradwood, when the lawyer arrives from New York and identifies Stanwood as the genuine Earl. Thurston is lead away, and Stanwood and Helen, soon to be Lady Bradwood, are reunited.

LITTLE EVE EDGARTON (Five Parts—Aug. 21).—The cast: Eve Edgarton (Ella Hall); Miss Van Eaton (Doris Pawn); Cousin Elsa (Gretchen Lederer); James Barton (Herbert Rawlinson); Paul R. Edgarton (Thomas Jefferson); John Elbertson (Marc Fenton).

Little Eve has always been the companion of her father, who, with his friend, John Elbertson, roams the face of the earth in search of rare botanical specimens. Eve has never known her mother and has been reared by her father in the studious atmosphere of the scientist, without any thought of love or anything approaching affection having entered her life.

Shortly after the play begins her father decides she shall marry his friend, who is a man many years Eve's senior. The girl acepts the dictum as a matter of course. At this time they are in the heart of South Africa following their scientific pursuits. A native runner brings cabled information that there will be at Los Angeles a meeting of botanists, and the two men decide that they will attend, Eve, of course, going along as part of the traveling equipment.

James Barton, a young man of wealth and of a highly flirtatious disposition, has grown tired of New York society and decides to shift the scene of his activities to Los Angeles. Shortly after he arrives there the attention of the hotel guests is divided between his escapades with every pretty girl in sight and the strange gathering of delegates to the convention.

Little Eve Edgarton has attracted considerable attention from the guests, because being a rather pretty girl she remains bobnobbing with the botanists. Dressed very plainly and unattractively, her big bow spectacles make her noticeable upon the verandas and in the rotunda of the fashionable resort hotel.

Barton has a cousin who has set her heart upon the young man marrying his friend, Miss Van Eaton. This cousin is inclined to play pranks upon Barton, and when she introduces Barton to Eve Edgarton, the courtesies are extended more as a joke then anything else. But, as in many cases, this joke did not work out as intended.

Barton takes a sudden interest in the little botanist and the flirtatious young man finds much to attract him in the quaint and unusual personality of the little student. They indulge in horseback rides and gradually become better acquainted. On one occasion, while they have riden their horses to the top of a mountain, a violent electric storm comes upon them and during the outburst, Barton is struck by lightning. Eve half drags and half carries him to a cave she has discovered in the mountain and by scientific methods of massage, she restores him from the shock.

Here in the cave the senior Edgarton and his friend Elbertson accidentally discover the young couple, and then it is that the minds of the scientists are opened to the fact that youth courts youth and age is out of the running. We are left to believe that ultimately the young couple will enter a new life in partnership.

THE GIRL OF LOST LAKE (Five Parts—Aug. 28).—The cast: Jude Clark (Myrtle Gonzalez); Mrs. McAndrews (Mary Du Cello); Victoria Harlowe (Ruby Cox); Vaughan McAndrews (Val Paul); Dave Bean (Fred Church); Judge West (George Hernandez); Abner Clark (Jack Curtis); Wallace Harrison (Bertram Grassby); Wainwright McAndrews (Jack Connelly); Sim Perkins (Bobby Mack).

When McAndrews was a boy his father took him to Lost Lake for a vacation, and a childish friendship was established between Vaughan and Jude Clark. In later years Vaughan goes to Lost Lake for recreation. Because the hotel accommodations are insufficient, Abner Clark takes Vaughan to his home, where in daily association with Jude the childhood friendship is renewed and gradually intensified.

Judge West, sensing the trend of events, charges Vaughan with "trifling" and reminds him that Jude is engaged to marry Dave Bean, a man of her own style. Harrison has induced Jude to pose for him, promising payment of $50 for the service, but the completed picture shows Jude in a pose she had never assumed. When Vaughan sees the picture the opinion he has formed of the mountain girl suddenly changes.

Several of the gossips get a view of the canvas and Harrison lets it be understood that Jude posed exactly as she was painted. Jude had spurned the artist's $50 when she discovered the trick he had played upon her, but when her father fell ill and needed hospital attention Jude pocketed her pride and called to get the cash.

While she is at Harrison's camp Dave Bean, guided by the village gossips, enters and accuses Jude of lax morality, punishes the artist and declares the mountain girl shall never become Mrs. Bean. When Abner Clark dies Jude is left without a protector or means of self-support, but Judge West intercepts her as she is about to leave Lost Lake and installs her at his own camp as full partner with him in his gold prospecting.

Vaughan had left Lost Lake heartbroken because he believed ill of Jude. Months pass, he writes to Jude that he has reconsidered and asks her to invite him to return. Jude's eager answer is unhappily stowed in Judge West's pocket for an indefinite time, and it is not until they strike gold that the missive is accidentally revealed.

Discovery of the letter leads to a speedy understanding.

FROHMAN AMUSEMENT CORP.

JAFFERY (Six Reels—August).—Jaffery Chayne is the spectacular one of four chums, the others being Hilary Freeth, a literary man; Adrian Boluero, a short story writer, and Tom Castleton, a playwright.

The story opens with Tom Castleton going on a voyage for his health and leaving with his friend, Adrian, the manuscript of the first novel he ever attempted.

Shortly after Castleton's trip, he dies at sea and when word is received by Adrian of his friend's death, the temptation to secure the girl he loves by publishing his friend's novel and taking the money and credit from it is so strong that he succumbs and becomes the "literary lion of the hour."

Jaffery returns to London with the widow of his associate, who is an Albanian chieftain's daughter, the last one of her tribe. Jaffery arrives in London with this strange woman and she is introduced into the household of Hilary Freeth and meets Jaffery's friends. Adrian brings his sweetheart, Doria, and when she is introduced to Jaffery, it is a case of love, on Jaffery's part, at first sight, he having no eyes for Liosha, the widow desperately in love with him.

Doria, however, marries Adrian, supposed to be the great author, and Jaffery leaves Liosha in London and then goes on another expedition. On his return he finds Adrian dead. His love for the wife, Doria, is as strong as ever and he tenderly cares for her and takes charge of Adrian's affairs.

When Jaffery and Hilary are appointed the legal executors of Adrian's estate they find the original novel in Castleton's handwriting and nothing that could be made into a second novel from the pen of Adrian. They realize that Adrian has stolen his fame and fortune and that his conscience really has killed him. Jaffery realizes that the knowledge of this will probably be the death blow to Doria, who has always worshipped Adrian as a genius, so he takes the papers home and puts them out of sight in his desk and then begins to go through his own experiences and from them he writes a novel, signs it with Adrian's name and gives it to the publishers as the second work of the literary genius. The novel does make a tremendous sensation.

When Jaffery proposes marriage to Doria she refuses him. The former starts on a long voyage. Liosha begs to go, too. Jaffery consents. The result is the strengthening of the love of Liosha for Jaffery. Doria learns the perfidy of her late husband and offers to be the wife of Jaffery in gratitude for his self-sacrifice. Jaffery, however, discovers he loves Liosha and Doria releases him.

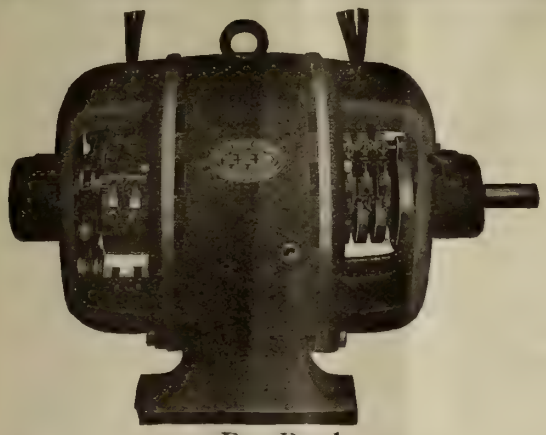
"MARTIN"
ROTARY CONVERTER



For Real
"SUN-LIT PICTURES"

PERFECT REEL DISSOLVING

The voltage of the "MARTIN" poly-phase converter is maintained constant, so that the starting of the second arc does not disturb the light given by the first, making the dissolving of the reels as simple as if the arcs were operated in a Direct Current district. Our emergency panel does away with expensive compensarcs and cuts the wiring and installation cost in half.

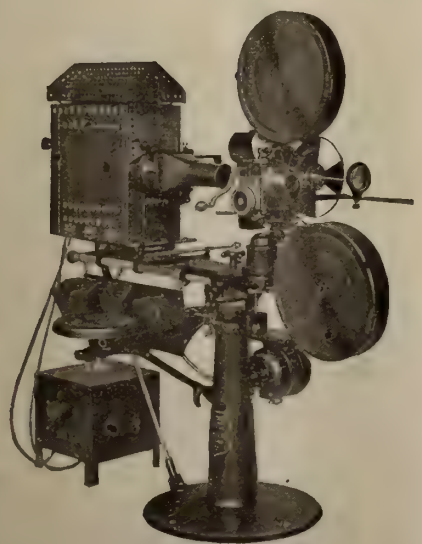
THE TEST OF TIME



COMPETITIVE KNOCKERS SAID, "The 1916 Model MOTIOGRAPH with the new Sliding Disc will not stand the heavy grind."

(PROOF THAT THE KNOCKERS WERE WRONG)

Hundreds of these MOTIOGRAPH machines have now been in use for over one year and not one sliding disc has been returned to be replaced and we have letters from all parts of the country saying the 1916 Model MOTIOGRAPH is giving the same rock-steady picture that it did one year ago when it was new.

It Has Stood the Test - - It Is the Big Buy Today

Can you afford to purchase any other make when you can get such satisfactory service from a MOTIOGRAPH?

Print your own tickets as the crowds pass in

With a National Ticket-Printing Register in your ticket booth you can print, record, and issue your own tickets as patrons lay down their money—and do it at the rate of one hundred per minute when necessary.

Some big advantages of this register

It is easy to operate. Press the keys and the ticket goes to the patron direct.

It is quick. Cashier can print, record, and issue tickets faster than any crowd can file by the ticket window.

It affords air-tight protection. Tickets are not issued until they have been recorded.

It is economical. It is no longer necessary to stock up with expensive preprinted tickets that may be lost or taken.

Fourteen different styles of registers from which to select. Some print stub tickets, some print in two colors. Others do both, and all give you a range of ticket prices.

The National Ticket-Printing Register is the only ticket machine in the world that prints, records, and issues tickets from a blank roll of paper.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS (INC)

THE Exhibitor who follows blindly the trail of loud claims of superiority which finds outlet in the current trade press, must sooner or later pay dearly for his easy going attitude.

To book a play on the strength of the fleeting and too often fictitious reputation of a "star" under the mistaken notion that that is what the public wants, is to follow a will o' the wisp which will eventually lead to the dismal swamp of commercial failure.

If the star were a real attraction, his or her acting ability would be the basis of the "star" appeal. The BLUEBIRD policy of the "The Play's the Thing" suits the personality of the player to the type of character required, regardless of whether such player's name has ever appeared in electric lights or not.

The result is that the BLUEBIRD play is always strong, worthy, and the basis of fine entertainment, and the acting is far above that of even the most widely exploited star player productions.

These facts presented each week to the ten million readers of the Saturday Evening Post are bringing increased prosperity to Exhibitors of BLUEBIRD Photoplays.

"Such pictures are just what the Exhibitors want!"

That's what a well known Exhibitor of Boston says of the Pathé Gold Rooster Play in five parts. Here's his letter:

The Shine Girl

THOMAS D SORIERO
MANAGER

August 9, 1916.

Mr. Edward Thanhouser,
President of the Thanhouser Film Corp,
New Rochelle, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Thanhouser:

The production of The Shine Girl, I received last night. I immediately screened it before an audience of 100 prominent Bostonians this morning at the Theatre. Had special music to go with it, and it met with an unanimous approval. Personally it is one of the best productions I have seen in a long while. The acting throughout was very well done, detail work perfect, photography wonderful. The star Miss Glady's Hulette played the part of the Shine Girl to perfection. One thing that I must mention about her is that she is very attractive and knows how to dress well, which makes her very pleasing to the eye. The picture is one of the cleanest productions I ever saw put together, as there is nothing there to offend anybody. It makes a pleasant entertainment for all those who wish to go to a good, clean show, and if you continue making such pictures, you will always find a big market for them, for they are just what the people want, and just what the exhibitors also want.

Very sincerely yours,

Thos D Soriero

Manager.

When the telephone business was organized, men quit worrying about communication.

When the automobile was put on a practical basis, men quit worrying about transportation.

When Paramount was organized, motion picture exhibitors quit worrying about their service.

Not till Paramount began its distribution of two supreme photoplays a week, 104 every year, did the motion picture business take on a semblance of stability.

Today, with thousands of exhibitors in the Paramount family, a Paramount contract remains the one solid guarantee of the success of a theatre.

With a Paramount contract you too can quit worrying about your program or its continuity through all that may happen next week or next year.

The SECRET of the SUBMARINE

Presented by American Film Company, Inc.
Directed by George Sargent

"Wednesdays Almost Doubled in Business"

HIPPODROME THEATRE
Cincinnati, Ohio, July 27th, 1916.

I wish to inform you of the success our theatre is enjoying directly from the serial story, "THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE."

Our Wednesdays have almost doubled in business; we ourselves, are interested in the story and we look forward to its coming with greater interest than any feature.

The acting is great and the photography excellent, the story, directing and the settings are far in advance of anything we have ever run on our curtain.

We feel thankful to you for interesting us in this serial and we cheerfully recommend it to all exhibitors that are skeptical of a serial.

Yours very truly,
THE HIPPODROME THEATRE
(Signed) O. J. SYBERT, Mgr.

This virile, patriotic photoplay (in 15 chapters) has proved the greatest drawing card ever shown in thousands of theatres. It gets the overflow profits!

Juanita Hanson, as Cleo Burke, and Thomas Chatterton, as Lieut. Hope, supported by a strong cast, give the screen gripping thrills and smashing climaxes that draw audiences to the edge of the seats, and hold them there till the end of the chapter.

IN announcing the formation of the MARY PICKFORD FILM CORPORATION, I want to first express my gratitude for the co-operation of the exhibitors, everywhere, and also for the generous response of the public in bringing success to my efforts and various creations on the screen. Surely without either no one can have progressed and in my instance our work together has been so full of happiness that it makes doubly treasured the success that has come to us.

IN the selection of scenarios, the casting of companies, the direction, production and character creating of motion pictures I am sure that I have learned something every day and that I will keep on acquiring this knowledge. And that is just why I want to use it to the best advantage in guiding my own company which will now produce all of the plays in which I am to be seen. It is our purpose not only to give every detail of the Mary Pickford Film Corporation our unfaltering direction but to surround ourselves with the best brains, ability and skill in this wonderful art-industry.

IT will be our purpose and endeavor to make most complete, elaborate and art harmonizing productions—each of which is to stand out pre-eminently as a master work. The productions will be the best that are made. Each will have a cast of distinction, a direction of originality and creativeness, fine environment, its own especially written music—all with that dignity, simplicity and artistic ensemble that will make the best in motion pictures and attract the largest and most discriminating audiences. I want the Mary Pickford pictures to be seen in every theatre and play house in the country. We are delighted with the arrangements and broad plan of distribution made by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation which has been formed to handle them.

PROMPTED by your encouragement of the past, and for which I feel that I owe so much to you in aiding me to reach an ambitious attainment, I feel now that with this incentive and with the ever present confidence with which you have approved and admired my work that I can now reach still higher, giving you the supreme of our art endeavor—but always depending on your affectionate interest, for which I am now and always,

Gratefully, Mary Pickford.

MARY PICKFORD

No personality is so dominant in motion pictures as that of Mary Pickford. It is the crystalization of magnetism without a parallel in the history of either the spoken or the silent stage.

Every exhibitor knows that the advent of a new Mary Pickford picture means an event in the season of his theatre or playhouse. This has been the unfailing rule.

NOW, heading her own film corporation Mary Pickford with her wonderful art and great experience will bring to these productions a new life, a stronger drawing power and a more lasting charm, being alone and on no programme she will completely pervade the entertainment presented.

THERE'S a precious quality in gems which can be imitated but not duplicated. Counterfeits don't last: they soon grow dull.

I know jewels: it used to be my business. I recognized the true fire and the light of genius in Clara Kimball Young, the moment I saw her work. Once a gem-judge—always. I put her in a proper setting—at the head of her own company. Her first production is being mounted now by Albert Capellini—"The Common Law," by Robert W. Chambers.

In October you will have an opportunity to contrast the most superb work of her career with "pasty" program performances. Tiffany days are at last dawning in the industry. The reign of the rhinestone is over.

John Wanamaker's Policy Is Our Policy

THE principles which have made him the world's foremost merchant are identical with those, which, in less than a year and a half, have put V-L-S-E to the forefront.

Founded on economic order and commercial justice, these principles recognize the right of the buyer to select that which suits his purposes best, and to pay for it, according to its individual merit.

There is nothing very startling about these ideas, only the fact that they were not applied in the film industry before.

Their overwhelming acceptance now is proof positive that the business men in this field are just as alert to "fair play" and bed-rock business principles, as in any other.

Blood isn't always thicker than water. "The Kid," for instance, didn't fall in the arms of the man who was her real father, even though they were ladened with riches. Rather, she turned to a down-in-the-hill newspaper man—the only protector she had ever known. But there was a big reason "why," and that makes for a story that grips the attention and the heart-strings.

Facts and Comments

IT WILL surprise the many motion picture friends who belong to Rotary Clubs to hear that at the International Convention of Rotary Clubs held in Cincinnati last month a resolution was adopted requesting every Rotary Club to join in a movement to bring about the establishment of local boards of censorships. The object of this resolution is said to be the elimination of "objectionable motion pictures." We know of many an exhibitor and many a film man belonging to Rotary Clubs. As far as we know these clubs are splendid institutions serving a fine purpose and have done much good. All the more surprising, therefore, is this reactionary stand on the motion picture. Civic clubs all over the country are beginning to array themselves against censorship, notably the women's clubs. If any member of a Rotary who is a friend of the motion picture wants to help in a campaign of education the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will be glad to supply him with its anti-censorship literature on request.

* * *

FROM a communication addressed to us by Orrin G. Cocks of the National Board of Review we are glad to see that the Board is in hearty sympathy with the resolution in opposition to the rentals of film by exchanges to schools and churches without previous consultation of the exhibitor who might be affected by such rental. In the course of the letter to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD Mr. Cocks says "that every letter which goes out of his office and every piece of literature which is written advises cordial co-operation with the exhibitor in the various cities and towns. We are convinced from practical experience that the exhibitor knows his business as no one else in the community and that he can be relied upon to furnish what the public wants and to continue the work long after the social and religious worker has lost interest in actually making the thing go. Our experience coincides with yours that the ordinary exhibitor is a fine public servant and simply needs the support in dollars and cents of his community to give them the very best they desire." Readers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD ought to be particularly interested in the joint estimate of the exhibitor by the Board of Review and the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Both know the exhibitor. It is curious in view of the foregoing to find an expression of disapproval in a certain section of the trade press. The section is out of touch and out of sympathy with the exhibitor and therefore suffering from a paralysis of the circulation.

* * *

THE proposed co-operation between the producers and exhibitors is now awaiting definite shape. No doubt the executive and administrative offices will be organized in a short time. There is an enormous amount of important work piled up before the new organization. If the producers show the same spirit of unselfishness which was evidenced in the filling of the offices at the Chicago convention the most hopeful view of the future is entirely justifiable.

* * *

"YOU cannot force extra money out of your patronage by showing objectionable pictures," said State President Sawyer of Ohio in a recent address to the Brooklyn exhibitors. "Every community has just so much money to spend for amusements. This is an economic condition which admits of no theorizing." Plain simple words which are respectfully dedicated to the earnest consideration of every man interested in showing motion pictures for a livelihood.

* * *

AN esteemed reader and friend of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in Philadelphia suggests in a letter addressed to us that, first, "every producer should carry a protest on every film, as the censors cannot cut free speech," and second, "every producer should submit to the Board of Review and that exhibitors should refuse to book unstamped productions." This is being done in England today, and in the language of our correspondent, "it will drive out the salacious producer." The writer expresses the hope that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will take up this question, and we sincerely hope it will.

Hazy Ideas About Art

By Louis Reeves Harrison

AS a matter of self-defense men often scoff at what they know nothing about. Given a good salesman, one who can place a picture in spite of the opposition he meets, the very mention of art starts his risibles. "I suppose it is all right for those who like it, but what is it to me? Give me what the people want, and I will sell the goods. No art for mine." Yet he has an art all his own, the skill that he shows in his particular line of effort. He calls that "business." It is art that he rightly applies his ability to a given purpose.

Given a superior publicity man, one who has acquired a keen knowledge of human nature through an active experience, who has a knack of arousing attention and a large amount of facility in attending to his specialty, he has been known to express good-natured contempt for art in general, though he has cultivated an art in order to further his own ends. The same is true of an efficient business manager who has applied well-established principles of success to the particular line of work in which he is engaged. Yet he may disclaim knowing anything about what is defined in a general way as "art."

A specific use of the word which has come to be vaguely grasped relates very largely to the mediums of expression, both intellectual and emotional, used by creative genius, such as literature, painting, sculpture and the drama, the fine arts that contribute heavily to the pleasure, both spiritual and sensuous, of existence. Though this specific art is usually associated with the idea of beauty by nearly all writers on the subject, a work of beauty may be merely imitative, a copied piece of furniture turned out for purposes of utility only.

Beauty is merely one of the mysterious children of that greater mystery known as Life. What is beautiful to one is not so to another—it is as vague and variable as its parent. It cannot under the circumstances be invariably attached as an essential to art. Beauty might well be called the favorite child of our existence, one that we come to love more and more as our intelligence grows. Always desirable, it is not always indispensable. Art is not, therefore, to be limited to an expression of beauty as some have defined it.

The production of moving pictures is, in a general way, an art, yet it is not art in a finer sense to produce them without high quality of design, conception and execution. It is in this finer sense that the word is oftenest used and most generally understood. We consider the purpose of art as elevating; its function to delve among the mysteries of life and bring forth some refreshing beauty or invigorating truth. We recognize almost intuitively that it requires taste to appreciate ideal beauty and wisdom to separate truth from error, that it requires discretion and constructive imagination to successfully formulate truth and beauty for presentation to other minds, genius.

The atmosphere would be easily cleared if we considered the general production of moving pictures to be a craft and the specific production of what responds to our ideals as an art. I cannot see how, in this elevating sense, there is true art in pictures appealing to morbid desire or low taste. It has become almost an instinct for intelligent people to make some use of the brief interval allotted them on earth which shall be a contribution, no matter how small, to the improvement and refined pleasure of those who live with them and after them.

To deeply feel the charm and meaning of existence and to clearly convey that charm and meaning, to interpret life in all its phases, in all times, and from all points of view is to promote life and often to augment its happiness. Such is the aim of the novel, the drama, the screen story, whether or not there is some splendid doctrine hidden beneath the entertainment. Many a great composition of this kind is, in itself, a propaganda, but the idea is not to get away from the sympathies of those who feel more deeply than they think. The general effect is stronger and more lasting if the mind formulates after the feelings have been addressed. There are many people in a mixed audience whose whole tendency is to feel first and think afterward—if they think at all.

The art of high comedy may make it convincing. That of farce comedy may keep it from being stupid. For characters in the latter to laugh may be stupid—the art is to counterfeit stupidity and permit the audience to do the laughing. People may be easily amused by human weakness, laugh to see a man take himself too seriously. Yet they may be stirred to pity when he stumbles and falls in his effort, when he tries his best to do what is beyond his strength. Human emotions delicately balance between grave and gay—it is art to rightly stir them.

We grasp the art of any medium when we grasp the relations of fiction and truth. Starting with an imaginative conception, the art of portrayal becomes purely that of imagery, the simulation of truth. The imagery is not art when it fails to convince. It fails because there are defects somewhere, in the author's script, in the director's handling, in the actor's interpretation. Art makes for perfection of imagery.

It would save many a student confusion while roaming galleries where the finest examples of painting and sculpture are collected if he kept in mind that art makes for perfection of imagery. It will save many a producer of moving pictures confusion if he will keep the same idea in mind. To visualize a work of the imaginaton so that it shall be recognized as a true example of art does not mean to twist it out of shape to suit this or that star performer. Stars are just as good for billboard purposes if they interpret the story, instead of themselves, and they are not real artists unless capable of such interpretation.

Starting with an imaginative conception, the author builds up interest through characters appropriate for that purpose. When the visualization of interesting stories is attempted, it is art to select types suited to those characters. So far from being art as to be the reverse of it is an attempt to suit the story to the type—it then becomes a mere publicity vehicle, a billboard adjunct, inviting attention to Miss So-and-so, as per our advertisement, but not as an artist.

"When we come upon pictures that sing to us, and yet remain true to the laws of pictures, and lyrics that seem to paint for us pictures, though true to the laws of language, then we meet Shakespearean beauty and partake of that enchantment that is not just life haphazard, but the flower of life, the finest moments of experience, the color of music or philosophy, the quality which nourishes the imagination by giving it food richer than the fare of ordinary experience." "Art is the expression of the zest of living."

Beautiful Things to See

By W. Stephen Bush.

"BEAUTIFUL Things To See" are always welcome in a feature, but let it be proclaimed in every studio with trumpets, etc., that beautiful things to see do not in themselves make a successful picture. It is but too true, as one of my exhibiting friends said to me the other day, that these "beautiful things to see" are frequently used as is the American flag on the vaudeville stage. "Many a poor show has been saved by the American flag." Yes, but many of the shows are too bad to be saved by this impertinent appeal to our national pride. I have seen features—not a few—that had so little punch or story, so little of the genuine element, so little of the thrill that comes with real emotion that even the loveliest settings and the most charming atmosphere were but as beautiful gowns on an ill-favored woman.

A flock of sheep grazing on an ample pasture with sloping hills for a background is ever a pleasing sight, but if it has little or nothing to do with the story it fails of its effect. A baby in the cradle kicking up his legs or happily sucking his thumb will always cause a smile, but there must be some justification in the story for putting it in. A puppy or a kitten playfully cavorting about, a canary in his cage, a handsome collie, a thoroughbred horse are all of them fine subjects for an animal painter and look particularly well and sweet on the screen if they are shown to us in the natural development of a plot or story. The lively antics of a youngster, the roguish smile and the innocent coquetry of a little miss are fascinating, but they must not be depended upon for the success of a feature.

These and similar directorial devices, which as every one of our readers knows we could multiply by the hundred, cannot be substituted for the story and for the dramatic appeal. Moonlight scenes in bewitchingly beautiful gardens, settings that must rouse the envy of the landscape painter, great majestic trees, winding brooks and falling water—all these beautiful things are loved in their proper places and at the right moment, but they will never atone for a poor plot or a disjointed story or for mediocre acting and incompetent direction.

These discoveries are not claimed by me to be original; on the contrary I am only repeating what I hear from my neighbors in the theatre or from exhibitors or friends who are just admirers of the screen and have no financial interest in motion pictures.

"Beautiful Things To See" always make a good picture better; they add to its high quality, but they will not make a good picture out of a poor one. Some one has called these pictures "Rainbow Features"—not a bad definition. The rainbow delights our eyes with marvelous hues painted on the sky, but it fails to satisfy our longing for dramatic entertainment. Some day, perhaps, we will be able to translate even the lofty language of the psalms into the utterance of the screen—nothing seems impossible to the motion picture. The difference—fundamental and everlasting—between the psalmist and the dramatist would not be affected thereby.

The strength of an exhibitor's program is the feature. Perhaps it ought not to be so, perhaps his program ought to be of such even excellence as to make it seem invidious to praise one part of it at the expense of another part. In practice we know that a weak feature is the worst spot on any program. Whence comes the strength of the feature? Solely through its dramatic appeal. If it does not stir one of the great elemental emotions in the human register it is not a feature. All the pretty little by-plays count for nothing in the absence of the big appeal. Of course where "the beautiful things to see" are subordinated to a great strong dominating theme full of dramatic power they are most welcome. The union of the two elements makes a perfect and altogether satisfying feature.

If the exhibitor has to take his choice between a strong dramatic appeal without the pretty by-plays and a picture full of pretty by-plays but barren of any dramatic value I am inclined to believe he will take the former. Beauty in pictures is highly desirable, but dramatic values are absolutely necessary. One is the staff of life, the other represents the luxury of a cake.

Discriminating Exchanges

By W. Stephen Bush.

FROM a large number of complaints coming to this desk and from a hundred conversations with exhibitors I know that a very strong feeling exists among exhibitors against the practice of exchanges discriminating against the exhibitor in favor of theatres belonging to a circuit like Loew's and Proctor's. It is asserted not without reason that the exchange depends for its profits and even for its existence on the average exhibitor who patronizes it regularly winter and summer. When an exhibitor discovers that one of the circuit houses which is taking up motion pictures as a makeshift and substitute in the summer months can get anything it wants from an exchange in utter disregard of his own interests he is naturally aggrieved. Such policy on the part of the exchange is shortsighted and if persisted in it may prove suicidal.

We fail to see where the big house belonging to a large circuit and using more vaudeville than motion pictures is of any particular value to the progress and prosperity of the motion picture industry. Long ago we have described the place where vaudeville is mixed with motion pictures as a "misfit amusement parlor," and with few exceptions the definition still stands. Let us waive that part for the present. The fact remains that in price cutting and in ruinous competition the circuit theatres hold an unenviable record. They aim to destroy the smaller houses in the neighborhood by giving ten acts of vaudeville and a dozen reels of pictures for ten cents. If they succeed in driving out their smaller competitors they of course diminish the number of customers for the exchange and the producer. In spite of this simple arithmetic I know of my own knowledge that in a dozen localities exchanges give the big circuit man the best of it. Especially is this true in the summer time. The circuit theatre with the big seating capacity is coddled and favored at a time when the regular and steady customer of the exchange, i. e., the average exhibitor, is having the hardest struggle of the year.

It might be well for these discriminating exchanges to remember that the exhibitors today are better organized than ever before and that they represent a vastly greater number of theaters in the aggregate than all the mixed motion picture and vaudeville circuits put together. There is talk even now of exerting this power and of convincing exchange managers in a very practical manner of their folly in discriminating against their best patrons.

The idea still prevalent in some quarters that the exhibitor is the "goat" in perpetuum is a rusty tradition in the light of late events in Chicago. Exchange managers and producers will consult their own best interests by stopping this sort of discrimination in favor of the big vaudeville houses. If they don't it is altogether likely that they are due for a rude awakening before the year is out.

Present Status of the Federal Tax Bill

Measure Now in the Senate Which Proposes to Restore the Old Law—Politics May Prevent Such Action

THE contentions of the motion picture exhibitors of the United States, as stated and advanced by the Moving Picture World, have been upheld by the Democratic members of the Finance Committee, who last week reported to the Senate a rewritten general revenue bill with a provision taxing motion picture and other theaters, museums, etc., which, if a tax must be imposed, is very satisfactory.

The Moving Picture World, granting that the Federal Government found it necessary to levy upon the theaters, already made the prey of all sorts of municipal, town, city, county and state taxes, has always declared that there was injustice even in the so-called war emergency revenue act that went into effect on October 22, 1914, and which has since been reenacted, in that it provided the same degree of taxation for the five and ten-cent shows as for the legitimate houses with admission prices running up into the dollars, and failed to make any allowance for the theater in the small town, open one, two or three nights a week and catering to a very limited patronage. In the proposal of the Senate this latter is modified.

In the report of the Committee it is said that "The House bill imposes a tax of one-half of one per cent. upon the gross receipts from admissions to theaters, museums, or concert halls when a charge of admission is made. Your committee after due consideration believes that the present law is much fairer and more equitable, and recommends an amendment restoring the present law, but for the purpose of bringing about parity of treatment provides that in cities, towns or villages of 5,000 inhabitants or less the rate of tax shall be one-half of that which applies to cities, towns, or villages having a population in excess of 5,000."

The proposed amendment to the measure as it passed the House of Representatives, reads as follows:

"Proprietors of theaters, museums and concert halls, where a charge for admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than two hundred and fifty, shall pay $25; having a seating capacity of more than two hundred and fifty, and exceeding five hundred, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity exceeding five hundred and not exceeding eight hundred, $75; having a seating capacity of more than eight hundred, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls or armories rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater: Provided, That in cities, towns or villages of five thousand inhabitants or less the amount of such payment shall be one-half of that above stated: Provided, further, that whenever any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease."

There is very likely to be a fight upon this amendment when the bill comes up in the Senate for action, as there are many among the Senators and members of the House of Representatives who believe that the exhibitors are getting so rich as a result of their connection with the motion picture business that they can well afford to pay any kind of a tax and many of them. These thoughts will be somewhat dispelled if they will but take the trouble to read and place a proper degree of confidence in the briefs filed with the subcommittee having the matter under consideration. One of the letters which carried considerable weight with the committee, it is understood, is that addressed to Senator Hoke Smith, chairman of the subcommittee, by M. C. Higgins, assistant international president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine operators of the United States and Canada, which includes that branch of organized labor which supplies to the theaters and motion picture houses the stage carpenters, electricians, property men, projection machine and light operators, and working crews traveling with road shows.

"Of our own knowledge," he said, "and the number of men out of employment, or working on part time, we know that the theaters, both regular and picture, are among the heaviest sufferers from war conditions. In many other lines of work not only opportunities for work, but also wages have largely increased, but our members, particularly in the less important theatrical centers, have already been forced to make sacrifices to aid the house manager to keep his theater open. We have gone as far as we can in this and we can not make any further concessions and receive anything like a living wage.

"The old emergency tax of $25, $50, $75 and $100, dependent upon seating capacity, no doubt seems small to you, yet it was the last straw needed to break the hope of a number of small managers. Actually hundreds of theaters and picture houses, places already operating at a loss, gave up the right when they found that new tax burdens were added, and our members employed in them had to look for something else to do."

In conclusion Mr. Higgins asked that some other way of raising funds be substituted and that they be taken from enterprises profiting by war conditions, or at least making a profit under them.

A considerable amount of weight was carried by the letter of the United Managers' Protective Association, by Marc Klaw, president, pointing out the grave discrimination that exists under the bill as it passed the House of Representatives. "The theater, as held by the highest court in this state (New York)," he said, "is a private enterprise, as much as a department store or hotel, with an equal right to operate, without securing Federal, State or municipal sanction. License fees are exacted under the taxing power or police power, but not as a franchise, or in the nature of a special privilege. If, then, revenue is to be derived from the gross receipts of a theater, why not from the department stores and hotels throughout the United States, or similar private enterprises?

"At the present time the theater may pay (a) a municipal tax (in the Borough of Manhattan) $500 a year; (b) the corporation operating the theater must pay the annual state franchise tax on its capital; (c) the county tax on its personal property used in the theater; (d) the real estate tax, if it owns the land, or—as is frequently the case—the tax is part of the rental charges; and (e) the income tax provided by the present bill, entirely apart from the special tax under discussion.

"This bill singles out the amusement industry to bear a burden that is equal only to that cast upon manufacturers of munitions. Proprietors of theaters must pay one-half of 1 per cent. of their gross receipts, no matter what their losses may be in carrying on the theater enterprise.

"In respect to motion picture theaters, the injustice of the proposed tax is just as great as with the regular theaters.

"This bill," it is further declared, "has devised a splendid method of closing a very large percentage of the small motion picture theaters. The provision is not taxation, it is confiscation, and that, too, aimed at a business that does more charity and more substantial good to the morals and well being of the community than all other businesses combined. There would be less injustice in this provision, against which this protest is directed, if it were framed along the lines of the other provisions in the bill, specifying a fixed sum to pay, as is provided for circuses and as the present revenue act provides and as this bill directs in respect of practically every other business (excepting manufacturers of munitions)."

A protest was also entered by the Association of Theater Managers of Boston, Mass., which however, speaks only for the regular theatrical interests and opposes the bill partly on the ground that "the moving picture enterprises, cheap vaudeville and kindred amusements, operated in buildings of comparatively small rental and with a cheap admission, have made serious inroads into the legitimate theatrical business, and as a result, the profits are greatly diminished; so diminished in fact as to result in some instances in a considerabl loss."

Just because the Senate Finance Committee has reported against the Kitchin proposition of one-half of one per cent. must not be taken to necessarily mean that it will be defeated by the Senate with the adoption of the proposed Finance Committee scheme. The whole measure will be the subject of a great deal of discussion and should the latter clause be adopted, the bill goes to conference between representatives of both branches of Congress and it may be that a fight may be precipitated on the section. The House may insist upon its version and to placate it and win other points the Senate may recede from its amendment and the higher tax will result.

It is suggested that exhibitors and State organizations appeal to their individual senators urging them to support the Finance Committee's plan based on the seating capacity of the houses, and as inserted in the Senate draft of the general revenue bill.

"Pop" Lubin Recovers from Recent Illness

Pioneer Picture Maker Getting Out from Under Hands of Doctors—Has No Intention of Retiring from Business

SIEGMUND LUBIN'S face beamed that Tuesday night he came down the stairs to the reception room of the Cosmopolitan Club in Atlantic City. "My boy, I am glad to see you," he said simply and heartily to the World man, and the vigor of the handshake proved more than the statement covered by his words. It was evidence of restored health, of recuperation from the illness that for several months had put him into the care of the doctors. "Yes, I have been ill," he went on, in reply to a question as to his health. "I have had a lot of doctors, not because I wanted them, but to please my family. They have given me a bunch of prescriptions and I take them—and put them in my pocket. You see, I have them here." Delving into his coat he withdrew a varied assortment of ominous looking documents. "I put them where they will do the most good," he chuckled.

Siegmund Lubin.

The pioneer manufacturer is optimistic as to the future of the motion picture industry. "Everything will be all right in time," he said. "It is the great war that has upset everything. It has upset business and it has upset many of us," he added with a tinge of sadness. "Many have lost near ones and dear ones. As is bound to be the case some men are richer, but many are poorer. This awful conflict which none of us could foresee—who would have dreamed of it?—has hit the motion picture business, this great, wonderful business, very hard. We make many pictures in the United States. We may spend forty or fifty thousand dollars on a production, and we must have the markets of the world at large in order to bring back that money and make a fair profit.

"The whole world loves American pictures—they admire the players; no other country brings to the screen such charming women—graceful, petite, intelligent—or such fine men. They have magnetic qualities possessed by the actors of no other nation.

"Motion pictures speak every language; they are universal in their appeal. Of American pictures is this especially true. Where now our markets abroad are cut off, where many manufacturers are sitting back waiting with their spectacles on their ears, the change will come speedily with the end of the war. We can only wait and hope. But everything will be all right in the end. We must have a good, strong organization to guide our steps, to prevent mistakes, to do the right things."

Mr. Lubin referred feelingly to the passing of "Pop" Rock. "You know he sent for me to come to him, and you may be sure had I been physically able I should have gone," he said. "Yes, we were old pals. I used to supply him with films in New Orleans and also for showing around the country. We were together on several ventures in the old days. I remember the fight pictures, the one we staged after the event, on account of the impossibility of making the pictures in the original. I recall during the taking of the scenes some one discovered no betting was going on. Of course it was necessary to lend 'atmosphere.' I sent out and got $250 in one-dollar bills, which we distributed among the extras. And you know $250 was a lot of money to me then. Well," and "Pop" Lubin chuckled, "when we went around to collect the money at the end of the taking of the scenes we couldn't find a soul that had a single dollar of that money. Yes, they bet my money, and I figured I had lost the bet."

Wednesday morning by appointment we met Mr. Lubin for a stroll down the Boardwalk. We had not gone far when the laird of Lubinville suggested he had had an early breakfast and if it were agreeable to his guest he would see what Atlantic City could provide in the way of a luncheon. It was agreeable. The air was cool, there was a drizzling rain, and the great combers were piling in in angry fashion, making for spectacle and for appetite. Our host piloted us to one of the big new hostelries and showed us over the palace that had been thrown into being in twelve months from the time work on razing its predecessor had been begun. Mr. Lubin knows his Atlantic City. He is one of its oldest inhabitants and stanchest citizens. And everybody knows him. He has its history at the tip of his tongue and its interests lie close to his heart. He takes a personal pride in the great playground, the development of which he has followed from its beginning. And coming back to that luncheon: here again was evidence that Mr. Lubin was fine and fit—with the appetite of a boy.

There cropped out in the course of the chat a sidelight on the character of this likable man, whose fatherly "My boy" has been cherished by hundreds of players—and who today are keenly interested in all that pertains to the welfare of their one-time employer. We were speaking of the differences over wage scales between railroad men and managers.

"Why shouldn't the men organize into unions?" said Mr. Lubin. "It's their only chance to get a just return for their work. I am and have been all my life a member of a union. Too many employers are anxious to pay a flat scale for the exceptional man, but seek to avoid paying it to the average or sub-average employe. If they reap the advantage of the unusual worker it is just that they should carry also the one not so rapid but who may do better work."

We spoke of the future. We asked Mr. Lubin if he intended actively to get into the motion picture business again.

"Yes, indeed," was the emphatic reply. "I love the business too much. I shall not get out. In the years I have spent in it I have had many pleasant hours—yes, and many heartaches, too. But in the meantime I am happily situated here surrounded by my family. I have to play with my grandchildren, you know, but there is only one role they will let me carry. I must always be the man with the pistol. Things will come back with a bound when matters in Europe straighten out and there will be plenty of money.

"Will you remember me to all my friends? Tell the boys in New York I shall be with them at the Screen Club ball in November—you know I don't miss that."

As we parted from Mr. Lubin he explained he was going over to the Inlet to meet a friend who had gone fishing in the morning. "I don't believe," he said with his quaint smile, "that he knows how to catch fish and I am going to be at the pier when the boat arrives to make sure that he does not put one over on me by buying his 'catch' in the open market."

Frederick Warde in "King Lear"

Elaborate Production Made by Thanhouser Corporation Will Be Released Through Pathe Exchanges.

EDWIN THANHOUSER announces that the Thanhouser Film Corporation's ambitious Shakespearian production, Frederick Warde in "King Lear," is soon to be released through the Pathe Exchanges.

Mr. Warde is one of the most noted Shakespearian actors of this generation and is famed throughout the United States and Great Britain for his production of notable plays. He considers the Thanhouser version of "King Lear" to be perfect. Mr. Warde's "Silas Marner," produced by Thanhouser, was heralded as a truly superior feature. "King Lear," Mr. Warde believes, is better than "Silas Marner."

The production was directed by Ernest Warde, son of Frederick Warde, who has had long experience as an actor in his father's companies and as stage director for Richard Mansfield. Ernest Warde plays the part of the fool in Thanhouser's "King Lear." Others in the supporting cast are: Lorraine Huling, Wayne Arey, J. H. Gilmour, Hector Dion, Edwin Stanley and Boyd Marshall. More than 2,000 persons were employed in the making of this Shakespearian play, which follows faithfully the original story.

The Projection Editor Discovers an Operator Who Will Never Be Pinched for Speeding

FROM Montreal to Quebec is a beautiful drive, but the jinx overtook us thirty-five miles from Quebec when a punk job of vulcanizing on the rear shoe went bluey and we adopted the Canadian Pacific temporarily.

Next day I called upon the manager of the Empire theater and suggested that he arrange for a meeting of the managers and operators of Quebec's six or seven theaters. I was to call on him again that evening; but, alas, the jinx stuck to me and I drove the go-devil into Quebec at 11:45 that night. Next day was Sunday and all shows closed; also I was tired—so I saw no more of the Quebec theaters, as we left early Monday morning.

Quebec is a beautiful, intensely interesting and quaint old city, and with the aid of Nancy Hanks No. 3, the go-devil, I saw it pretty thoroughly, from the Parliamentary buildings to its ten-foot-wide streets in the lower town. I even butted into the citadel. The sentry was momentarily not quite on the job at the end of the long tunnel entrance, so Nancy Hanks and I shot through and into the whole works—but were very promptly shooed out again, and I suppose was lucky to escape incarceration in the "Hoose Gow." Our innocent countenance, combined with our non-German looks, carried us through, however, and we saw the citadel (fort), or some of it at least.

Leaving Quebec, we entered into what was to us the unknown, but the gasoline heart of the go-devil tackled the task bravely; albeit 800 miles of presumably unsettled, bleak northland lay between us and our return to the good old U. S. A. The road had been variously described as "good," "bad," "impassable" and "fine." But the average French Canadian has just two ways of describing roads, viz., "not so bad" and "not so good," accent on the "not" in both instances. If it is the former you may figure on fair country roads with punk to punkerino spots; if the latter, it is good night shirt for yours. You are up against it for fair. Fortunately, most of the time it was the former.

Added to our other troubles we were entering a country where it was supposed that what few people there were all talked French and no English, or practically none. Well, we started, and one surprise followed another, until at this writing, at Chandler, Gaspe Peninsula, 400 miles beyond Quebec, we are all out of words to express our amazement.

First, everywhere we found someone who could "talk little Anglais," though one day, at Romaniski, we did have quite a time getting anything to eat but at last resurrected a storekeeper who "talked little Anglais" and procured some cheese, crackers and some canned goods which, being opened by the combined aid of strong language, the screw-driver, monkey wrench and pliers, was eaten on the rocks beside the wonderfully beautiful St. Lawrence River where it is about four miles wide.

Second, while the roads were by no means boulevards, still except in spots they were "not so bad," and we made good time, considering. The run, to date, by days, is as follows: 183, 153, 165, 180, 121, 130, 112 and 97, the last not being a full day as we arrived at 2 P. M. The 112-day established a record, however, as we rode 25 miles through the Matepedia Valley in the mountains beside the river over a road which everyone pronounced awful and advised us to ship around. It certainly was awful, all right, and then some. Mostly it was two narrow, deep ruts with a sort of path between and grass from one to two feet high. Occasionally there were mudholes from four to eight inches deep and no way around. Much of it was through dense timber, some with sheer mountains from the left rut almost straight up, with a ten to fifteen-foot drop to the boiling river three feet from the right rut, with loose rocks on the center path. There were times when the go-devil plunged and bucked like a bronco, but we had no spills, and when we finally got through to Matepedia, Nellie, my daughter, remarked very solemnly, "Well, Dad, you can certainly qualify for a tight rope rider now."

But the surprise of our young life was that, except for the 25 miles through the mountain pass of the Matepedia Valley, which was entirely a wilderness, the country is all fairly well settled; the farms look well kept and prosperous, and the country is beautiful, surpassingly so along the St. Lawrence River and the south shore of the Gaspe Peninsula.

At River du Loup (pronounced "River du Loo," meaning wolf river) we visited a moving picture show where the operator was performing wonders with an Edison Model B, using (imagine it) a film tank instead of a take-up. But alas, neither manager nor operator spoke any English worth mentioning, so we looked at the show and let it go at that. The titles were English and a man down front translated them into French.

At Chandler the brother of the editor's wife owns and manages the "Opera House" where a moving picture show is given every night. A Simplex projector is used. The picture is as good as one would expect under the circumstances. Current is 110-volt A.C. through an Edison economy transformer.

At Chandler I received letters advising that our visit to St. John, N. B., is to be made the occasion of high jinks among moving picture people, but of that I will tell you later.

From Chandler we went to Gaspe (by train, the roads being too sandy for navigation), which is sixty miles northwest, at the extreme point of Gaspe Peninsula and in the same latitude as the north end of Newfoundland. In this beautifully situated little northland city we found a "movin' picter show" and at fifteen cents per were permitted to enter the "theater," occupy one if the the pine benches and watch the murder, assassination and complete butchery of a photoplay which was certainly old enough to be killed. The "operating room" consisted of a 6x6 foot (about) pine lumber inclosure and therein was an Edison exhibition model projector which had probably been voting at presidential elections for some time. The "show" consisted of the Metro production "Cards," a military film and a superannuated Charlie Chaplin. I have, as you know, often roasted that abomination, the speed fiend. Well, it was the opposite here. The speed was probably 45 feet per minute and the characters floated through their parts with languid ease and gracefully undulating movements. There were only seven (7) stops to repair breaks in the film or lost lower loop during the whole show. A young chap, armed with a flashlight, presided over a player piano down front and when a new roll was needed he would search for it in a pile of music directly under the screen, the aforesaid flashlight "doing things" to the picture meanwhile, as he was not at all particular where he pointed it.

The screen consisted of an unhemmed sheet of muslin stretched, not on but in front of the wall. I suggested that they border the picture with black, to which the following naive reply was made: "I guess that would be all right, but you see the picture ain't always in the same place."

Honestly I did not know so many things could be done to a poor, innocent, unoffending photoplay in so short a space of time, but outside these few things the show was all right.

Richardson at St. John, N. B.

Sidelights on the Visit, by the Wife of an Exhibitor Host.

TO ALL motion picture fans the most interesting event of the summer season at St. John, N. B., was undoubtedly the visit of F. H. Richardson, Projection Expert of the Moving Picture World. For days beforehand a small group of booking men might have been seen winding their way to the Imperial theater, where metings were held to discuss ways and means of entertaining the distinguished guest.

Realizing that Mr. Richardson, as head of his profession, is a very important person, it was a matter for debate, whether he would care to be treated as President Wilson, Henry Ford, or merely as a human being. It was not until the boys got a good look at his cheery face that the matter was finally settled. Needless to say the "human being" won the day.

When Mr. Richardson arrived in St. John, on Saturday, August 12, he was met by Walter H. Golding, Steve Hurley and William C. Smith. Had it been more widely known that such a charming little daughter accompanied Mr. Richardson every man in town would have been down to greet him—or her?

That evening, after the last performance at the Imperial, Mr. Richardson occupied the stage and managers and operators from the Maritime Provinces gathered to listen to his able address on "Better Projection." Dense indeed must have been the man who came away feeling that he had not profited by the lecture. Incidentally Mr. Richardson gave the theater managers a little much needed advice upon the folly of giving too lengthy a show. An innocent bystander may be pardoned for hoping that it will be well digested. Strange to say it is the bigger theaters that err in this respect.

It is due to Mr. Richardson that managers and operators of the Maritime Provinces have now decided to organize. There are altogether too many unauthorized censors around for the welfare of the motion picture business, and unless some such step had been taken an unhappy state of affairs must have ensued. Quite recently a professor in the College of New Brunswick distinguished himself by declaring that over fifty per cent. of the pictures shown in these Provinces are "immoral," "unmoral" and "disgusting." This is the final judgment of a gentleman who proclaims himself a "neutral" regarding this form of amusement, and the managers are now wondering what adjectives he would have used had he really been an enemy.

It is such idiocy as this that has to be combated, and it is only by organization that it can be done.

The chairman of the St. John Board of Censors, Dr. Bridges, is a very learned and fair minded man, but his position is made very disagreeable on account of unfair criticism. While the subject of forming a society has often been broached, it remained for Mr. Richardson to convince the managers and operators of the wisdom of the step.

After the more serious business connected with Mr. Richardson's visit had been accomplished, everyone adjourned to the "Imperial" lobby, where a very dainty buffet luncheon was served.

On Sunday, August 13, the party went up the river on the tug "Lord Kitchener." The session of the night before was such a late one that more than one member of the crowd only had time for breakfast between the acts.

Mr. Richardson, as guest of honor, was the life of the party and had any of the Keith people heard the duologues between Mr. Crawford and Mr. Richardson there would now be entirely new headliners at this famous Broadway house. Steve Hurley also gave one of Robert Service's poems and proved himself to be something more than an amateur. Those present included Managers N. V. Gastonguay, Orpheus Hall, Halifax, N. S.; G. J. B. Metzler, Empire theater, Halifax, N. S.; F. B. Metzler, Empire theater, Halifax, N. S.; M. Herschorn, Imperial theater, Halifax, N. S.; A. E. Wall, chief Board of Censors of Nova Scotia, N. S.; Roy Holman, "Happy Home," Alberton, P. E. I.; S. W. Dimock, theaters at Campbelton, Dalhousie and Athol, N. B.; Jas. F. Cripps, Digby, Middleton, Annapolis and Shelburne, N. S.; C. A. Walfield, Bridgewater and Lockeport, N. S.; J. J. Gaudet, Summerside, P. E. I.; A. A. Fielding, Princess theater, Truro, N. S. The St. John men were: Stephen C. Hurley, Unique.; Gilbert D. Sweeney, Palace; A. B. Farmer, Star; Wm. C. Smith, Empress; Fred. K. Trifts, Gem; W. C. McKay, Opera House; W. H. Golding, Imperial; F. G. Spencer, Lyric, Unique theaters and Opera House. Fitzgerald, A. W. Phillips, Geo. Seely; Unique theater, Arnold Holder, Harry Martin; Lyric theater, Gilmour Armstrong, Ralph Thorne. Honor guests: F. H. Richardson, New York, and Miss Nellie Richardson.

Taking everything into consideration Mr. Richardson can probably say that he has never been more enthusiastically greeted than at St. John, N. B., and he left us with the understanding that he would return soon. We want to see him again—for he's a jolly good fellow. DORA M. SMITH.

SERIAL FILM COMPANY ENLARGES STUDIO.

William Steiner, general manager of the Serial Film Company and supervising director of "The Yellow Menace," announces that his company has added a new exterior glass covered studio and doubled the stage space of the interior studio in its plant at Cliffside, N. J. These additions make it possible for four producing companies to work at the same time. In addition, the laboratory has been enlarged through the building of a new drying room in which one hundred and fifty thousand feet of film can be dried in half an hour.

Pathe Releases for Week Beginning Sept. 3

An Interesting Program With Which to Open the Autumn Season.

FOR the week of September 3, Pathe offers an interesting program with a two-reel reissue; two reels of "Grip of Evil"; a Luke comedy; another Florence Rose Fashions Number, and a split-reel scenic. "Good Pals" is a reissue in answer to an increasing demand for reissues of Pathe's famous earlier two-reelers. It features Marguerite Risser, a very popular member of the Old Pathe Jersey City stock company.

The "pals" are a Southern Colonel and his daughter and their collie "Shep." The story concerns the treachery of the Colonel's own cousin, who when the report arrives that he has been killed, uses the fortune belonging to the daughter and forces her to work as a servant. The dead returns very much alive and the story has a happy ending. "Shep" has a "star" part, and with remarkable canine cleverness keeps the ball of suspense rolling to its thrilling climax. The proof of the punch in this two-reeler are the many requests for its reissue.

"In Bohemia" is the title of the eighth of the "Grip of Evil" series. To study another phase to his question, "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?" John Burton lives among a group of struggling artists posing as a man of humble means. He finds that "art for art's sake" is but an artificial pose and "Bohemia" but a state of mind and the almighty dollar is the King of Art. "In Bohemia" is full of action and the intimate side of so called Bohemian life in the artists' colony contains much local color.

"Luke Joins the Navy" is another screaming slapstick comedy made by the Rolin Co. Luke as a jackie will coax laughs from the grouchiest. The majority of scenes are taken aboard a U. S. man-of-war and besides being a corking comedy the scenes on board are very interesting.

"Week End House Party at Betty Young's" is the third of the Florence Rose Fashions. Betty entertains a host of fashionable guests. Costumes of the hunt, charming creations for afternoon teas and evening gowns of great variety and splendor are shown throughout the reel, which will create much interest among the "women folks."

"Picturesque Havana" is a splendid scenic of one of the world's greatest seaports. Picturesque Spanish buildings, Morro Castle, the harbor where the Maine met her tragic end and many other picturesque spots combined to make a scenic of exceptional merit.

"Picturesque Ghent" finishes out the program. Ghent, Belgium's provincial city of Flanders still preserves much of its medieval characteristics. The turreted church of St. Nicola, the beautiful carved monument of Bauvens and other historic edifices make an excellent scenic.

Wednesday, September 6th, brings Pathe News No. 74, and No. 75 on Saturday, September 9th.

CHANGES IN PRECISION MACHINE STAFF.

Announcement is made by the Precision Machine Company, makers of the Simplex projector, that J. E. Graef has resigned as acting general manager of the company, and will devote his time to his personal affairs. E. M. Porter, a well known motion picture man, succeeds to the vacancy. Mr. Porter is a brother of Edwin S. Porter, and has been engaged in the exchange branch of the business for several years. It is also anonunced that Edwin S. Porter, who has been closely associated with Frank Cannock, the inventor of the Simplex machine, will take an active part in the management of the company in the future.

THE SMALLEYS PROVIDE MORE BLUEBIRDS.

Lois Weber and her husband, Phillips Smalley, who have been towers in strength to the Bluebird programs, have prepared three releases to add to the five features they have already supplied to the series. "Saving the Family Name" is scheduled for release Sept. 11, and later on "Idle Wives," screen version of James Oppenheim's novel, and "Wanted, a Home," original with Lois Weber, will be presented. Mary MacLaren will be featured in all three of these subjects and in "Idle Wives" both of the Smalleys will play.

MacDONALD TO APPEAR WITH FEATURE.

Wallace MacDonald, leading juvenile to Mary Miles Minter in the American production "Youth's Endearing Charm," will appear at the initial showing of that picture in Marcus Loew's New York theater, Broadway and 45th street, New York, on Monday, September 4th. Mr. MacDonald, who possesses an exceptionally fine baritone voice, will render a few vocal selections in connection with his appearance.

Work Started on Pickford Films

Famous Star at Her New York Studio—Artcraft Pictures Corporation Is Formed for Distribution of New Company's Product.

FOREGOING a summer vacation, Mary Pickford is now at her New York studio working on the first production of the newly formed Mary Pickford Film Corporation, whose product will be handled by the recently organized Artcraft Pictures Corporation, of which Walter E. Greene is president. The distributing concern is capitalized for two million dollars and will establish exchanges in Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Atlanta, Dallas, San Francisco, Seattle, Denver, Minneapolis, Chicago, Kansas City, Detroit, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and the principal cities of Canada. The headquarters of the allied companies have been opened in suites of offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

It is the purpose of Miss Pickford and her associates to make a limited number of productions each year, but expenditures will be governed only by the artistic requirements of the pictures, for the policy calls for photoplays at once elaborate and ambitious with the famous star always the outstanding attraction. John Emerson, for many years prominent on the stage, and more recently a picture director with a number of Triangle successes to his credit, is working with Miss Pickford on the first production. It is understood that in addition to creating the leading roles, the head of the new corporation will take an active part in supervising the production of each picture.

Mary Pickford.

Mr. Greene, president of Artcraft, which will handle the Mary Pickford productions alone and not as a part of any program, is known throughout the industry as one of the early motion picture men instrumental in finding a market for independent pictures. Locating in Boston, he is credited with having opened the first independent exchange in the country. Later he moved to New York and became connected with various picture enterprises before his association with Paramount. Speaking as president of the new organization, Mr. Greene said:

W. E. Greene.

"No personality is so dominant in motion pictures as that of Mary Pickford, who is the crystallization of magnetism without a parallel in the history of either the spoken or silent stage. Every exhibitor knows that the advent of a new Mary Pickford picture means an event in the season of his theater or playhouse. This has been the unfailing rule in every instance in the past.

"Now heading her own film corporation, Miss Pickford with her wonderful art and great experience will bring to these productions a new life, a stronger drawing power and a more lasting charm. Being alone and on no program she will completely pervade the entertainment presented, making its attractiveness all the stronger. It is the purpose of the Artcraft Corporation to give these pictures the best distribution that any screen productions have ever received."

Miss Pickford's sentiments are expressed in the following statement: "First of all I want to express my gratitude for the co-operation of the exhibitors everywhere, for without their interest we could attain but nought. To the great throng who have been good enough to make up the patrons who have seen me in the past I can but express my heartfelt thanks. Surely without either no one can have progressed, and our work together has been so full of happiness that it is doubly treasured.

"For the Mary Pickford Film Corporation it is our purpose to surround ourselves with the best brains, skill and ability possible, so that we may have art harmonizing productions which will stand out as master works. We want the Mary Pickford pictures to be seen in every theater and playhouse in the country, and we are delighted with the broad plan of distribution made by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

"Prompted by your encouragement of the past and for which I feel that I owe so much to you in aiding me to reach an ambitious attainment, I feel now that with this incentive and with the ever present confidence with which you have approved and admired my work, that I can reach out still higher, giving you the supreme of our art endeavor; but always depending on your affectionate interest for which I am now and will always be grateful."

Important Business Changes

New Vitagraph Company Absorbs Lubin Company and the V-L-S-E Is the Latest Report—Selig, Essanay and Kleine to Combine.

THE principal topics in New York motion picture circles during the past week were the changes which were taking place affecting the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies, allied for some time as the V-L-S-E for the purpose of obtaining a better market for their features. Rumors have been rife for several months to the effect that Selig and Essanay contemplated withdrawing from this distributing organization. These stories became more persistent when Ben B. Hampton appeared in the field representing capitalists allied with the American Tobacco Company. Then came the actual purchase of the Vitagraph Company by the men whom Hampton represented and word of a proposal by the same interests to buy the Lubin Company. It was also hinted at the same time that Mr. Hampton had options on the plants of the Selig and Essanay companies.

On Thursday, August 17, an unofficial announcement was made by persons in position to know the facts that the V-L-S-E organization had been formally dissolved by the withdrawal of the Selig and Essanay interests and the absorption of the Lubin company by the new Vitagraph organization. Inquiry at the offices of V-L-S-E failed to elicit a positive acknowledgment of this action, but it was stated that official announcements would be issued on the subject September 1.

When the question regarding the truth of these rumors was asked Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, and Mr. Hampton, these gentlemen refused to discuss the matter, but they did not deny that such was the case.

Selig, Spoor and Kleine in Combination.

The withdrawal of the Selig and Spoor interests from the V-L-S-E gave color at once to the rumors which had been floating about to the effect that a combination was to be formed by them with George Kleine, whose very efficient exchange organization would give them the outlet for their product. The situation was further complicated by stories to the effect that the three Chicago firms, Selig, Spoor and Kleine, were about to effect a union with the newly formed Success Films Corporation. While none of the principals would confirm these rumors, it is known that E. S. Bradley, representing the capitalists interested in Success, was in Chicago in conference with Messrs. Selig and Spoor regarding the details of the matter.

Mr. Bradley left Chicago on Tuesday, August 22, and it was expected that he would have something to say upon his arrival in this city. But up to the time this edition of the Moving Picture World went to press nothing definite had been given out for publication.

BETTY HOWE ADDED TO CAST OF "BEATRICE FAIRFAX."

In addition to Harry Fox and Grace Darling, other prominent screen stars will appear with these two in certain episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax," the photo-play series of the International Film Service, Inc. The first of these co-stars will be Miss Betty Howe.

The N. A. of M. P. I. Elects Officers

New Organization Chooses William A. Brady for President and J. E. Brulatour for Treasurer.

ON THE morning of August 16th at the Hotel Astor the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held the first election of officers, which resulted as follows: President, William A. Brady, elected by 20 out of 24 votes cast; J. E. Brulatour, treasurer; Thomas Furniss, of Duluth, Minn., first vice-president; Adolph Zukor, second vice-president; Don J. Bell, third vice-president; Hiram Abrams, fourth vice president; Arthur James, fifth vice president, and Frederick E. Eliot, executive secretary.

Mr. Eliot, who had been prominently identified with the automobile industry and with the "Safety First" movement, but who has had no previous connection whatever with the film industry, was proposed by Walter W. Irwin after the latter had been elected chairman of the executive committee. No other candidates were given a chance to present their claims for the office of executive secretary, though there were several within the ranks of the industry, among them such men as Paul H. Cromelin and Samuel Spedon.

The meeting at the Hotel Astor was attended by twenty-four directors out of thirty, the following men being present: E. A. McManus, W. L. Sherrill, Don J. Bell, Patrick A. Powers, Otto Kahn, "Wid" Gunning, J. E. Brulatour, Adolph Zukor, Frank Rembusch, E. E. Philips, Walter W. Irwin, Peter Jeup, Frederick J. Herrington, William A. Brady, J. H. Hallberg, E. L. Levine, W. Stephen Bush, Paul Gulick, A. F. Tugwell, Thomas Furniss, Maurice A. Choyinski, Hiram Abrams, Richard Roland, Arthur James.

There was an exchange of compliments between Walter W. Irwin and Samuel Trigger, after which the election of officers was proceeded with, resulting as described. William N. Seabury, who also represents the Motion Picture Board of Trade, was elected general counsel of the organization.

After the elections had been finished Mr. Irwin made a speech, in the course of which he dwelt on the great power which, in his opinion, the new organization was likely to exert in the field of politics. He said the main object was to impress the political candidates with the power of the screen. He himself had never voted any but the Republican ticket, he said, but hereafter he was going to be guided by the interests of the industry first and foremost. He thought, he continued, it would be a splendid thing if through the action of the combined film interests it were possible to carry the state of New York for the gubernatorial candidate of one political faith and for the Presidential candidate of another political faith. Such a feat, in his opinion, would make the politicians sit up and take notice.

"If," said he, "we can do this then we can go into Pennsylvania and ask the political leaders there for a repeal of the censorship law; in fact, we can then have anything we want from such men as Penrose and Oliver and the Nicols and Vares of Philadelphia. I believe that the authors and promoters of the Cristman-Wheeler Censorship Bill in this state ought to be singled out for defeat and that a lesson ought to be administered to Ahern of Brooklyn, who stood sponsor for another censorship bill in the State of New York."

Mr. Irwin, as well as other speakers, emphasized the need of funds. Nothing is in the treasury of the new organization now, as all the subscriptions heretofore secured are conditioned upon the collection of the sum of forty thousand dollars, of which, so far, scarcely one-fourth has been subscribed. It was stated informally at the meeting and in the lobbies of the Hotel Astor that large sums of money might shortly be expected from prominent producers who have so far held aloof from the new organization. It was likewise claimed in a general way that the producers now belonging to the organization will enlarge their original contributions.

The following men were appointed members of the Executive Committee: Walter W. Irwin, chairman; Adolph Zukor, Arthur James, J. E. Brulatour, S. H. Trigger, L. L. Levine and Louis F. Blumenthal.

The local branch of exhibitors entertained the out-of-town exhibitor-directors at an informal but very joyous dinner at Feltman's on the night of Thursday, August 17. The matchless master of ceremonies, Isaac L. Hartsall, surpassed himself in the arrangements of this social affair, which was voted a huge success by all present.

CINEMA CLUB RECEPTION.

The Cinema Club of Bronx County, Local No. 2 of the Exhibitors' League of America, will hold their third annual reception and entertainment at Hunts Point Palace, 163d street and Southern boulevard, on Election Eve.

Gaumont Single Reels

Three Very Good Specimens Are Scheduled for Week of September 5.

THE three single-reel releases from the Gaumont studios for the week of September 3 are "Reel Life," the Gaumont scenic and animated cartoon, and the Mutual Weekly. "Reel Life" No. 18 features the cruise of the New York Yacht Club under the title of "A Day with the Yachtsmen." It gives one an excellent idea of the palatial steam yachts and the fast sailing vessels which comprise the fleet. Another part of the film is devoted to pictures of a plot of ground in the city under intensive cultivation. It clearly proves that dwellers in cities can keep down the cost of living no matter if they only have a few square yards of earth to cultivate. The third part of the reel presents one of the popular episodes which are pictured from stories in "Life," the humorous weekly. It is called "What Would You Do If——?" This time the question has to deal with a jealous husband who returns home to find his wife in another man's arms. After he shoots her he discovers that she is not his wife, as he has walked into a house next door to his home. The spectator is left to answer the question for himself.

"See America First" will present characteristic and entertaining pictures of Mauch Chunk and the anthracite coal regions in the vicinity of Wilkes-Barre and Scranton, Pa. So much is read about the work which is done in the Pennsylvania coal fields that the pictures should prove of wide interest. One of the most entertaining of the series of views shows a trolley trip upon which panoramic views of great beauty are obtained.

On the same reel with "See America First" is an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer. It is a regular release with the scenic. Mr. Palmer is devoting his pen to topical subjects, which have created a great vogue for these Gaumont Kartoon Komics.

The third single-reel release of the week as a Mutual picture from the Gaumont studios is The Mutual Weekly.

New World Film Boston Manager

STANLEY W. HAND, who has been connected with the World Film Corporation for the past year and a half, has been promoted to the managership of the Boston office of the World Film, effective August 7. Mr. Hand was formerly a newspaper man, drifting into the sales department of the Ingersoll Watch Company, and from there to the South Bend watches in which field he gained prominence and became eastern representative for the South Bend people.

Stanley W. Hand.

Believing there was a greater future in the film game, Mr. Hand joined the sales forces of the World Film Corporation March 22, 1915, being affiliated with the New York and Boston offices. Was made manager of the Boston office June 15, of the same year, then transferred to New York City as assistant sales manager.

While in the New England territory, Mr. Hand made a great number of friends, and his square deal manner of doing business soon got him the nickname of "Billy Sunday" Hand, the sobriquet first being applied to him by Manager Arthur Davis of the Nashua, N. H., theater, who claims that Hand is the squarest dealing salesman who ever sold him a picture.

With his vast acquaintance in the territory, when the World Film Corporation found it necessary to add a live wire manager to their Boston office, "Billy Sunday" Hand was sought out and returned to his former post, where he assumed his new duties August 7.

Standardizing Travel Pictures

C. L. Chester Proposes to Bring Them Up to the Level of Feature Films.

C. L. CHESTER, the executive head of C. L. Chester, Inc., of 200 Fifth avenue, New York, is about to issue the first really high class series of this sort, and will put them out at the rate of one reel a week to exchanges throughout the country, beginning with the first release on November 6. Six months ago he engaged three of the leading scenic cameramen, trained them thoroughly for the work, and as a result already has 54,241 feet of new negative. His idea is to bring the travel film up to the standard of the big up-to-the-minute features, and instead of taking scenery haphazard, every scene is being carefully planned in the office before the cameraman goes out. Light conditions receive as much attention as they do in any of the feature films and neither time nor expense is being spared.

C. L. Chester.

"While the cost of the feature films," said Mr. Chester yesterday, "has advanced from a dollar a foot to anything from five dollars up, in the last few years, the average manufacturer gasps at the idea of spending more than from thirty-five to sixty cents a foot for the travel stuff. Now, everyone knows the public likes good, wide-awake, well-made travel film, and yet much of the material supplied to the exhibitor is so poor that he uses it for chasers to empty his house. Years ago, I made most of the travel film for the Edison Company, the first organization to go into the travel stuff extensively, and made, with the aid of two cameramen, the very successful South American Travel Series for Paramount. In the past no time or thought has been devoted to the travel film, either before or after the cameraman left the office.

"In our work every picture will be carefully brought out and ninety per cent. of the scenes planned in the office. I have myself visited twenty-eight countries with a motion picture camera and have lived on every continent, except Australia. I know the weather and the light conditions thoroughly. In taking a feature film's exteriors the most minute calculation is made as to the exact time for the best light effect. Perhaps it may be 11.15 o'clock in the morning. Exactly at that moment the scene will be taken. We will be just as particular.

"I have been fortunate in securing as cameraman three of the best motion picture photographers in the industry. They are Victor Miller, W. D. Runcie and Raymond Agnel. Miller was with Pathe for many years; Runcie with Gaumont for several years, and Agnel made many of the best scenic and industrial films turned out by the Paris Eclair."

Mr. Chester, although he has had such a wide experience, is only 39 years old. He is a native of Iowa, and while a student at the Iowa State University, he assisted the professor of physics and chemistry and thus became interested in the chemistry of photography. He went in for original work with the camera and made several important inventions for the photographic art.

VERHALEN WITH PARAMOUNT.

C. J. Verhalen, until recently connected with Harry Raver's motion picture enterprises, has joined the publicity and efficiency staff of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and has been assigned to the Minneapolis exchange. Mr. Verhalen's work is along the line of the new publicity scheme of Paramount whereby each exchange controlled by that company will have its own press agent on the ground to help exhibitors in the exploitation of pictures. Mr. Verhalen's long experience in publicity should enable him to render valuable assistance to the patrons of the Minneapolis office of Paramount.

V-L-S-E Gets "The Fall of a Nation"

Prparedness Spectacle to Be Marketed by the Organization Which Made "The Battle Cry of Peace" Famous.

BELIEVING that there is more public interest today in the subject of preparedness than ever before, and that this interest is certain to increase, rather than diminish, because of the fast-growing realization that the nation's real danger will only begin when the war in Europe is over, the V-L-S-E has just completed a contract whereby "The Fall of a Nation," Thomas Dixon's wide-famed screen message on this vital topic, will be released through that organization.

The arrangement was prompted, not only by the desire of the Big Four to further the propaganda for Preparedness, in which it has played such a conspicuous role with the release of such films as "The Battle Cry of Peace," "The Nation's Peril," "The Hero of Submarine D-2," etc., and thereby maintain the exceptional business which such productions have brought to exhibitors everywhere, but also by the desire of Mr. Dixon to provide the widest possible channel for the dissemination of this message, and at the same time to effect this dissemination in the quickest possible manner.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, in announcing the acquisition of this extraordinary production, said: "The successes achieved by exhibitors everywhere during the past year have proved beyond question of doubt the value of the big film as an added stimulus to business. Particularly have the Preparedness films been unusual in their drawing power. When we were approached by Mr. Dixon and his associates upon the question of distributing his plea for adequate preparedness, we found ourselves in a very happy position to consider the proposal, because of our experience and success in serving the exhibitor with other big productions of a similar character."

Mr. Dixon, in talking about his decision to release "The Fall of a Nation" through the V-L-S-E, said: "I consider this production the accomplishment of my life. Entirely apart from the material returns to be derived from the widest possible exploitation of the picture, I am vitally concerned in placing its message before the greatest number of people—and to do this quickly—when it will be most timely. The political campaigns are on. The time to strike, both from the standpoint of the best interests of the propaganda, and of the exhibitors, is the present."

"The Fall of a Nation" will be released by the V-L-S-E on September 18. An adequate number of prints have been provided to insure a quick and thorough distribution of the production.

With it, of course, there will be available the specially prepared orchestral score by Victor Herbert, which contributes so materially to the appeal of the picture.

Lottie and Jack Pickford Rejoin Famous Players

Will Appear in Important Roles in Forthcoming Productions of That Concern on the Paramount Program.

TWO interesting additions to the Famous Players forces were made this week in the persons of Lottie and Jack Pickford, sister and brother of the celebrated Mary Pickford, respectively. It was in "Fanchon, the Cricket," in which Mary Pickford starred, that her sister Lottie appeared as the sister. Jack has been seen in several Famous Players productions, both in support of Mary and of Marguerite Clark. With the latter he appeared in "The Pretty Sister of Jose," playing the role of the star's brother with great success.

With Mary, Jack has appeared in "A Girl of Yesterday," "The Commanding Officer" and was last seen in "Poor Little Peppina" in which he did a great deal of clever character acting in his portrayal of the young Italian lad, Beppo, who assisted Peppina in escaping from the plantation on which she was practically a prisoner.

Since his appearance in "Poor Little Peppina," Jack Pickford has been starred by another large producing concern and has proven a conspicuous success.

Lottie Pickford, who has been in retirement since starring in a sensational serial photoplay, is now at work in support of Louise Huff in "The Reward of Patience," which is being staged under the direction of Robert G. Vignola. In this picture Miss Pickford plays the "heavy," a society girl who weds an engineer because her mother wants her to, and then proceeds to flirt outrageously wtih another man with whom she is infatuated. "The Reward of Patience" is scheduled for release on the Paramount Program September 11th.

Astra In the Front Rank of Producers

Under the Leadership of Louis J. Gasnier, It Boasts of the Services of Some of the Best Artists Among Picture Makers

TO KEEP pace with the rapidly-growing activities of Pathe, the Astra Film Corporation, under the direction of Louis J. Gasnier, president, has, in the six months of its existence, built up an organization that places it in the front ranks of the independent producing companies.

The Astra Company has just completed "The Shielding Shadow," Pathe's latest fifteen episode serial which will be released October 1. Work has been started on a new military serial written by Guy McConnell and Geo. B. Seitz, which will feature Pearl White, supported by one of the most popular actors in the country. Within two weeks, Mr. Gasnier expects to start work on still another serial, which will be adapted from "The Double Cross," the great literary success of Gilson Willett. Two famous stars have been engaged for this serial.

But the activities of the Astra Company have not been confined to serials. Five features have already been produced for Pathe's Gold Rooster program—"Arms and the Woman," featuring Mary Nash; "The Test," with Jane Grey and Lumsden Hare; "The Romantic Journey," with William Courtenay and Alice Dovey; "Kick In," with William Courtenay and Mollie King, and "May Blossom," with Pearl White and Hal Forde. "The Challenge," Al. H. Woods' melodramatic success is now being produced.

Associated with Mr. Gasnier, who was formerly general manager of Pathe Exchange, are George B. Seitz, author of "The Iron Claw," and one of the most successful scenario writers in the country; George Fitzmaurice, who produced "At Bay," "Via Wireless" and "New York"; Edward Jose, who produced "The Iron Claw," and "The Light That Failed," and Donald Mackenzie, who, with Mr. Gasnier, produced "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Shielding Shadow," and also the well-known Gold Rooster Plays "The Galloper" and "Mary's Lamb."

"In line with the policy of J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, we are adding to the forces of the Astra Company some of the greatest directors and some of the best-known actors in the country today," said Mr. Gasnier in discussing his plans. "We have also in mind constantly the importance of good stories. The Astra controls the rights to a number of literary and dramatic successes and we have also made arrangements for original scripts.

"The better class of motion pictures being produced today have educated the public to expect higher and higher standards. They will turn out to see a famous star or a celebrated stage success in pictures, but if the production is poor, the picture will not succeed. We consider good directors of paramount importance and are proud to have associated with us such men as Mr. Fitzmaurice, Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Jose. Mr. Fitzmaurice is now adapting 'The Challenge,' our latest A. H. Woods play. He has completed four features for the Gold Rooster program. Mr. Mackenzie recently completed the last episode of 'The Shielding Shadow,' and will start to work next week on a new Pathe serial with two prominent stars.

"Mr. Jose's latest production, 'May Blossom,' with Pearl White, I consider his greatest work. Mr. Jose, it will be remembered, produced 'The Iron Claw,' and some of the great Gold Rooster plays, including 'The Beloved Vagabond,' which was hand-colored, and 'The Light That Failed,' which has not yet been released. Mr. Jose started work on a new serial which will feature Pearl White.

"In the selection of stories for Pathe serials, the strength of the story is the prime consideration. The day has passed when a lot of disconnected 'stunts' can be thrown together and called a serial. Of course, 'stunts' are all right when they are logical and fit in with the action of the story, but it is not necessary to depend upon them for the success of a serial. In 'The Shielding Shadow' and our two new serials, we have relied upon the sustained interest of the story. The public will come back week after week to follow the development of the plot, and not to see an earthquake in one episode, a shipwreck in another and a fire in a third."

Among the stars who will appear in Astra productions under the Pathe banner are Leon Bary, Cooper Cliffe, William Courtenay, Grace Darmond, Alice Dovey, Paul Everton, Claude Fleming, Hal Forde, Jane Grey, Lumsden Hare, Ralph Kellard, Mollie King, Mary Nash, Florence Reed, Norman Thars, Madeline Traverse, Marie Wayne, Niles Welch, Pearl White, Suzanne Willa, Theodore Friebus and W. T. Hinckley.

This is a list of stars that any concern in the business might envy, and yet the Astra is only six months old!

EDITH STOREY'S NEW HOME READY.

The culmination of a long term of anticipation has come to Edith Storey in her removal to a fine new home which has just been completed for her at Eaton's Neck, near Northport, Long Island. The Vitagraph emotional star is as happy as a child over her domicile, which is to be an all-year-round residence for her.

General Film Vitagraphs

Three Offerings for Week of September 2—An Exceptional Broadway Star Feature.

"A FOOL and His Friend," the Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature on the General Film program for Saturday, September 2, was produced by Director William Wolbert with a capable cast of players of Vitagraph's Coast Division headed by Webster Campbell, Corinne Griffith, Jack Mower, Louise Owen, Otto Lederer and George Davis.

Scene from "A Fool and His Friend" (Vitagraph).

It is one of the best offerings the Western Vitagraph Company has ever turned out and in view of its numerous successes this is saying a great deal. The settings are perfect and photography excellent. Agnes Johnston is the author of the story, which deals with the infatuation of a married man for a prominent dancer and the gratitude of a street waif he adopts, and who, in later years, becomes the competent secretary of the man who befriended him. He fails in his efforts to save the man from his fate, but marries the widow whom he learned to love.

"The Fair Fare," is a single part comedy which tells how a newly-married woman gets her husband to take her sightseeing, in and around Seattle. Many beautiful scenes showing the harbor of Seattle, Mount Rainier, North Pacific Highway, and other places of interest are depicted. The photoplay was written and produced by Frederick Hiller.

A comedy, "Love and Trout," from the Bay Shore Studio makes up the balance of the week's releases. It comes from the pen of Josephine Lovett and was photographed under the direction of John Robertson. Shirley Moore as a special game warden gains the consent of an objecting father to the marriage of his son. William Lytell, Jr., plays the part of the son. Thomas Keog as the father and Julia Dodson as his ward assists in the laugh-making.

Selig Shows "Masked Marvel"

In Ninth of the Athletic Series—Bicycle, Polo and Rowing Exhibitions Pictured.

THE "Masked Marvel," the wrestling champion who created such a sensation during the recent wrestling tournament in the Manhattan Opera House, will appear in the ninth release of the Selig Athletic Series, to be released through the V-L-S-E on August 21.

The "Great Unknown," whose identity was shrouded in mystery for months, will be seen in a finish match with Joe Wallace, of Chicago, after which he will reveal his identity by removing his mask.

Frank Kramer, of East Orange, N. J., the king of them all on a bicycle, who has held the sprinting championship of the world for a number of years, will appear in a one-mile sprint, which was taken at the Newark, N. J., Velodrome.

An innovation in the series will be the appearance in this release of a spirited pony polo match between the Westmorland and the Washington, D. C., teams. Despite the prodigious size of the field each play is seen by the audience.

Another novelty is a demonstration by Miss Dulcie Hall, Australian physical culture expert, of jiu jitsu methods and holds for the benefit of women and girls. This instruction is said to be invaluable to women who have had encountered mashers, especially in New York City.

The annual regatta between Yale and Harvard is also included in this release, as also is a three-cushion billiard match between Joe Capron, of Chicago, and Frank Hahman, of Minnesota.

Brady Regards "Specials" as Poor Business

Head of World Film Believes That Programs Should Contain the Best a Company Can Produce.

CONCERNING the production policy of the World Film Corporation, to which part of the operation of that concern he has been devoting a large percentage of his personal attention for several months, William A. Brady, director general of the company, has this to say:

"It very soon struck me upon entering the motion picture field that 'preparedness' as a watchword would be even more useful here than anywhere else in business life and I have proceeded consistently along this line. The result up to the present moment is that we have fifteen pictures finished, edited and ready for the screen. It would be a simple matter for us to release all these tomorrow if we were so disposed, or such an act fitted in with our plan of business.

"But," continued Mr. Brady, "of course nothing of the sort is to be thought of. Our plan was undertaken and carried to its present stage solely with the idea of making it a sure thing that we would always be in a position to deliver to distributors on the day and at the hour specified. It is a practical impossibility under present conditions for the World Film to be caught napping.

"The list of completed plays includes 'The Rail Rider,' with House Peters starred and Ethel Clayton featured; Marie Dressler in 'Tillie's Night Out;' Lew Fields in 'The Man Who Stood Still,' Alice Brady in 'The Gilded Cage' and 'A Woman Alone,' Robert Warwick in 'Friday the 13th,' Ethel Clayton in 'Should She Have Told,' House Peters and Gail Kane in 'The Velvet Paw,' Frances Nelson and Arthur Ashley in 'The Revolt,' Gail Kane in 'The Scarlet Oath,' Robert Warwick and Gail Kane in 'The Heart of a Hero' (in the stage version of which, written by the late Clyde Fitch, and called 'Nathan Hale,' the star part was acted by N. C. Goodwin), Ethel Clayton and Holbrook Blinn in 'Husband and Wife,' Frances Nelson and E. K. Lincoln in 'The Almighty Dollar,' and one other.

"In referring to these photoplays I am reminded of a letter which I received a day or two ago from a well known concern in Boston, as follows:

"'The thought has struck me that possibly you will release as a special production not on the World program the picture, "Friday the 13th." My understanding is that it is to be in extra reels. If that is the case and you desire to release it, may we be one of the applicants for the New England rights or the world rights for same?'

"Naturally, it is extremely pleasant to learn that one of our regular program plays is regarded in this light, but neither 'Friday, the 13th,' nor any of the other World Film productions will go out as a special release. All will have their regular places on the World program. I am unalterably opposed to any other system of doing business.

"I want the confidence of the small town exhibitor as well as the man who runs the biggest theater in the country. I want him to know that if he is due to get a World Film release next Wednesday, or six months from next Wednesday, it will be there and will represent the very best effort that is in us. I am quite satisfied, and the company is quite satisfied to take the profits as they come, year in and year out, on a fair basis of charges, without following any get-rich-quick scheme that must inevitably increase the exhibitors' expense two, three or even four times over.

"Put this down as a certainty: The World Film Corporation will never weaken its program by issuing special releases. And when you have put it down, go and bet on it."

GOFF RETURNS FROM TRIP.

A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the V-L-S-E, returned to New York last week from a tour of the Big Four branches in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis, where conferences were held with the sales forces of these four cities.

In Cleveland, Mr. Goff made the transfer of managers, in which C. A. Meade, former manager at Dallas, succeeded C. E. Shurtleff, who resigned. The assistant general manager started the ball rolling for an even better and more productive administration in the Cleveland branch than any that has gone before.

Essanays For September

Formidable List of Subjects Announced by President Spoor.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, has just announced the company's September releases. Besides one of the best features on the market they include a strong assortment of short reel subjects, one, two and three acts in both comedy and drama.

All of Essanay's greatest stars appear in these photoplays, including Henry B. Walthall, Bryant Washburn, Richard C. Travers, Sydney Ainsworth, Ernest Maupain, John Lorenz, Harry Dunkinson, Edna Mayo, Nell Craig, Warda Howard, E. H. Calvert, Marguerite Clayton, Lillian Drew, Edward Arnold and Eugene O'Brien.

The first September release is "The Higher Destiny," scheduled for the 2d, and it includes in the cast Warda Howard, Sydney Ainsworth, Edward Arnold, Gertrude Glover and Patrick Calhoun. It is a strong drama with stirring heart interest, of a man who loves, who neglects his wife, and finally repents. "The Pacifist," released on September 5, is a truly humorous comedy, based on one of the topics of the day. It shows how a man who is always fighting for peace finally wins out by fighting with his fists. It features Harry Dunkinson, one of the strongest comedians to be seen on the screen.

On September 6 Essanay offers Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 15, by Wallace A. Carlson, a caricature on the leading men and events of the day. "A Million for a Baby" is the three-act offering of September 9, a strong drama featuring Bryant Washburn, Marguerite Clayton, Lillian Drew and John Lorenz. On September 12 comes a two-act drama, "The Greater Obligation," featuring Edward Arnold.

Dreamy Dud, one of the humorous cartoons by Wallace A. Carlson, reappears on the screen on September 13. On September 16 there is a three-act drama, a stirring love story, entitled "The Woman Always Pays." Miss Drew and Sydney Ainsworth take the leading roles. Miss Drew and Sydney Ainsworth are also presented in a strong two-act drama, "When Justice Won," on September 19.

A Canimated Nooz Pictorial, No. 16, appears on September 20 and on September 23 there appears one of the best three-reel offerings of the month, "The Way of Patience," featuring Nell Craig, Ernest Maupain and Darwin Karr.

In the last week of the month, beginning with September 26, there is a two-reel comedy drama, "Peter the Hermit," featuring Nell Craig, Harry Dunkinson and John Junior, a Dreamy Dud on September 27, and a three-reel drama on September 30, "Twin Fates," featuring Sydney Ainsworth, Edmund F. Cobb and Virginia Bowker.

Essanay's five-act feature for the month is "The Return of Eve," presenting Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien. This is a stirring and artistic drama, its intense dramatic situations set in one of the most beautiful and picturesque spots of untamed nature; contrasting the simple and wholesome passions of primitive man with the foibles of modern society.

CIRCUS STORY FOR ANN PENNINGTON.

After her very successful debut in "Susie Snowflake" it was decided to star Miss Pennington in a circus story to be called "The Rainbow Princess" which is being staged under the direction of J. Searle Dawley. In this picture Miss Pennington plays a little waif who has been adopted by the wife of the proprietor of a circus and is forced to do a great deal of the mean work around the place in addition to learning to do tricks with the animals. Of course there is a lover among the men in the troupe but "The Princess," realizing that he is not quite sincere in his attentions, has the good sense to refuse to accept his attentions. She later proves to be not at all the waif that she was thought to be and—but the story is one to be seen on the screen.

The production of this photoplay at this particular time has caused many unexpected difficulties to be placed in the path of Director Dawley, because of the strict quarantines which have been placed upon itinerant citizens because of the paralysis plague. As a result of these numerous obstacles, Mr. Dawley was forced to arrange with one of the circuses which was on Long Island to have it apparently disband and travel back to New York in small units, with the Famous Players studio as their rendezvous. Then the tent was set up in a large vacant lot on the west side and the scenes were taken.

Miss Pennington, who is a remarkably clever athlete and is a trained acrobat, has already done some very startling feats in the "show" and she predicts that she will accomplish even more before the end of the picture.

First McClure Pictures

A Series of Five-Reel Feature Plays Is Announced Each Complete in Itself—"Seven Deadly Sins" the Title.

PRODUCTION plans have progressed so rapidly during the last few weeks that the McClure Publications feel warranted in lifting the veil of secrecy that has covered the titles of the forthcoming McClure Pictures, and in making known the plan of production.

The closing of contracts with McClure Stars and the production of the pictures in which they are to star is rapidly going forward. Nance O'Neil and Charlotte Walker have been added during the past week to the McClure program. These, with Ann Murdock and Holbrook Blinn, will appear in the first pictures of our new super-series of seven five-reel dramas, entitled "Seven Deadly Sins."

While issued as a series each McClure play will be complete in itself. For instance, the first McClure play, in which Ann Murdock, the Frohman star, is to appear is called "Envy." The second one, in which Holbrook Blinn is the most important player, is called "Pride." Charlotte Walker is to play "Sloth," Nance O'Neil "Greed," and so on until all of the "Seven Deadly Sins" have been portrayed on the screen. The continuity of interest is further strengthend by the appearance in each play of a pair of young lovers played by these sterling young actors, George LeGuere and Shirley Mason. Each play is to be complete in itself and will stand on its own feet, but all seven form a group that can be advertised together.

To facilitate immediate production, McClure's has arranged with Thomas A. Edison, Inc., for the use of its studios in the Bronx. Director Richard Ridgely, assisted by Director Crossland, are now actively at work on McClure Pictures, the entire studio being given over to McClure work. It is stated that so long as the supply of studio space around New York City exceeds the demand, McClure's will take no steps to erect a new studio of their own. Several propositions are under consideration for the use of studios in California for the winter work of the McClure organization.

Ivan to Increase Production

Company Engages New Director, New Stars and Contracts for Stories by Famous Authors.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made with a prominent director, who will shortly sever his connection with one of the largest film manufacturing companies, to direct all-star cast productions under the Ivan banner. Announcement as to this director's identity will be made shortly. Ivan Abramson, director general of the Ivan Company, who has produced the Ivan pictures of the past, will continue to act as director general.

The Ivan scenario department has been increased by obtaining the services of Victor de Villiers, the well-known photoplaywright as editor-in-chief. The Ivan Company has also purchased several original scenarios by L. V. Jefferson, and is corresponding with other well known authors with a view to acquiring the screen rights to popular books and plays.

Contracts have been entered into and negotiations are pending with prominent screen artists and performers of the legitimate stage to portray the various roles called for in some of these new screen plays which will be placed in production shortly.

In order that there may be no let-up of productive efforts during the winter season, arrangements have been completed whereby the Ivan Film Productions will have a studio in Los Angeles. This plant is located at 2500 Alessandro street, and here productions to be released through the Ivan exchanges will be made under the personal supervision of W. A. Norton.

At the present time, Ivan Abramson is completing "Her Surrender," an original photodrama written by himself and enacted by a cast composed of Anna Nilsson, Rose Coghlan, William H. Tooker, Harry Spingler, Wilmuth Merkyl and Frankie Mann.

ROLIN COMPANY MOVES.

The Rolin Company, makers of the Pathe "Luke" comedies, are moving from Hollywood to their original location on the high hill between Los Angeles and Hollywood. The new home is being gone over carefully, new wiring for lights, projectors, etc., being put in, and a large enclosed stage is under construction. The building which is now to be used for offices and dressing rooms, is an old-fashioned mansion which has long been one of the landmarks of the city. The new studio will be ready for occupancy within two or three weeks, when a third company will be put on.

Alfred Allen, Edwin Brown and Edward Brady appear in support of the principals.

Selig Completes "The Crisis."

Churchill's Famous Story Said to Have Been Produced in Pictures With Great Exactness.

"THE CRISIS," the wonderful story of American patriotism, written by Winston Churchill, has been filmed as a spectacular film drama in twelve reels by the Selig Polyscope Company. The production will be released in the near future.

William N. Selig considers "The Crisis" as one of the most elaborate and expensive film dramas ever made in this country and the verdict of the few who have been fortunate enough to see private presentations of the film bear out Mr. Selig's assertion.

An interesting innovation in connection with "The Crisis" is that there is not a single detail in the film but that closely follows Mr. Churchill's great book dealing with the crisis in American history. Also, a majority of the scenes are filmed on historic ground, in localities called for in the book, including St. Louis, Mo., and Vicksburg, Miss.

The battle scenes in "The Crisis" are very spectacular and engage the services of the entire membership of the Mississippi National Guard including officers, etc., who staged the siege and defense of Vicksburg right on the ground where the historic engagements occurred over half a century ago. Although thousands of men, horses and equipment are engaged in the scenes of Civil War battles yet these scenes are but a small part of the drama and are just sufficient to carry along the logical action.

Historical scenes in and near Vicksburg, including the Vicksburg court house and slave market, are shown in all historic detail. Beautiful Southern homes, right in the heart of the romantic Southern country, so frequently described in the book, are shown together with the historic Carvel homestead.

Not the least important item in connection with "The Crisis" is the introduction to filmland of a new and startlingly realistic Abraham Lincoln enacted by Sam D. Drane. Too often historic characters are burlesqued and cause a loss of valuable atmosphere, but Drane's characterization of Abraham Lincoln is both dignified and convincing and not only does Drane resemble Lincoln, but the Great Emancipator's every little personal characteristic has been studied and faithfully portrayed. Even Lincoln's old dispatch box was loaned by the War Department for this Selig film play, which proves the care that was taken in having every detail of the drama correct as to atmosphere and history.

The cast of the play is worthy of especial mention and includes George W. Fawcett as "Judge Silas Whipple," Matt B. Snyder, as "Colonel Carvel," Bessie Eyton as "Virginia Carvel," Thomas Santschi as "Stephen Brice," Eugenie Besserer as "Mrs. Brice," Frank Weed as "Eliphalet Hopper," Marshall Neilan as "Clarence Colfax," Cecil Holland as "General Sherman," Sam D. Drane as "Abraham Lincoln," Will Machin as "Captain Lige Brent," Leo Pierson as "Jack Brinsmade," and others. Every member of the cast was selected with the type in view and all do full justice to their roles.

Colin Campbell was selected by Mr. Selig to direct the production of "The Crisis" and film authorities who have seen the play pronounce it his greatest and most artistic effort. When it is recalled that Mr. Campbell produced "The Spoilers," "The Rosary," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," etc., his latest and most massive production will be awaited with great interest.

"The Crisis" will be released with a special musical score that is now completed by one of this country's foremost musicians. An unusual publicity campaign is being planned and the presentation of this film will in every way be in just accordance to its artistic worth. Announcement of the release plans for "The Crisis" will be made in the near future by Mr. Selig.

SEVERAL NEW STARS FOR BLUEBIRD.

Although against the policy of Bluebird Photoplays to make and advertise "stars," the necessity is realized that exhibitors must have "names" to bill, and to that end several additional leading ladies have been signed for the stock company. Dorothy Phillips will soon appear under Director Joseph De Grasse in "The Place Beyond the Winds"; Ruth Stonehouse has been directed by Wm. Worthington in "Spring Song"; Cleo Madison will appear in "The Chalice of Sorrow," directed by Rex Ingram, and Grace Carlyle will have Robert Leonard as her director in "The Eagle's Wings." The September releases name Edith Johnson, in "Behind the Lines," and Elsie Jane Wilson, in "The Evil Women Do," as new stars in Bluebirds.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

What Is the Matter with the Industry?

IT HAS been no secret for some time past that the moving picture industry has been suffering from the effects of over-production and reckless competition, to which may be added the lack of business co-operation among the great producing companies, in whose care the welfare of the industry has been committed for the time.

On the charge of over-production one has only to consider the fact that feature productions, costing many thousands of dollars each, are given only a one-day showing in most of the photoplay theaters in the country. At the outset the exhibitors had it in their power to guide the public in their demands; but unbusinesslike competition between some exhibitors, who sought to outdo each other in the matter of programs, soon led to extravagant demands from the public, and in the effort to meet these demands a burden too heavy to be borne was placed on the producers. At the same time the exhibitors have not benefited, but are, themselves, also losers.

The great world war has added to the producers' burden, as it has reduced the demand for the American product in the foreign market, fully 75 per cent. in most instances. Thus the quality of the output had to be sustained in a contracted market, with the result that profits have been confined to small margins, or wiped out altogether.

The introduction of new capital, furnished by men who looked on moving pictures as the source of unlimited wealth, has made matters worse, as it has led to reckless competition between producers and to a still larger output. Rentals of films were necessarily lowered in order to find a market, and when accounting day came around it was found that instead of dividends being declared a deficit had to be met.

To add to the burdens of the industry the "star" system became the vogue, and unheard of figures were paid to secure the prestige of a name. Even said business men have catered to the whims of the public as they would to the conservative call of a dependable following, and increased rentals have been charged exhibitors, who, in turn, have increased the prices of admission, so as to meet the huge, outrageous figures paid the "stars."

This looks very much like the exploitation of a great industry, instead of assisting in its healthy, conservative development. If the makers of moving pictures can arrange to get together once in a while to consider the welfare and future of the industry as a whole, I believe the near future will show better results for themselves and for exhibitors, and for the entire industry.

Loyalty to an industry on the part of those engaged in it is as necessary to its success and permanence as loyalty to a nation by its citizens is necessary for its perpetuity. There is no place for disloyalty in either case.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Sol Lesser, accompanied by Mrs. Lesser and J. Samuels, director and attorney of the All Star Features Distributors Company (Mr. Lesser's organization), arrived in the city from the Pacific Coast on Sunday, August 13, and proceeded to New York Tuesday, August 15. While here, Mr. Lesser purchased the Australasian rights to "Where Are My Children?"

Robert T. Kane, of Kulee Features, Inc., paid us a pleasant call one day last week. Mr. Kane has been traveling extensively through the middle west, disposing of the state rights features owned by his company, and he reported excellent conditions, notwithstanding the hot weather. This speaks well for the care taken to keep the interior of moving picture theaters cool, as in some cases the mercury was over 106 degrees.

It was a great surprise to learn that Kathlyn Williams, for many years Selig's leading star, of world-wide celebrity, has joined the Pallas-Morosco forces on a long-term contract.

H. H. Buckwalter, George Kleine's hustling representative in Denver and Salt Lake City, is now impressing on his numerous patrons the need of changing the current of their programs by booking a series of Kleine travelogues, the first series consisting of six reels.

"The program is classy, but not exactly classical," says Mr. Buckwalter in a well gotten up circular. "Not a bit of the 'sameness' of other travelogues. No war stuff, but six happy picnics, just like a vacation when your boss pays all expenses and you are in millionaire company."

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Manufacturing Company, informs me that on August 16, at the National Dealers' Service conference held in the Hotel Sherman, this city, he appeared and gave to the advertising men and sales managers present some valuable facts and figures concerning actual moving picture advertising which has been accomplished, and he also gave a general outline of the possibilities of moving pictures as an advertising medium. After the conference, all the members present in the city visited the Rothacker Film Manufacturing plant, where half a day was spent in learning how moving pictures are made to advertise.

Wesley Smith, in charge of a camera crew of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, returned to Chicago recently after completing a twelve weeks' tour of the southwest, where he secured special scenic pictures. During his trip, Estes Park and various other Colorado show places were also comprehensively filmed. Another camera crew, in charge of Harry Birch, is at present in Canada handling a big industrial contract there.

Edward Linden, in charge of another camera crew, left Chicago last week on a trip through Yellowstone Park, after which he will cover the entire Pacific Coast and the Canadian northwest. Mr. Linden will be gone about two or three months, and during that time he is expected to secure about 20,000 feet of represented scenic films, as well as attending to several industrial contracts which the company has on the Pacific Coast.

T. H. Miller, with his crew, is at present taking care of some special photoplay work in Kansas City, Mo., and W. B. Klingensmith is now working in Chicago on a big civic picture that will show the advantage of Chicago as a summer resort.

E. H. Philippi, sales manager of the company, recently returned to Chicago, after having made an exhaustive tour of inspection of the various agent's offices of the company throughout Ohio and Michigan.

H. R. Paxton, for several years connected in an advertising capacity with the International Harvester Company of America, and for the past two years advertising manager of that company at Terre Haute, Ind., has been appointed publicity manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., in Chicago. As explained recently in an article in the World, a publicity department will be conducted in connection with each exchange office of the Famous Players Film Service throughout the country in order to benefit the exhibitor and the company itself. In Chicago the publicity policy will be to help the exhibitor, by arranging publicity and plans designed to attract more of the better class of moving picture theater-goers to houses showing the Paramount service.

Dr. Joseph A. Jerger, of Waterloo, Iowa, has been in Chicago for the past ten days completing arrangements and buying a camera outfit, which he will take with him on a 34,000-

He will also visit Russia and Siberia, and possibly other European countries, where he will endeavor to get some good pictures of the surgical methods used in the larger war hospitals. He expects also to visit Australia, where, at Sidney, he will work among the wounded who have returned from the front. Dr. Jerger's camera equipment was purchased from the David Stern Company, this city.

All those in the film business who require the services of an expert writer of advertisements, press notices and booklets are strongly recommended to get in touch with Mr. Doud.

He will take along on his camera staff Fred Albright, of New York, and Harry Smith, assistant. Mr. Cox is financed in his present project by an organization of eastern capital.

She made her debut in "The Little Minister" in support of Maude Adams and later took important roles in "An American Gentleman," "Under Two Flags," "Quo Vadis," etc. She has starred in "The Third Degree," "The Price" and "Within the Law," and was a member of the famous all-star cast in the New York revival of "The Celebrated Case."

Plans for the forthcoming release of the Selig spectacular drama, "The Crisis," are being completed by William N. Selig. Important announcements in conection with the release of this great play can be expected in the near future. Finishing touches are now being made on the production in the Selig studios here.

National League Executive Board Meets

Important Session Held in New York City on Thursday, August 17, to Start Work on Maryland.

WITH National President Lee A. Ochs in the chair, the Executive Committee of the National League of the M. P. E. A. held an important session in the rooms of the Manhattan Local on the morning of August 17.

The situation in the various states was gone over carefully and various suggestions were adopted for strengthening the organization in states where they now exist and starting new organizations where none exist now. The state of Maryland came in for special attention and it was decided to invite the Maryland exhibitors to hold a state convention some time in September for the purpose of creating the strongest organization possible.

It was decided to send the National Organizer, Past President Frederick J. Herrington, on an extensive organizing tour without delay. A full statement of Mr. Herrington's itinerary will be published in the next few days. The President and the Executive Committee bespeak for the National Organizer the confidence and co-operation of exhibitors all over the country.

The Executive Committee meeting was attended by the following members: E. H. Horstmann of Boston, Will Isenberg of Greenville, Miss., Alfred Hamburger of Chicago, William J. Sweeney of Chicago, A. P. Tugwell of California, Thomas Furniss of Duluth, Minn., Samuel Trigger of New York and Peter Jeup of Detroit.

Sol Lesser Expands

In Association with Leon D. Netter Will Exploit Features on State Rights Basis in Eastern Territory.

SOL LESSER, better known to the film world both as "The Little Napoleon" and the "Youngest Film Magnate," has just completed the details and arrangements attendant on the biggest deal of his career, and one that stands out today as a landmark for an independent exchange man, when he assumed State Rights control of the Clara Kimball Young films for the Pacific Coast, the Audrey Munson "Purity" film for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, West Virginia, Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky, "The Little Girl Next Door," in association with Leon D. Netter for Pennsylvania, and the Australasian rights of "Where Are My Children?" Lesser in the past has confined all his activities to the western coast, with the exception of his exploitation of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," which he bought outright from Selig.

It can readily be seen that these present plans mean a widening of activities all round, and by this branching out along these channels and taking on these productions he confines himself no longer to the coast extension alone, but begins to get a foothold in the east. Nevertheless, his plans for the office out west mean bigger things, for they will be working in conjunction with his ideas of gradually taking over many of the bigger and more prominently successful features on state rights basis for the entire United States. His deal with Lewis J. Selznick gives him the five-year franchise to exploit the Clara Kimball Young productions on the western coast. Right in line with this "scoop" he closed a contract with President Carl Laemmle, of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., for the Australasian rights of "Where Are My Children?" the preachment on the subject of "birth control." Mr. Lesser previously had the Pacific Coast rights for this big feature.

With the purchase of the rights of "The Little Girl Next Door" for Pennsylvania, Leon D. Netter figured in association with Lesser, and by this arrangement Lesser is enabled to get his first hold in the east, and from Philadelphia as a center to radiate into the surrounding territory. It was through Mr. Netter's influence that Mr. Lesser was able to effect this arrangement.

While these foregoing state rights purchases were in the process of crystallization and to make this trip east a memorable one, he very quietly effected the arrangement whereby he obtained control of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, West Virginia, Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky for the much talked of feature starring Audrey Munson in "Purity." The business management of this film as well as "The Little Girl Next Door" will be handled by the Masterpiece Film Corporation, with Leon D. Netter as manager.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

WORLD MAN VISITS SANTA BARBARA.

Spends Week in Flying "A" Town. Interviews Exhibitors. Reports Activities of American Studio. Lots of Changes.

WHEN we visited Santa Barbara for a Sunday afternoon some weeks ago, as a guest of William Russell, popular star of the series of big stories bearing his name, we were so delighted with said star's ranch that he invited us to spend a few days, a week or a month, anytime we desired, so this week the desire came, and we went to the Flying "A" town, with visions of much work and lots of inspection of a ranch, Billy's home, and the new big studio which Mr. Hutchinson has built. We arrived there Friday evening and there at the depot was Russell with his speedy roadster to convey us to the ranch, which is near the studio.

Bill Russell with His Horse and Turkey.

Russell was working on the last scenes of "The Love Hermit," a five-reel feature to be released in the Russell series of eight big pictures, which Manager Lynch says are being turned out in record time. The big, husky star lives on the ranch, and there we were made at home in every way, even to the jovial way in which his celestial cook and house manager received us with "Hulo my friend. How you, pletty good? Where you cum flom? You cum flom San Franchico? You walk?" "Jim" is a well known character, and he always asks if one is from San Francisco and if he walked. Jim did it thirty-five years ago, and has never left Santa Barbara since.

The next morning Big Bill showed us around his ranch, with its seven kinds of fruit bearing trees, five dogs, two automobiles, horse, billy goat, trained squirrel, cat, and a real live knowing trained turkey, the only one in captivity. We snapped a picture of Bill with his horse and the trained turkey, which jumped at his bidding to the horse's back and perched there.

After a fine night's rest, with mountain air coming at us from every window, we were whisked around to the new studio, which is a beautiful structure, or series of structures. It has improved greatly since we were here last. Larger stages, more room, better working conditions, and lots of other details are to be noticed, all due to the work of Manager P. G. Lynch.

Mr. Lynch said that the company was doing all in its power to make its pictures bigger and better each day, and his talk was substantiated by the inside workings of the studio. Several new departments have been started, including photographing, construction, property, and art and ornamental.

One of the most interesting departments is the Compo Department, which is under the direction of P. P. Mesquita, where ornamental decorating is done with an entirely new process in moving picture production. All bric a brac, small ornamental work, and decorating materials are made here. The new art is a composition which has been used before only in architectural and construction work, being a plastic clay which is treated with heat, bent or moulded to finish, then allowed to dry, when it becomes as hard as rock.

And the people we met. There would be volumes in what they told us and what they showed us. A. G. Heimerl, heading the photographic department, said that everything was coming along fine in his place, and he was only waiting developments, which were being made at the time. He just returned from an extensive trip east, having visited the main laboratories in Chicago. Up in the light and airy cutting room we met Art Howard, who looked like he was ready for execution with a million feet of feature picture around his neck. Downstairs Jim Kirkwood posed with Mary Miles Minter for a publicity picture while his assistant raved upstairs. The picture is called "Dulcie's Adventure," and promises much. G. D. Carpenter is the portrait photographer who makes all American publicity pictures, which by the way are sent to Chicago before we can get them, that's why we can't show you the one of Mary M. M. and Jim posed under the pergola. Peggy Perkins, who counts all the pictures for Carpenter, said if we guaranteed that she would not be fired she would steal one for us to print, but no such chances.

P. G. Lynch.

Here's a love note: That day at the studio there were whisperings, and later we learned that Director Rea Berger, who had been in Los Angeles directing Kolb, we met him too, after he smashed into a street car with his racing machine, and Dill, who was at home at the studio, yes, Berger had jumped into the beyond by getting married to Miss Marty Martin, also of the winged "A" plant. We greeted them later at luncheon.

There are real cliff dwellers at the studio too, only they are modern men, having modern work to do. The Technical Department, as it is called, is under the guidance of E. M. Langley, with Ralphe Lampe as architect; A. W. Alley as decorator, with two assistants, Earl Olin as superintendent of construction, and Alex Richardson as secretary to them all and right hand man to Langley. Here they plan and build a set just as if it were a real house, even unto papering, tiling, and putting the bannister on a gorgeous stair in a magnificent hallway of some multi-multi.

We met Richard Bennett, the big star who played "Damaged Goods," and other features. He is being directed in "My Brother's Keeper" by George Sargent, the story by Kenneth Clarke. It is a five-reel cyko-comedy, around a stock exchange, and big homes. It has an allegory, written by Bennett himself, consisting of scenes showing Pan the little piper and Thor the light maker, according to myths. Rhea Mitchell is to be seen with Mr. Bennett as well as George Periolat, Robert Changler, Clarence Burton and Adrienne Morrison.

The first night we went down town to see the picture show with Bill Russell, Charlotte Burton, his leading lady, and members of Russell's bachelor household consisting of Baron Edward A. Kauffman, scenario writer de luxe, and wielder of the sympathy pen; Harvey Clark, heavy man and delineator of characters, and George Ahearn, you always mistake the "A" for an initial. However we went to the Palace theater on the main street, which is one of the most popular in town. Here we met Captain McGuire, the owner and manager, who is the Tally of Santa Barbara, and who is one of the best known exhibitors in his city. He is the original showman of the town. He opened the first successful picture house in 1909, called La Petite, and ran in a vacant store for three years, then moved up into the big business district and opened the present house. He enjoys a fine business, having 650 chairs. Music is by a big Fotoplayer, and projection is by a Simplex and a Power. He shows Metro, Monday and Tuesday; Mutual, Wednesday and Thursday; World, Friday and Saturday, and mixed on Sunday, with the usual Chaplin picture and a Secret from the Submarine, to fill out the bill. Captain McGuire says business took a great jump when the American opened its studios, because interest was stimulated in the pictures and business increased about 75 per cent.

Next morning at the studio we met George Wight, head of the publicity bureau, and also editor of scenarios. Harold Hoadley, son of the immortal "Pop" Hoadley, scenarioist, writes most of the publicity news. Mr. Wight said that, for the benefit of script writers, his department was in need of five-reel feature stories. Recently the Flying "A" stopped making short pictures, hence the change in demand. He is not much interested in material sent in by outside writers, saying that Uncle Sam is being enriched more than anyone else. However high class comedy dramas, straight dramas, and in fact anything good from a well known writer will receive attention.

Edward Sloman is making a picture, "The Shadow," by William Lippert, screened by Clifford Howard, and starring Winifred Greenwood and Ed. Coxen. We will tell more about the studio and other exhibitors next week.

UNIVERSAL STUDIOS BUSY.

This has been a busy week at Universal City. With close to forty companies exposing film along the thousands of feet of stage, and out on various locations, the output is very large, and releases demand much footage. Saturday Director A. W. Rice with his company, headed by Jane Bernoudy, returned from a several weeks' trip to Bear Valley where they filmed a series of mountain pictures. They went at first to the highest mountains to do a single picture, but the scenery was so beautiful, and they liked working there so well that they lengthened the stories, and continued camping out and shooting many magazines of film on their stories. Jane Bernoudy plays the leading parts, with George Pearse playing opposite. Miss Bernoudy is the girl in front of the camera, while her director is leaning against the tree just behind her, George Pearse is at the extreme left.

"HAZARDS OF HELEN" COMPANY TRANSFERRED TO GLENDALE.

The "Hazards of Helen" Company which until recently has been producing at the Hollywood studios of the Kalem Company have transferred to the Glendale studios this week, leaving the Hollywood plant for the producing of the "Ham Comedies." Lloyd V. Hamilton, now directing these comedies, finds the studio none too large for this work, as the stories being written for these comedies called for more elaborate settings than in the past. A large tank is now being built for water scenes and additional traps are being built into the stage, one with a hydraulic hoist with sufficient power to raise an entire set. As Kalem's railroad station "Lone Point" is near the Glendale studios this transfer will facilitate the work of the "Hazards of Helen" Company.

"Ham Comedies" Company and a number of extra players leave this week for Arrow Head Springs where they will make a one-reel story under the direction of Lloyd Hamilton, entitled "Ham and Mud." The story is written by Hamilton and Duncan, a roaring farce about mud baths, and the company will remain at Arrow Head Springs a week to make the necessary scenes at this suitable location.

Messrs. Hamilton and Duncan received the other day from Hirao Shokai, an exhibitor of Yokohoma, Japan, two gorgeous kimonos of silk crepe, ornamented with the Kalem trade mark embroidered in blue silk. "Ham and Bud" are very popular with the patrons of Mr. Shokai's theater and this Oriental exhibitor writes that a "Ham Comedy" night is set aside every week when elaborate souvenirs are given away to the public. Slap stick comedies appeal to the peoples of the far East, and there is always a great demand in Japan and China, we have learned from visitors to these countries, for American films.

DIRECTOR CABANNE LEAVES FINE ARTS.

William Christy Cabanne, the well known Fine Arts director, has resigned his position with the Fine Arts Film Company, and Wednesday this week entered a contract with the Metro Picture Corporation.

Mr. Cabanne has been employed to direct a $500,000 serial for Metro which will require several months to stage.

So far the title of the nature of the big serial has not been divulged by the Metro Corporation, but it is said that rehearsals on the big film production will start very shortly.

Mr. Cabanne will direct Francis K. Bushman and Beverly Bayne and will leave immediately for New York, where the serial will be filmed. It is probable that as soon as the Bushman-Bayne serial is completed, the Quality-Metro Company will be brought to Los Angeles, where future pictures will be made.

Mr. Cabanne has won considerable fame as a director since joining the Griffith Company, and the step upward is seen by his friends as recognition of his remarkable ability.

INCE PLAYERS HAVE GOOD TIME.

It would seem that life with Thomas H. Ince players at Culver City was "just one grand picnic." Hardly had the Kay-Bee stars recovered from their "million-dollar outing," at Catalina Island the other week than Business Manager E. H. Allen staged another grand affair in Topanga Canyon.

Leaving the Culver City Plant early in the morning the picnickers drove in automobiles to the heart of beautiful Topango Canyon. Hunting, fishing and hiking used up the morning hours and after that came the big spread, voted the record-breaking best ever.

Various athletic sports closed the day's fun. Among those present were:

Dorothy Dalton, Louise Glaum, Enid Markey, Margaret Thompson, Clara Williams, Margery Wilson, Reginald Barker, Walter Edwards, George Fisher, Charles Giblyn, Jack Gilbert, William S. Hart, Robert McKim, Charles Miller, Charles Ray, J. Barney Sherry, Jerome Storm, Monte M. Katterjohn, Lanier Bartlett, Superintendent of Production Dave Hartford, Mrs. Hartford, Business Manager E. H. Allen, Chief of the Art Department Irvin Willat, Cameramen De Vinna, Betx and Warren, and Publicity Manager Kenneth O'Hara.

NEW STUDIO TO MAKE MUTUAL.

With three studios on the Pacific Coast making Mutual pictures, another plant will be in operation within a short time where five and seven reel features, under the direction of Harry Pollard, formerly of the American Company, will be filmed. Mr. Pollard is backed by a Santa Barbara millionaire named Osborn.

Recently Mr. Pollard made a picture at San Diego called "The Pearls of Paradise" as a test film. This was submitted to the Mutual Company and found to be just what it wanted, and it was because of the success of this picture that Mr. Pollard was given a long-term contract to produce features for Mutual.

Miss Marguerita Fischer, Mr. Pollard's wife, will be featured in a great number of the pictures, and it is planned to turn out about twelve a year.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

The Smalleys have now completed James Oppenheim's story "Idle Wives," and will from this on direct independent of each other at Universal City.

Lois Weber, who in private life is Mrs. Phillips Smalley, will start production this week on a five-reel photo drama entitled "Devotion," with Mary MacLaren as her featured player. Arthur Forde will remain as Mrs. Smalley's assistant director.

Phillips Smalley will produce a story written by Brand Whitlock, former minister to Belgium. The name of the film play is "The Girl That's Down."

Director Ben Wilson, who takes the part of an Indian in "The Last of His Race," took a 20 foot tumble from a cliff at Pine Crest near San Bernardino this week while engaged in a struggle with his assistant director, Thomas Walsh, who was playing the part of an Indian guide. The two men fought to the edge of the cliff when a rock gave way under them and they both dropped into the river below. Fortunately neither was hurt and the incident added considerable thrill to the story.

The torpedo boat destroyer Farragut while lying off the port of San Pedro was riddled with shots from bow to stern this week, the shooting being done by a battery of motion picture cameras belonging to a Universal company who used the warship as background for some of the scenes in the three-reel photoplay "Honor Thy Country."

Permission to obtain the use of the Farragut had been secured by General Manager Davis, who wired Secretary of Navy, Josephine Daniels, requesting that the Universal be accorded the desired privilege. Secretary Daniels sent his consent at once and in addition wired Capt. Hudson, Commander of the destroyer to assist the Universal Company in every way to make the scenes aboard the vessel as effective as possible.

Carter de Haven and a large company of Universal players under direction of Wallace Beery spent several days last week at Catalina Islands, filming scenes for one two-reel and two one-reel comedy features. The company secured some wonderful water scenes and many laughable situations for the three stories.

Gretchen Lederer, one of the most popular young women at Universal City, assisted this week in the formation of a German Woman's Club of Los Angeles, the aim of which is to help the needy and sick among the German population of our city. Miss Lederer was appointed financial secretary of the organization.

What is said to be the largest court room setting ever built for the screen was completed this week at Culver City under the supervision of Art Director Robert Brunton, and is now being used by Director Walter Edwards for scenes in a new Triangle-Kay-Bee play by John Lynch, in which Frank Keenan will appear as the star. The setting covers a floor space of approximately 3,000 square feet and has a seating capacity of nearly 400. It is reproduced from photographs of one of the handsomest Supreme Court rooms in New York City, and is declared to be absolutely accurate in every detail of its construction.

Alma Reuben has been engaged to play the leading feminine role in support of William S. Hart in a new Triangle Kay-Bee drama, written by J. G. Hawkes. Miss Reuben is familiar to Triangle patrons from her splendid work with Douglas Fairbanks in "The Halfbreed," a recent Triangle-Fine Arts release.

Geraldine Farrar will take the part of Jeanne d'Arc in a great film drama now being produced by the Famous-Players-Lasky Company, at its Hollywood studio and on the Lasky ranch in San Fernando Valley. It is being directed by Cecil B. de Mille. The supporting cast includes Theodore Roberts, Fred Wilson, Marjorie Daw and many other well known Lasky players.

Thomas Meighan has returned to the Lasky studios after spending his vacation in the East with his wife, Frances Ring. He will shortly start rehearsals on a new production.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison have been at Lake Tahoe filming scenes in a new Metro film play called "Mr. 44." General Manager Fred Balshoffer expects two more of his companies from the East shortly. These will at once begin work at the Hollywood studios, at 1329 Gordon street.

The Clune Motion Picture Company which has been working for many weeks at their studio on the corner of Melrose and Bronson avenues filming a ten-reel screen version of Harold B. Wright's well-known story, "The Eyes of the World," sent their players and directors last week with an extensive camp equipment to the San Gabriel Canyon. The company is expected to be gone for nearly a month and the final scenes of the story will be taken on these locations far away from the traveled highways and reached only by stage and mule back. Truck loads of camp equipment and food stuffs made up a regular caravan. Films taken on these locations are being sent daily on burrows to a waiting automobile at the nearest point on the road and rushed to the studios for development. Donald Crisp the producer of "Ramona" is the General Director of this big feature.

Captain F. E. Kleinschmidt, the well known explorer and cinematographer, arrived in the city Saturday last week from San Francisco. We are informed that W. H. Clune has bought the rights for California, Nevada and Arizona for Captain Kleinschmidt's European war pictures. They will be seen at the Auditorium next Monday.

Notable official lights of Los Angeles city and County, and other prominent personages will be travestied in a motion picture to be staged at the Labor Day picnic, at Selig Zoo Park, September 4. The committee in charge plans to have a scenario written that will burlesque the luminaries of Southern California and to have it directed by a well-known producer and photographed by an expert cameraman. Athletic sports will play an important part in the day's festivities.

Bennie Ziedman, the Fine Arts publicity scribe, has returned from his vacation in New York, and expects to begin work shortly on making stars famous at the Griffith studios.

Lloyd Ingraham of the Fine Arts staff of directors has departed for the New York Triangle studios, where he will continue to produce five-reel feature pictures. Before leaving for the East Mr. Ingraham completed the staging of "The Little Liar," starring Mae Marsh and Robert Harron, from a story by Anita Loos.

Lloyd Ingraham has been a member of the Fine Arts studio ever since their inception. His two best known Triangle productions are "The Child of the Paris Streets" and "Hoodoo Ann."

Cameraman Frank Urson accompanied the director to New York, where they will remain for several months.

Declining the services of a substitute and refusing to allow a dummy to be used, Bobbie Dunn, popular Keystone actor, one day this week jumped from the top of a five-story building into a plaster mixer. The plaster mixer was formed around a hidden pit less than six feet deep and eight feet square. Cement had been thrown on the water to add to the realistic effect.

Hand over hand up the fire-escape of the shaky skeleton of the structure went Dunn. When he took his position on the top of the building ready for the hazardous dive the crowd below pressed closer, amazed and breathless.

Dunn lost no time on the crest of the building. Smilingly he waved to a group of inmates. A moment later his form shot out into the air. There was a splash and speculation was intense until his head was seen to come to the surface of the water filled pit. His reappearance was greeted with shouting and cheering.

Lloyd V. Hamilton completed last week a rather elaborate and extremely funny one-reel Kalem comedy. The story tells of "Ham's" attempt to capture a $50,000 prize for a substitute for gasolene. "Bud" is the substitute and when after pushing a six cylinder touring car with the capitalist, who has offered the prize, his charming daughter and "Ham" in it over numerous hills he falls in an open manhole and starts for the ocean, via the sewer route, "Ham" regrets all his abuse of his partner and starts for the ocean to rescue him. A round tank 8 feet high and 20 feet long was built at the Hollywood studios for the interior of the sewer scenes, and two fire hose were used to get the rush of water through. A similar tank was built at San Pedro at low tide to show "Bud" and the officer arriving at the ocean. Ethel Teare is the fair damsel that plays opposite the enterprising "Ham."

Two World Film Dramas

House Peters is Star of "The Rail Rider," a Paragon Production—Holbrook Blinn and Ethel Clayton in "Husband and Wife."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig

"The Rail Rider."

THE attractiveness of the first reel of this picture and the dramatic force of a number of scenes in subsequent reels assure the popularity of one of the very best of recent Brady-made productions. "The Rail Rider" is general in its appeal; children will enjoy it, so will their elders; whereas the normal boy, who classes locomotive engineers among the most fortunate of men, will find the picture an unqualified delight. An engineer is the hero and very handsomely is he rewarded for doing even a little more than his duty. In almost no time at all he advances from a place at the throttle to a desk beside that of the president of the road and he wins the president's daughter in the bargain.

How all this happens makes a decidedly interesting story, the first part of which was photographed on a picturesque single-track railroad running through a mountainous country. House Peters plays the engineer, who is not averse to repairing the track when the train is held up by a washout. And instead of being credited with resourcefulness in meeting an emergency, he is charged with disobeying orders and suspended by a mysterious power in the railroad management known as "B." Coming on top of other arbitrary rulings, the incident is enough to stir the discontented employes to action, and as their representative Jim Lewis goes to the executive offices in New York.

Scene from "The Rail Rider" (World).

It appears that the manager, not the president of the road, is to blame for the unfair treatment, and when the manager disappears with the company's funds, Lewis starts on his trail. He makes almost as able a detective as he did an engineer; the absconding official is caught and the honest employe is suitably honored. The love interest in the picture is slight, but sufficient for a story of the kind. Director Tourneur's production is smooth, and Mr. Peters makes the engineer a most genial, likable man. Zena Keefe is pleasing in the conventional role of the president's daughter, whereas others in a wisely selected company are Bertram Marburgh, Harry West and A. Harrington.

"Husband and Wife."

The excellence of the cast in this version of the stage play by Charles Kenyon is conspicuous. With Holbrook Blinn and Ethel Clayton in the leads, assisted by such able players as Gerda Holmes, Emmett Corrigan, Madge Evans and Montague Love, it is not surprising to find a performance above the average, while Barry O'Neill's production reveals taste and discrimination in emphasizing the essential points of a quite complicated plot concerning the involved affairs of an extravagant wife and a husband lacking in moral courage.

For photoplay purposes, the story in "Husband and Wife" was not an ideal selection; too much depending upon dialogue which must be brought out in sub-titles; but, in the main, the difficulties were overcome. The theme is familiar enough, but there is a certain freshness in the treatment that greatly benefits the picture. For instance, instead of the customary extravagant wife who deserts her husband in favor of another man, we have a wife who is willing to have it supposed that she is eloping, merely to facilitate a divorce, and all the while she is really faithful. Then, too, the man in imminent danger of figuring as co-respondent, is far removed from the conventional villain. He frankly loves Doris, yet is determined to maintain an honorable position, and is so magnanimous, in the bargain, that he contributes half of the money needed to keep the husband out of jail, after bank securities have been misappropriated.

Social ambition, thoughtless extravagance and the weakness of a man forced to live beyond his income, all figure in this very well acted drama of modern life, which, if not remarkable, is rather an improvement on the average offering of its type.

"The Parson of Panamint"

Dustin Farnum Is Starred in a Pallas Picture of Fine Quality —A Story with a Sympathetic Note.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WITHOUT casting any reflections on other productions of recent issue, it may be confidently asserted that it is some time since exhibitors have been offered a Pallas picture so thoroughly good in all respects as "The Parson of Panamint," written by Peter B. Kyne and directed by William D. Taylor, with Dustin Farnum in the title role. It scores on practically every point that contributes to a popular photoplay. There is a very human story, easily followed and interesting; the atmosphere of a western frontier town is caught to perfection, the characters are deftly drawn and in the leading role, that of a parson typifying muscular Christianity, we have Dustin Farnum, as virile and manly an actor as the screen possesses. It will be a cold audience, indeed, that does not applaud "The Parson of Panamint."

When the story opens there is nothing left of Panamint but heaps of rubbish, the remains of what was once a thriving town. Old "Chuckwalla Bill" tells the tale of the rise and fall of the community—how when he was elected mayor on a platform calling for a church, a schoolhouse and a jail, he went to San Francisco in search of a parson and returned with Philip Pharo, and how the hard-hitting preacher proceeded to introduce practical Christianity in Panamint. The liveliest place in town and the rendezvous of the most genuine people, is a combination dance hall and gambling house conducted by Bud Deming. The parson shocks his congregation when he refuses to treat Bud and his pals as irretrievably lost souls, and he horrifies his flock still more by playing roulette and winning the ownership of the place.

Finally the break comes and it finds Philip Pharo on the side of the reformed gamblers and drunkards. Expelled from the church, he uses the saloon for Sunday services and continues to be a helpful friend, until he sacrifices his life in saving the man who did most to injure his reputation. The fire scene in which Mr. Farnum climbs to the belfry of a burning church is highly spectacular; but the real appeal of the picture lies in the sound characterization and the adroit mingling of pathos, drama and comedy. Credit goes to Pomeroy Cannon and Howard Davies for natural acting, also to Winifred Kingston for her portrayal of "Buckskin Liz." The subtitles are always in keeping with the tone of the story.

"The Crimson Stain Mystery"

Ethel Grandin and Maurice Costello Featured in New Consolidated Serial Appearing on the Metro Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"THE Crimson Stain Mystery" is made of the material that insures the success of the serial film production, the chief essentials of which are the marvelous impossibilities that thrill the nerves and fire the imagination. The public are interested either in stories that are vividly realistic, or in those that are weirdly impossible, but which move consistently and boast of highly melodramatic situations. Coupled with this is artistic finish in staging, and competent players and types that fit the situations. Occasionally there must be a newness of theme.

Scene from "The Crimson Stain" (Consolidated).

In the present instance there is an impression that something new has been attacked. To be sure, we have had the man of mystery before, but in no instance that the reviewer can recollect have we had him with eyes that on occasion resolve themselves into veritable balls of fire on the screen, nor have we had the work of science constituted to develop genius in the subject treated go so far astray as to germinate gangs of criminals. We must admit that the subject is a tremendously strong one, and that handled by Albert Payson Terhune no tricks have been lost.

The foundation of the serial is an experiment upon which Dr. Burton Montrose, a scientist, has spent years of his life in studying out. The disappointing result of this experiment, as stated above, is the delight of one Pierre Le Rue, he of the eyes of the crimson stain, whose pleasure is to strangle, and rob, a ringleader in all sorts of outrages and crimes. Under his spell Montrose is forced to make use of his discovery to instil criminal instincts into the secret agents of La Rue.

The first two episodes are entitled, respectively, "The Brand of Satan" and "In the Power of the Demon." The featured members of the cast, a strong one by the way, are Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin. The serial is being directed by T. Hayes Hunter.

"Sporting Blood"

Interesting Fox Melodrama Full of the Atmosphere of the Race Track and With Exceptional Views of Running Horses.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

PERHAPS a race track picture in which the heroine is no innocent rosebud, but shows her "sporting blood" by an action somewhat questionable—in this case she bets herself against $10,000 that a famous horse will fail in a race—is closer to life and by so much the more acceptable. Her brother had been dabbling in race track bets with money borrowed, sub rosa, from his employer and was that much to the bad and likely to go to jail. The "man higher-up" had ruined the brother and tries to ruin the heroine, and it is with him she makes the bet.

She and her mother have a horse at home that looks exactly like the famous racer, and she and the hero, whose sister the "man higher-up" has actually ruined, switch horses. The villainess, a former favorite, but now cast off by the "man," dopes the supposed racer, making the heroine's victory doubly sure.

The theme of the picture is the woman's duping a villainous man by his own tricks. It has been skilfully worked up with qualifying circumstances to heighten the moral tone of the situations, and seemed markedly pleasing to the audience at the Academy of Music in New York City where it was shown.

Dorothy Bernard plays the heroine with her usual ability and has Glen White, as able an actor, opposite to her in the hero's role. The "man higher-up" is played by De Witt C. Jennings. The best things in the picture are the realistic and beautifully photographed personal touches, scenes and scraps of scenes, in which the supporting cast often carries away much credit; and with these must be included the sets and backgrounds, especially the race track views that are often fresh and truly interesting. It is a picture filled with good things. Bertram Bracken directed it.

"The Footlights of Fate"

V-L-S-E Feature from Book by Louis Joseph Vance, "Joan Thursday," with Mark MacDermott and Naomi Childers—Holds Well.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson

THE latest Blue Ribbon Vitagraph, made for the V. L. S. E. program and called "The Footlights of Fate," can safely be commended without reserve as a more than ordinarily interesting picture. It is just entertainment, merely a story told, but it keeps in pretty close to the true relationships of life and actual experience. It satisfies the spectator that it resembles reality. Yet the high quality hangs as much and perhaps more, on character delineation by the players as on the author's conception or the producer's arrangement. One sometimes, not often, wishes he could hear what the players are saying, and this is the picture's most noticeable weakness. One or two of the lesser characters don't really live at all times, or seem not to be when compared with the work of the others around them who are ringing true to life.

It is not a romantic love story, but that of a young woman of charming personality, played by Naomi Childers, who sacrifices love to art and becomes a great actress. It is taken from Vance's book, "Joan Thursday," and in the early scenes Joan, as a pretty shop girl, feels the sting of the city's curse and has to leave her job for the usual reason—a goatish floorwalker. Her father, played by William Shea, one its best characters, is a man of education brutalized by drink and gambling. She finds him not sympathetic. Trying for a chance on the stage she at first has to shiver in the breath of cold hard luck, but makes a friend in a young playwright (Mark MacDermott) who carries the part with his usual assurance of touch and pleasing presence. Another excellently played character is his aunt, who is stepmother to an heiress. The playwright loves this rich girl, but her millions keep him back and the villain runs away with her.

Joan is to fall into the clutches of this villain later till the final denouement frees her to continue her bright career, but in the meantime she has many trials and experiences that give us glimpses of stage life in New York. Also she has had to choose between the stage and a chance to marry the playwright.

Frederic Warde, the Thanhouser star, who is on tour, lecturing on the drama, has found Vermont an ideal location for scenes for "The Vicar of Wakefield," which will be Mr. Warde's next Thanhouser picture.

"A Lesson in Labor"

Two-Reel Lubin Melodrama Written by Robert E. Rinehart and Directed by Paul Powell.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A STRUGGLE between capital and labor is the foundation of this two-reel photoplay; but the author has seen fit to work out his theme in a highly improbable manner. This does not mean that the picture is not interesting. In place of being treated realistically, however, "A Lesson in Labor" wanders off into the field of romantic adventure and asks the spectator to accept a situation that never happened in real life. John Seward, a young mill owner, on the death of his father, issues an order that all employes over fifty years of age must be discharged. Terry Walsh, the son of one of the men so affected and himself an employe of the mills, determines to get even with Seward. The mill owner is engaged to a wealthy young woman and invites her and her mother for a cruise on his yacht. Walsh has obtained a position on the boat. He drugs Seward, tosses him into a small boat, puts the fiancee in with him, lowers the boat (unaided, while the yacht is in motion), lands on a deserted island, and forces his employer to do the physical labor for the party—after giving him a good beating. The young man learns his lesson, forgives his task master, takes back his old hands and earns the respect of his best girl

Everything that takes place on the yacht and the island is merely the invention of the author, but this does not detract from the moral effect of the situation. When Walsh knocks his boss down and then gives him a dose of his own medicine, the treatment is obviously the correct one, and we are ready to applaud the spirit of the scene, if not the means by which it is brought to pass. The picture is competently acted by L. C. Shumway, Velma Whitman, George Routh, Adelaide Bronti, Melvin Mayo and Sydney Hayes.

The direction is open to criticism at several points.

"The Mishaps of Musty Suffer"

Harry Watson, Jr., Performs Many Amazing and Amusing Stunts in the First Three Comedies of the Second Series Filmed by George Kleine.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

AND now comes Harry Watson, Jr., in the second series of "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," to entertain us under the guidance of Director Louis Myll in a somewhat different type of comedy that makes us laugh whether we will it or not, and afterwards makes us rub our eyes to find out why we did laugh. Indeed, these "whirls" of Musty Suffer defy analysis, for, like soap bubbles, they vanish when subjected to it.

"Blow Your Horn" is the title of the first comedy, and we first catch sight of "Musty" taking an old bicycle out of a cartful of scrap-junk. This "bike" has a comical look about it that stamps it at once as being a fit companion for "Musty" in his pranks. He is looking out for a job, and he stops his wobbly machine in front of an office which bears the sign "Boy Wanted."

Here he is given a job as messenger boy by the cadaverous old owner, and appears in the discharge of several assignments that excite the mirth of the spectator. "Musty" has nobody at home in his upper story, so on his first mission we see him saw his way out of a room with a bundle of laths, because he hasn't the sense to see that they can be taken through the door sidewise, though not lengthwise. On his second trip he is kind enough, while on his way, to take charge of a perambulator for a pretty nurse who spies a policeman nearby, and is much surprised when a husky, bearded patient raises his head from under the sun-hood and yells "Rock me you big bum, rock me." "Musty" does "rock" him—with good-sized boulders that he finds on the road!

The final incident in "Blow Your Horn" is a triangular affair, as "Musty" and two other boys—bound together apparently in Siamese-twin fashion—are sent out from the office to carry pieces of heavy scantling from a lumber yard to some other point. They come in contact with a policeman on the way, are pursued by him and fall over a precipice, at the bottom of which we see them slowly recovering, without a bone being broken! Miss Della Connor appears in this "whirl" as "the lady fair."

"While You Wait" is No. 2 of this second series of George Kleine comedies. "Musty" is on the look-out for a job and haunts an employment agency, the manager of which is impersonated by the old favorite, H. H. McCollom. This is a very funny and most ingenious comedy. Where Director Myll gets his very original ideas is a mystery. They might come from Nightmareland, so strange are they.

In this whirl "Musty" fills the positions of the maid, butler and gardener in the same house, all at the same time. You can guess the lightning changes he is obliged to make, the great difficulties he must overcome, and the fun of it all. It ends in a scene that would do justice to bedlam for conception.

"Showing Some Speed" is the third of the new series. "Musty" has returned to his work as a messenger boy. One of his easy tasks is to carry a cooking stove to a certain home. When he arrives at the address he finds the door locked and everybody out. Nowise dismayed, he pulls up the lower sash of one of the windows—all the time nursing the stove as if setting it down would make it catch a cold—and enters. Still holding the precious stove to his breast, he unlocks the door, passes out of the window, enters through the door and places the stove in the room. Then he locks the door, wipes his grimy hands on the lace curtains of the sitting room and exits through the window, which he then carefully closes.

After this feat he shows great weariness on getting back to the office. He lies down on the bench and sinks into slumber so deep that bell and steam whistle fail to awake him, and it is only when the manager rains down on his head a deluge of tinware and other high-sounding articles that he comes back to workland. But the shock has bent him double and he is obliged to get straightened out in a carpenter's shop, where he is stretched as if on an inquisition table.

The close of this whirl is a scream. "Musty," head first, is used as a battering ram by gamblers, who mistake him for a stranger who has just cheated them at cards. We see them drive him through a brick wall and throw him head foremost through the breach. But "Musty," much disfigured, still shows up, ready to appear in Whirl No. 4.

The release of "Blow Your Horn" will be made early in September.

"Rolling Stones"

Famous Players Adaptation of Selwyn Story Marked by Unusual Comedy Touches—A Good Picture.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE are distinct comedy touches in "Rolling Stones" as it comes to us in the adaptation by the Famous Players of the stage success of Edgar Selwyn. In the production Del Henderson makes his Paramount debut as a director and Marguerite Courtot her Paramount entrance as a leading player. Mr. Henderson comes from the Keystone studio, where for a couple of years he has been guiding the making of comedies. That in that length of time he should have absorbed the atmosphere of that hilarious institution is a natural supposition. Likewise, too, is it perfectly natural to assume that in directing a dramatic subject his mind, trained in comedy channels, is quick to grasp those opportunities for a short, sharp chuckle that escape the observation of men accustomed to working along more sombre lines. That just this has happened in the making of "Rolling Stones" is apparent to even the casual observer. The result is more than worth while; it is a novelty, and one the development of which, if its working out be permitted, should bring something distinctly new to the screen.

for type as well as for ability. Miss Courtot is opposite him as Norma Noggs, the daughter of the boarding-house keeper. Denman Maley is Buck Rider, the crooked adviser of Dave. Alan Hale is Braden, the beneficiary with Norma of the candy-maker's will. Gretchen Hartman is Mrs. Braden. W. J. Butler, veteran player, is Mr. Branigan, the landlord, and Ida Fitzhugh is Mrs. Branigan. Russell Bassett is the old lawyer. Then there are the two "hard customers" seated by the side of Dave—Kid Broad and Tammany Young. They are convincing enough to please or to disturb any one.

"Rolling Stones" is a fast moving story of the underworld and of ordinary honest everyday human beings. "High life" it touches not; its absence is unnoted. The tale is of the reclamation of a young man who goes to the end of his rope, takes advice that is not wholesome, comes under the spell of a good young woman, and at the vital moment elects to travel the right road. There are situations containing a wide variety of elements—of straight drama, of melodrama and of comedy. The melodramatic features stand out—for instance, the battle in the candy factory and the chase over the roofs. And on the dramatic side there is nothing better than the situation covered by the moment Dave hands his week's pay to his ex-pal Buck and bids him make his escape.

THE KALEM COMPANY remains true to its policy of making each episode of a picture series independent of what has gone before, though the same central characters are introduced. planatory title; no need, in fact, for more than the customary presentation of the characters, after which the plot advances with all the necessary clarity and speed.

Given the right sort of a scenario, and he has it here. Director James W. Horne knows how to bring a melodrama to the screen without losing any of the possible thrills. Even for a picture actress trained in an exacting school, Marin Sais is an extraordinary equestrienne. She gallops through this picture with all the assurance of a circus rider, and most of the men in the cast would have no difficulty in qualifying as cowboys. By the very nature of the story, reckless riding becomes an important factor in creating thrills. Barbara is captured by the "unchained tigers"—a picturesque title for convicts escaped from jail—and carried far into the wilderness, while her father and a company of soldiers follow the trail left by the fleeing band. Being mounted on cowboys' horses, the convicts lead their pursuers a merry chase before they are caught.

The swift scenes, replete with action, are just the thing for a melodrama of this description, whereas the playing of Miss Sais, True Boardman and Frank Jonasson merits favorable comment.

"Tangled by Telephone."

Ivy Close and Arthur Albertson carry this farce-comedy through in high spirits, the situations resulting from a young dentist's neglect of professional duties after an office telephone makes communication with his devoted bride all too easy. First one patient, then another is deserted at a critical moment of treatment, and as matters go from bad to worse there is no end of a rumpus toward the close of the reel. Robert Ellis is responsible for the script and the production, which make first rate entertainment.

"The Secret of the Box Car."

Well up to the standard so long maintained in the "Hazards of Helen" pictures, the latest production by James Davis, from a scenario by E. W. Matlack, is worth viewing. The story opens with a bank robbery and it is not long before the robbers, in making off with their loot, reach Lone Point, where the intrepid girl operator is ever on the watch. After a series of struggles in, or on top of moving freight cars, Helen effects the capture of the fugitives.

"The Common Law" Finished.

"The Common Law," was finished this week and the work of assembling and cutting the film has begun. Director General Albert Capellani and his company of noted players "shot" the closing exterior scenes on a location near Morristown, N. J., Monday and Tuesday.

FROM the title of this five-part play one might suppose that it was one dealing with interesting questions of psychology and with social problems. There are scenes in the play which would encourage such a hope but they are few in number and have no direct bearing on the main theme of the story. Indeed, the plot is frankly melodramatic and there is no attempt at any time to rise above this level. Many of the distinguishing characteristics of the Lasky school of features are in evidence such as selfless atmosphere, well considered details and photography. Viewed as a melodrama it is entitled to favorable consideration. It is clear, it rewards virtue and punishes villainy. As in all melodramas, characterisation plays a minor part. The cast in the story plays its part far better than one would expect in an ordinary melodrama. Like every good melodrama this film play shrivels up under a logical analysis. There are improbabilities right on the surface and many more just a little below the surface. Audiences that enjoy melodrama, plus excellent settings and photography, will not regret seeing this latest Lasky production.

ally without fault, and even boasts a substantial wholesomeness, it is technically and dramatically speaking unusually poor.

The picture is based on a story by Elwood D. Hemming, which follows the fortunes of a fascinating chorus girl into the West, where, at a way station, she misses her train, is offered the hospitality of the home of Robert Goodman, evidently owner of a sheep ranch, and his mother; and later, when a formal letter of discharge reaches her from her manager, she becomes one of the Goodman family, and eventually the wife of Robert. Many feet of film are taken up with scenes of individual beauty on the sheep ranch, and the final turn in the tale comes when Robert is summoned by a New York drug company for the purpose of buying his formula for curing sheep of a sickness contracted through eating a certain poisonous weed. At this point of the story the mother of Robert falls and injures herself, making it necessary for his wife to precede him to New York, where she falls in with old companions. Later in the home of a certain clubman, who has sought to win the chorus girl of other days, known in her set as "the unattainable," Robert is shot. By a transfusion of blood from his wife his life is saved. The wife at death's door from loss of blood is miraculously saved through seeing her husband, who clambers out of his sick bed to rush to hers.

"His Rival"

In Which Sidney Drew Tires of Being the Lesser Dog, But Finds Escape Impossible.

THE Drew comedy to be released on the Metro program on August 21 is "His Rival," by Ida Brunner. It is a typical "parlor comedy" of the class and of the quality made famous by the player who by common consent is accorded a screen niche all to himself.

Mr. Drew is seen struggling against fate in the form of a black Pomeranian seemingly the sole concern and nearly the sole object of the affections of the mistress of the house. The Pomeranian here appears professionally as Gwendolyn, but in private life she is known to a host of friends as Metro and acknowledges only the commands of her mistress, Mrs. Dick Rowland.

The man of the house suffers much as with jealous eye he observes the endearments lavished on Gwendolyn. When asked to stop at the drug store and order some "meddle" for Gwendolyn he accepts the opportunity to incorporate in the homegoing package a mess of poison. The discovery of the death-dealing element throws the mistress into hysterics. A telephone call brings the mere male of the house to the rescue. He submits to taking Gwendolyn for a walk and promptly proceeds to lose her. He finds the dog awaiting him on the stoop. Then he gives the animal away. He breaks the sad news to "mother" amid the flow of so many barrels of tears that the mistress concludes a crime has been committed. Her advertised reward of a hundred dollars brings the dog home. The "finder" on sizing up the situation extends his hand to the "head" of the house and receives a bonus for his silence.

We leave Gwendolyn secure in her position and with the putative master of the domicile relegated to the third line of trenches.

"The Pretenders"

Rolfe Photoplays Produces Interesting Five-Part Melodrama in Which Paul Gordon and Emmy Wehlen are Featured.

THE Metro Pictures Corporation released on August 21 "The Pretenders" in five parts. The subject is from the studio of Rolfe Photoplays. At the head of the cast is Emmy Wehlen, but the honors of the performance seem easily to fall to Paul Gordon, who plays opposite Miss Wehlen. The story is an interesting one from the point of dramatic Pollock and Rennold Wolf. The direction is by George D. Baker, which is to say that it is skillfully done. The tale is well hooked up.

Miss Wehlen has the role of Helen Pettingill, the daughter of a farmer who strikes oil and who brings her and her mother, socially ambitious, to the city. Pettingill on a "toot" brings home with him a chauffeur, Stanwood, a second son of an earl earning his own living in America. In self-defense the father introduces his friend as the Count Terfitte. Later there comes an impostor who poses as the Earl of Bradford, which happens to be the title of the father of Stanwood. Many things happen, a number of them exciting, before the police uncover the pre-tenders and Stanwood is declared the owner of the title of Earl of Bradford, through the death of his father and brother.

Mr. Gordon has a fine role, that of the chauffeur who needs no coaching in society's ways. By his poise, his judgment and skillful interpretation he remains the center of interest through the course of the story. Charles Eldridge as Pettingill gives a finished performance—a good actor and a good part. William Davidson is the false earl. Harry Neville is Dugan, a crooked employe. Then there is an unnamed detective who looks and acts his part.

"The Pretenders" is an interesting picture and should contribute a good number to the Metro program.

ductions is that "The Heart of a Child" was enacted by an English cast and produced in or near London, while "The Narrow Path" pictures the life story of an East Side girl and has American settings throughout.

Violet Mersereau does appealing work in the part of Bessie Allen, daughter of poor and unfortunate parents. She dances in the crowded streets, to the delight of the whole neighborhood. Her father and mother both die violent deaths and she goes on to live with two orphan friends. Then comes an accident, which brings her to the hospital and wins the interest of Mrs. Latham and the wealthy young man whom she is later to wed.

The story is an entertaining one and well worked out, though it will not strike observers who witnessed its predecessor as fresh in plot. There is a little variation in the latter scenes, some of which are taken at Asbury Park.

Niles Welsh plays the hero, a rich young man named Shirley Martin, who at first desires to toy with the girl and later learns to love her. Others in the cast are William J. Welsh, Nellie Slattery, Anthony Merlo and Clara Beyers.

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Features Flora Parker De Haven in Story of Life's Tribulations.

happier conditions. Eugene B. Lewis and F. McGrew Willis wrote and adapted the story and Otis Turner directed the production.

It will occur to many observers that the scenes move with a certain abruptness and lack of continuity. This is perhaps accounted for by the two stories moving along simultaneously, each demanding about equal interest. Because of this divided state of things there is a lack of dramatic effect at times. At the same time many of the incidents are unusual in themselves. The death of the girl's father, while not an essential feature, is shown in a realistic manner.

Perhaps the best feature in a pictorial way are the rural scenes, taken on a big ranch. The glimpses of vast herds of cattle and hayfields under cultivation make a good background for this end of the production.

Flora Parker De Haven plays the daughter of the drunkard in a satisfactory way and Jack Mulhall is pleasing as the dissipated youth who reforms and weds the girl. The signing of the pledge and other features are handled with a certain melodramatic sentimentality. The production as a whole is not unusual, but has some elements of strength.

Triangle Program

"Gretchen the Greenhorn," Five-Reel Fine Arts by Bernard McConville and "The Thoroughbred," Five Reel Ince by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"GRETCHEN THE GREENHORN" might have been written with the requirements of the Fine-Arts Company in mind, but it rises above the mere vehicle for a star into realms of true story interest, the only thing that will hold an intelligent audience through five reels. It is well constructed and well handled, all the character being accorded natural opportunity. It is a complete and well-rounded production, each role nicely typed and acted, but all this adds to the praise which will be accorded Miss Dorothy Gish for her charming performance. An actress is not a star who has to have a play written for her—she is simply an attractive young person who does not know how to act. Miss Dorothy comes much nearer being a star in a well-balanced comedy like "Gretchen" than she would in a mere vehicle. She does wonders with her part, showing maturity in her impersonation and a new little sweetness all her own.

She is Gretchen, bright, hopeful, radiating goodness in a gentle and girlish way, a pure feminine type. She comes from the old country to join her father, a skilled and optimistic engraver, and she shares his fortunes and misfortunes with fortitude. He becomes the innocent instrument of a counterfeiting gang, while his daughter falls in love with a charming young Italian. These three are drawn, one by one, into a net spread by the counterfeiters and the engraver and Gretchen decoyed aboard a mysterious ship, where the spurious bills are made. Their rescue is made possible by keen-eyed little children they have helped, and so the story finds its way through melodramatic adventure to a graceful and happy conclusion.

"The Thoroughbred."

"The Thoroughbred" brings Frank Keenan new opportunity to display his varied talents, and he makes an interesting old Southern gentleman of the horse-racing type, but Gardner Sullivan has barely maintained his own as a consistently good author of screen stories. The exact material used has been employed over and over again until the element of suspense is almost entirely eliminated. We know in advance, where there is a racing horse and a track involved, that the race will bring financial relief in an emergency, in this case to lift the time-honored mortgage. The only uncertainty removed, why sit through five reels to see the hero embrace the heroine? He is in this case a young clergyman who has so successfully preached against horse racing as an incentive to gambling that he has influenced the passage of a bill against the sport which would not have been passed had the sport been kept clean. The same young clergyman secretly advances money to enable the old gentleman to win a big contest and wins the daughter as his reward. The best thing that can be said of the story is that it is picturesquely told.

"Strongheart" and "The Wedding Gown" Scheduled for Reissue—Pictures in Three and Two Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ON the stage, Robert Edeson will always be associated with the character of Strongheart; in the screen version of the once popular play, the role of the Indian is filled by Henry Walthall, a member of the Biograph company when this picture was made. He gives a telling performance in a three-reel production that should draw well on the General Film program. "Strongheart" is one of the few stories of college life that rings true. It has atmosphere in abundance and there is enough variety of characterization among the members of the football team, in danger of being defeated in the crucial game because the signals have been disclosed to the opposing players. The concluding reel contains some effective drama, whereas the preceding reels are interesting in picturing the life as it is supposed to be enjoyed by college athletes.

The cast reads almost like the roster of the Biograph company of bygone days. We have Blanche Sweet, Lionel Barrymore, Alan Hale, Gertrude Robinson, Antonio Mareno and others; but there is never any question about who is the star of the production. Mr. Walthall makes a most sympathetic person of Strongheart. He assumes the appearance and manner of an educated Indian without being guilty of exaggerations, and in the final scenes, played with Miss Sweet, he is notably successful in expressing feeling.

Another biograph reissue announced for the latter part of September is "The Wedding Gown," a two-reel drama in which the plot is simple and in which the characters are finely appealing. It is a study of rural temperament, beautifully acted by Gertrude Robinson, Marshal Neilan and Kate Bruce. As the time approaches for the marriage of a pair of youthful country lovers, the mother of the prospective bride prepares a wedding gown, intending to give it to the girl as a surprise. But while visiting an aunt in the city, the young woman concludes to marry a wealthier man, a purpose that probably would have been carried through had not a sight of the gown made by her mother awakened true feelings. She returns to her country lover.

NEW DATE FOR GRIFFITH OPENING.

Positive announcement has been made in the offices of D. W. Griffith that the date for the New York opening of the new Griffith production of "Intolerance" at the Liberty theater will take place on Tuesday night, September 5. The original intention, as previously announced, was to open on August 22, but it was found that owing to delayed orders the theater cannot be made ready until the first week in September. Mr. Griffith is planning extensive improvements in the Liberty theater, with a view of introducing many innovations in the way of advanced projection for his forthcoming spectacle. The manufacturing plants cannot deliver the mechanical appliances before the last week in August.

One of the two creators of Fantomas, the master of crime, has been visiting in America. Marcel Allian, who wrote the great French detective novels in collaboration with Pierre Souvestre, has just sailed for France after seeing the entire "Fantomas" series, as the pictures will be released by Gaumont through Mutual. While he had seen them when they were made at the Paris studios, he lost none of his enthusiasm for them when he saw them edited for the American market.

W. Christy Cabanne Joins Metro

W. CHRISTY CABANNE, for seven years associate director with D. W. Griffith, has signed a long time contract with the Metro Pictures Corporation. His first work on the Metro program will be the direction of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in their new serial, as yet unnamed, which will be released by Metro in fourteen episodes in two reels each. Director Cabanne, who is in Los Angeles, will leave for the East immediately, and will begin work on the first Bushman-Bayne feature the early part of September.

W. Christy Cabanne.

Director Cabanne, like D. W. Griffith, is still a comparatively young man, but is dean of the producers associated with Griffith. Mr. Cabanne produced the first Mutual masterpicture, "The Great Leap." He was also selected to make the first Triangle feature, "The Lamb," with Douglas Fairbanks in the stellar role. This was Mr. Fairbanks' debut in motion pictures.

Director Cabanne was born in 1888, and was educated at St. Rose Academy and the Culver Military School, at Culver Lake, Ind. He went into motion picture work in 1910, playing leading roles with the old Biograph company. Subsequently he appeared with the Majestic, and assisted in the direction of pictures there. From the Majestic he joined the Fine Arts forces, and afterwards went with Director Griffith to Triangle.

Among some of the best known features produced under the direction of Mr. Cabanne are "The Great Leap," "The Outlaw's Revenge," "The Absentee," "Lost House," "Enoch Arden," "The Martyr of the Alamo," "Double Trouble," "The Failure," and others.

At the conclusion of the Bushman-Bayne serial Director Cabanne will produce five part Metro features in which this stellar combination will be starred. Mr. Cabanne is now working in Los Angeles on the final scenes of "Diana of the Follies," in which Lillian Gish is starred.

E. V. MORRISON WITH SHERRY'S EXCHANGE.

The latest move of Wm. L. Sherry in carrying out the general Paramount plan of co-operation and advertising for the Paramount houses is the installation of a brand new department for the express purpose of conducting local advertising campaigns centered about each theater. E. V. Morrison, long known to the trade through publicity and advertising work, but best known to the exhibitor as originator of the business report system known as Manager's Screen Reports, has been engaged to conduct this department.

The establishment of the new department is in keeping with the Paramount's recent inaugural of local advertising managers for each exchange. Mr. Morrison's position is a new one and will supplement the general advertising done by the Paramount Company and the subsidiary companies releasing through the Paramount. His duties will be those of co-operating with the exhibitor in all local advertising work and bringing the fruits of the general advertising to bear right down on the individual house to the greatest extent possible as well as creating new press material to suit local conditions.

Cutting Down Expenses.

EVIDENTLY the high cost of white paper is making itself felt. Many programs have been discontinued and others have been reduced. Paper is going up all the time and only this week we paid 13½ cents for a standard paper that for years sold for ten and the bill was rubber-stamped with a statement that the prices were subject to change without notice. Another increase is promised in the fall. Any increase in any expense hits hard on a business where the takings are comparatively small. To help make matters worse, the infantile paralysis scourge is spreading and where it strikes it hits hard on the amuesment business. It is not alone that the children are barred, but parents fear to expose themselves to a contagion that they may take home to their children. But because business is bad is only another reason why increased effort should be made to improve that condition. It is no time to stop advertising, but the very time to advertise more and to advertise more intelligently. If you feel that you cannot afford to keep your house program going, and you know that it has done your business good, sit down and think things over. Perhaps you already have about all the foreign advertising the program can possibly stand. Then you cannot take in more advertising, but can you get more for what you are already carrying? If yours is a good vehicle for your business it is a good vehicle for the neighborhood business; better in many ways than the daily paper and worth more than the daily paper rate. Talk it over with your trade advertisers. Tell them you must drop the issue unless they help you meet the increased cost. This should not mean more than another ten cents an inch a week and most advertisers, if your program does them any good, will be willing to pay the increased cost knowing that it is a matter of real importance and not merely a device to get more money out of them. If your program is such that it does not pay either you or the outsider, make the program better. As a rule the fault does not lie with the program idea but with the program that is produced. It is not sufficient merely to get out a program. It must be a good one; one that people want to see. There are certain publications that we would ask for were we cut off the list. We like to see them each week. It is merely a matter of knowing how, and knowing how is merely studying the needs of the patrons and catering to that. The best way to cut down expense is to increase the revenue, then the expense pro rates at a smaller percentage and you have really cut it down.

Nomenclature Note.

William Lord Wright of the Selig Publicity staff signs himself "Bill, Lord Wright." That comma makes a heap of difference to anyone who notices it. Bill Waltmasons a little in the last Paste Pot and Shears but some of his feet limp, but the same thing is now and then noticeable when he cuts the lines into lengths. Bill is not wholly a poet even if he does wear the right sort of a tie.

Not the Way.

The Lyceum, Monticello, N. Y., has tried to solve its binding problem by not binding at all instead of side stitching. This is not quite the way out. But the paper is read no matter what form it comes out in for it is solid meat. We wish we had space for a recent editorial article, but it would take more than a half page and half pages are scarce. In substance it takes the patron by the hand and goes over the entire situation with him, leading off with this paragraph:

> Isn't it about time for us to come to a showdown on this matter of amusement service? We think it is. For the intelligent public the time has passed when pictures were pictures regardless of subject, cast, photography or projection. Motion pictures today occupy much the same commercial position that any other commodities do. You can be just as completely gold-bricked in your motion picture entertainment as anywhere else, but—if the shoeman sells you a bad pair of shoes you never go back for a little more of the same; if your clothier works off a bum suit on you, in the future you trade elsewhere. Why don't you apply the same rule to your amusement purchases?

With an intelligence that many if not most manufacturers lack, it points out that with a poor script only a poor play can result. Then it argues that production must be good, that all contributing factors must be good and then gets down to the real issue with the statement that a bonehead exhibitor with poor projection can set all this at naught. It does not suggest the identity of the bonehead exhibitor, but leaves that to be inferred and goes on to show that the Lyceum program it up to date. It takes the New York papers of the previous week, tells the films showing at the Broadway houses at fancy prices and points out that much of the material is booked at the Lyceum, where it will be shown with equal care for a ten cent price against a "dollar down" scale. There is nothing vicious about the article, no suggestion that the competitor at whom the story is aimed is not in their class. The opposition is not mentioned. They tell what good pictures are and why good pictures can be made bad. They give facts in clearly defined phrases and leave the reader to judge for himself. Some years ago Mr. Guimond wrote us that he had the town to himself and was preparing then against the inevitable opposition by giving the best show he could get. Now that he does face opposition, he does clean fighting. He makes his eight sheet work long and hard for the house and yet he keeps it dignified.

And here is another paragraph, this time from the editorial column. It is a good argument against the coupon ticket, though there are arguments as good in favor of the combination. If you copy forget that two-dollar price. It was blown into perdition even before the Triangle opened its two-dollar houses:

> We feel compelled to state to our good patrons that we do not offer "as an inducement" twelve tickets for a dollar, or even eleven. We are showing you 25-cent pictures for 10 cents, NOT 5-cent pictures for 8 cents. Facts are facts and when we say we have the highest-priced and best program obtainable we only state a fact that will be substantiated by anyone acquainted with the motion picture business. The Lyceum program is shown in all the largest theaters in New York and other Metropolitan centers at prices ranging from 25 cents to $2. The Strand, Rialto, Triangle of Brooklyn, Academy of Music—in fact, all of the biggest theaters catering to the motion picture public—show Paramount, Triangle and Fox pictures. If a saving of 2 cents appeals to a motion picture patron more than high quality in program and projection the Lyceum is really not the place to bring this patronage. Two cents will buy a picture of George Washington with gumstickum on the back, but it wont purchase much of anything else. Instead of reducing prices why not give stamps as souvenirs?

Personally we like the coupon ticket idea on the general argument that people who have a book of tickets will use them up faster than if they had to plank down the admission in cash each time, but we aim to give material for both sides of an argument, and this is good material for the antis.

Into the Papers.

Lee L. Goldberg, of the Mary Anderson, Louisville, Ky., has moved his eight-page program over into the photoplay page of the Courier-Journal. Instead of the house program he has been running, he takes a four-column space each Sunday and runs the paper there. R. B. Wilby, when he was in Selma, turned to the daily paper when he stopped the Academian, but if we remember correctly he got the space in return for the editorial work, and the scheme did not pan out well, as he was handicapped to some extent. In a place the size of Louisville and with a house that makes a more than local appeal (and the Mary Anderson is one of the real theaters), perhaps the Sunday issue is a better place, but for a locality theater or even for a larger venture, there is an intimacy about the house program that does not carry over into the Sunday paper. And on the other hand this move permits the house to monopolize what is really a general photoplay page, since it takes half the space. Interest in the department is increased by the offer of two tickets to all who send in material that is used in the

The sentiment is excellent, but the lady author is no poetess.

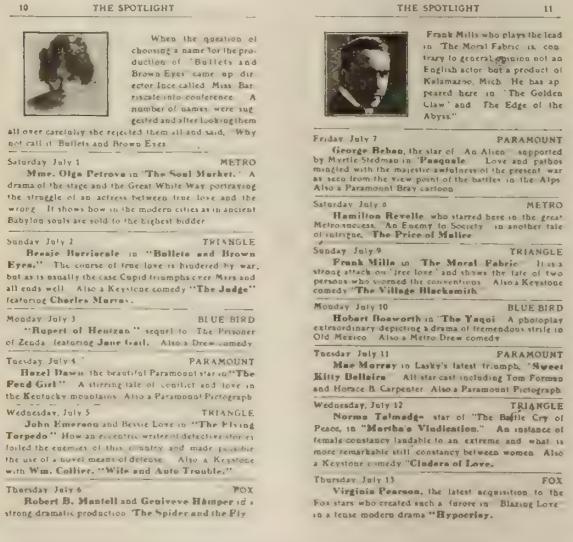
We will be obliged to Mr. Goldberg if he will tell us how the return shows up. Does this form of publicity show a better return on the investment than the house program?

Changing the Calendar.

Monday is generally one of the worst days of the week, and we cannot imagine why Jay Emanuel, of the Ridge Avenue, Philadelphia, permitted his printer to wish two Mondays on him only a day apart, but two recent pieces of billing read: "Monday, July 15th," and "Monday, July 17th." It would be better business to turn a Monday into a Saturday instead of making a Saturday into a Monday. And the printer has too much Old English type.

Another Spotlight.

Spotlight seems to be a favorite name for house publications, and it is the title adopted by Clayton L. Matson, of the Orpheum, Fort Madison, Iowa. The first number is just to hand and is a sightly offering, sixteen pages and colored cover, 3¾ by 7 inches. The first issue is called the "Blanche Sweet Number," suggesting the dedication of each issue to some favorite player whose likeness appears on the front, with a brief history as the leading story. The program runs for the month and the second half of the issue is given to the itemized program, a space at the top carrying a cut of some player to lead the reader over to these pages. This is not new, but it is an always good device. The



10 THE SPOTLIGHT

When the question of choosing a name for the production of "Bullets and Brown Eyes" came up director Ince called Miss Barriscale into conference. A number of names were suggested and after looking them all over carefully she rejected them all and said, "Why not call it 'Bullets and Brown Eyes.'"

Saturday July 1 METRO
Mme. Olga Petrova in "The Soul Market." A drama of the stage and the Great White Way portraying the struggle of an actress between true love and the wrong. It shows how in the modern cities as in ancient Babylon souls are sold to the highest bidder layout is suggested by the reproduced pages. Where the program runs a full month it will be better to use the Ruffner program in the middle pages. This is a program that takes in the double page as one and lists each attraction in a line, giving the date, the day, the title, the making company and the star. Generally it is set in a six or eight point, according to the space. Here it would have to be a six point, but this is plenty large enough. Where possible, the titles should be set in full face and the stars in italics. This will eat up two pages, but it will be space well spent. In general the program is very complete, with a list of musical selections for the month, a general time table that stands good unless changed in the daily advertisement, bits about the players, some tactful allusions to the excellencies of the Orpheum and a very genial greeting editorial. Mr. Matson can write as though he liked to, because he has a message, and he can make that front page editorial the most useful part of the publication if he follows this greeting with house talk in the same cordial and natural strain. But three pages of the twenty-four are given to the outside advertising, front and back inside cover, and page fifteen, and the back cover page is reserved for the house. The initial issue carries this on the back cover page:

Presenting Popular Players and Pleasing Pictures to Particular Patrons.

If the printer has any poster type in his cases he might try a two or three-inch condensed wood "P" to cover all that alliteration and serve as the single initial.

It is not generally known to exhibitors that wood type is sold by the letter and not in fonts. It has to be ordered some time in advance, as a rule, but if a letter is frequently used, the order can be sent in. Most printers have wood type catalogues and all can get them. The general charge runs about a cent a line per letter. A six-line (one inch) letter costs six cents. Wood type will not stand the abuse that metal will, but will last a long time with care, and often it will be found handy to order wood type for special uses. A very small font of metal type in the large sizes is costly, but in wood each letter is sold singly and if you order a one-inch Lyric you do not have to buy a font costing several dollars, but get it for thirty cents. Cut this out and make a special note of it against the time you may have special need. You can get a plain but distinctive wood letter; have your printer set up the name and give you a good black proof on white paper and with one of these as copy have the local electrotyper make a set of blocks giving this distinctive type in one two and three-column widths, that your house name may always be set in the same face. It will not cost much and it will be worth what it costs.

Getting back to Mr. Matson again, we wish he would put us on the permanent mailing list. We think he is going to do things.

Built His Own.

D. S. McEachern, of the Franklin, Ensley, Ala., sends in a photograph of his advertising and writes:

> I inclose a photograph of our combination cage and pantomime wagon, interchangeable panels. It is bright red, trimmed with gold and black, with yellow running gear. I built the body entire, carved the words "Franklin Theater" by hand, did all the painting and finishing, including the sign work. It is a strong, well-built wagon and will last for years. I use it every day except Sunday, advertising all features. Small bells are used to attract attention. Anyone with a fair knowledge of tools can build one.

That "anyone" is rather optimistic; but the idea is distinctly good whether you do it yourself or have it done for you. Billboards are good, but here is a perambulating billboard that can cover the entire town and in a small town or neighborhood the wagon is actually looked for in the course of time. You trim up the wagon to suit the pictures on progrem, but the wagon is always the same if the decorations is different.

And, by the way, what has become of S. A. Arnold, the first man to have a "cage" for a lion picture? If Mr. Arnold is still in the audience will he please make himself known?

Going Up.

The Cameraphone, Pitsburgh, after due trial, finds that it cannot make money with their present program and prices. They have put the admission up to fifteen cents in the evening with ten cents for the kiddies and they make announcement of the change in this model paragraph:

> After two months' trial with a large attendance we find that it is impossible for us to give the present quality show at 10 cents admission and pay expenses. We know that the Cameraphone audiences enjoy the Wolff Symphony Orchestra Music because we have had a larger summer business than ever before and we believe they would prefer paying the small additional price rather than forego the music. The picture business of East Liberty is largely confined to two hours in the evening and at ten cents admission we simply lose money even with crowded houses at night. Our afternoon prices will remain as usual, 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children.

The Cameraphone was for long a ten cent house, but with an argument like that we believe that few will complain. Paste the item up against the time you may desire to use it yourself.

Preparedness.

Watervliet, N. Y., had a preparedness parade the other day and the official program carries but one full-page advertisement—that of the Sans Souci, "The Strand of Watervliet." It is a nicely displayed program for the week, but on an issue of this sort, falling into many strange hands, it would have been better had part of the space been given to general talk of the house, perhaps an opening line on preparedness leading into the argument that the Sans Souci is prepared to entertain and telling why its film offerings are entertaining. One novelty is the use of a box at the side of each day; not for the date, but for the name of the brand, the dated day forming a part of the box with the title of the story. This is a new use for the side box and it is good where brands rather than stories are featured.

For a Mailing List.

F. H. Mertens, of the Imperial Airdome and Apollo and Regent theaters, Jersey City, sends in a program for the airdome. The usual cut on the front is replaced for holiday week with an American flag. It is a three by five four-page issue, with the program nicely lined up on the two middle pages. It gives merely the titles, but these are well displayed and the whole thing is neatly done. Mr. Mertens runs a get-acquainted coupon on the back for one issue and in regard to this he writes:

> The coupon on the back was not intended to draw out any extra crowd this week, as we are ordinarily opposed to price cutting, souvenirs or bargains of any kind. Our object was to get a mailing list, and though this is but the second day of the week we already have 150 good names so far. What do you think of the idea?

In substance the coupon reads:

LADIES' SPECIAL

"Get Acquainted" Coupon

When properly filled out this Coupon and 5 cents entitles the holder to one 10 cents ticket to any SHOW DURING WEEK OF JULY 3rd

Name .....

Address .....

This Coupon Will Not Be Accepted From Children

There are many ways of working up a mailing list, but most all of them are based on a coupon of some sort which must be filled in, and this get-acquainted coupon serves the double purpose of getting the names and drawing strangers who can be made into regulars. That they come—even at half price—shows them to be interested. The succeeding programs will do the work.

REVIEW

"Silks and Satins," in which the adorable Marguerite Clark is starred by the Famous Players Film Company, is a true and lovely reflection of every youthful dream that was ever dreamed. This delightful photoplay presents a romance that begins in the present, goes back to medieval times and returns to the present. one feature is run the make-up is easy. Where there are added reels they can be gotten in by cutting a little. The program type page is 3⅝x5¼, the page being 4½x6. The size is such that it goes into the regulation envelope with one fold. A matched make-up is better as a rule; half a page to each program, but it often happens that it is better to lay the space as shown to get in the most attractive matter. The front page carries the house cut and the last page the remainder of the program and the underline.

Unwise.

Frank W. Burke has taken charge of the Strand, Cedar Rapids, Ia., and also of the Strand News, the joint issue of the Strand and Palace. One of his first announcements is an invitation to the patrons to write criticisms of the plays. "Knocks as well as boosts will be printed," he announces, and he does not realize that he is encouraging unfavorable comment and teaching at least a part of his clientele to be hypercritical and to spread a feeling of dissatisiaction with the program. Criticism is appraisal, and not merely adverse expression, but it is almost impossible to make most persons realize this, and this includes a few critics as well. They feel that to criticize they must be blase and discontent and prove their superiority by having a supreme contempt for everything. It is a dangerous spirit to foster in a patron. The News is a little too much clip stuff, but the locals are not well done. This paragraph is given a box on the front page:

> Three women entered the Strand theater at 8 o'clock this morning. When questioned by the management as to what they wanted, the party said nothing but cast a parting glance at the canaries. Their names could not be learned.
> Later it was found out that they wished to procure the birds for a social function. Knowing that the management would not let them have them, they intended to kidnap the little songsters.
> "Some birds—are they not?"

This advertises the fact that they have canaries, but it does not sound convincing. It is unfair to comment on a first issue, and this is Mr. Burke's first, but the paragraph leaves a bad taste. It gives a suggestion of a disobliging management in that "knowing that the management would not let them have them." The item is not real and yet the suggestion of discourtesy is.

Something Different.

We have had page cuts and two-page cuts, but in a recent issue the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., gives us a page and a half cut, which is a novelty in make-up that should commend itself to others. Both the Third Street and its sister house, the Lehigh-Orpheum, gets out novel ideas and does not rest content with just one idea, but demands many new ones. This reduction can only suggest the effect, and it might be well to note that the effect will not be so good with a solid cut.

Another One Pager.

Volume 1, No. 1, of the Strand Weekly, Monon, Ind., has made its appearance. It is a one sheet, one side paper, 10 by 15 inches, with the program in the center and two columns of reading flanking it. Just before the issue the management put out a very exhaustive set of questions, and an incomplete return shows 256 for five reel features and four in favor of singles. On the question of reducing the cost of the film service and adding vaudeville four favored vaudeville and 148 preferred good pictures. Mary Pickford and Marguerite Clark broke even as feminine favorites, with Dustin Farnum as the favorite actor and William in second place (Joe seems to have been left at the post), with the others scattering. Only 93 voted for the pictographs, with 52 against. The Weekly promises to be intresting if the first issue is lived up to. What has become of all the old one pagers? We miss them.

Summing It Up.

The Victoria, Buffalo, gives this complete summary of what a picture entertainment is. It is worth copying:

> It takes more than a star to make a photoplay—the addition of a real story and a real producer does not assure success—
>
> It does take a star, a story, a producing organization and adequate support and, above all, a director.
>
> It takes more than a few chairs, a canvas screen and a machine to make a picture theater—it takes more than a fiddler or two, a piano and a mechanical organ to make good music—
>
> It takes an especially constructed house—an expertly built screen—the best mechanical equipment—the finest ventilation—perfect sanitation, acoustics and lighting—to make a modern picture theate..
> BUT—
>
> To make a complete show it takes a real star, playing a real story, produced by a real company and directed only by an expert—it takes a regular orchestra to interpret it and an especially constructed and not reconstructed motion picture in which to present it.
>
> There's only one answer

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Please Note.

PHOTOPLAYWRIGHTS who wish to order a copy of the new edition and who live some distance from New York will save considerable delay if they will address their orders to The Moving Picture World at the Chicago office, Schiller Building, or the Haas Building, Los Angeles, according to their location. Arrangements have been made to ship books from these branch offices the same day the order is received, and the delays incident to the parcels post will be avoided on the shorter haul, while there is also some gain in the time of travel of the order itself.

Keystone Comedy.

Here are two more gems from the Keystone studio where not all the comedies are filmed. One author writes:

> The enclosed plot is yours for only $3. Trusting that you will accept same for I wish to get it off my hands.

Another sends under separate cover a comedy and explains:

> I have the writing of the comedy divided into scenes. I figure that the camera will remain in one position throughout the scene, and this will be easier for the director. Each phrase that has quotation marks around it signifies that this remark shall be shown on the screen. For example, in scene six Fatty says, "Can you beat it?" These add humor to the comedy and help the audience to catch the spirit of the adventure.

Quite unnecessarily the author adds that he knows nothing of writing plays but has merely worked along his own lines—yet he expects to make a sale.

Contests.

A correspondent sends us a copy of a letter sent to the conductors of a script contest. In the opening paragraph he announces that he has a weakness for contests, wherefore he looked up the terms of the contest in question. Later he says:

> Suppose I do hit upon an original idea which is valuable. I have a slim chance of winning one of the larger prizes and you reserve the right to purchase at the market rate, which would appear to be less than ten dollars.

The writer seems to supply his own answer. If he can write really good stuff he is foolish to enter a contest where any script not winning a prize may be purchased at the company's valuation. He has a right to stay out of the contest, but not the right to require the contest to be remade to suit his ideas of what a contest should be. Contests are generally run to get advertising or to get good scripts at a fair average price. They are seldom purely charitable schemes, much as that fact may surprise the correspondent.

All of this has been repeatedly told in this department. Why not make a permanent note of it.

Form.

Three letters this week ask minutely about the form in which plays should be written, and a fourth inquirer sends in a new style which she is willing to adopt if it is a newer style than the form in which she learned to write.

There is no such thing as an exact and definite form. Any form is good provided that it is clear and simple. In the Third Edition of Technique of the Photoplay there are given photographic reproductions of several styles of form used by well-known writers and the student is advised to study these and select that which suits him best if he does not like the form used by the author. As a general thing numbers should be in the margin and not between scenes, merely because they are easier to locate and check up, but no editor is going to turn down a script because Roman instead of Arabic numerals are used or because sub-title is preferred to leader or the reverse. Some people write the so-called "backhand," and others practice the upright or slant writing. It does not follow that any in the three classes are poor writers because the inclination of their letters differs from the other forms. All three are proper so that the writing is clear. It is the same way with photoplay form. Anything is good that will enable you to tell your story and that form is best that enables you to present it most clearly. If you have mastered a certain style, it is absurd to lose your advantage in learning another style. Stick to that which you have. Give your time and your thought and your energy to the idea. That is what you have to offer. The form is merely the wrapper of the package and should be good form for the same reason that you pay more for an air tight box of soda crackers than you do for the bulk article.

A Poor Script.

Somewhat unusual is the request for a "very poor" script. This comes from a student who thinks that by comparing her action with the deficient scenes she can better her own work. We scarcely think so, but even were it possible to obtain poor scripts, there would be required so many styles to show all errors that the collection would become too great. If ever she gets access to any editorial office she can see them in infinite variety, btu perhaps a study of dont's may help others.

Perhaps the simplest form of a bad script is that in which the author mistakenly thinks that paragraphing means scenes. He writes something after this fashion.

> Jim, a poor but honest young man, loves a beautiful girl named Marie, whose parents are very wealthy and do not want him to marry her on that account, so they decide to get married anyway.
>
> One day she met him in the park and they went to a minister, who married them; then he took her home to his mother and they all started to live together.
>
> But Marie was not used to living with a poor family and she got very tired of sweeping the floors and riding on street cars and seeing her friends go by in automobiles, so one day she meets Henry, a rich man she used to love.
> Henry urges her to fly with him, and she does.

This sort of thing is generally sent in with the remark that it is properly divided into scenes, though generally that type of author writes it "devided."

Another form is too casual. It runs:

1—Bill is happy at home. His mother loves him very much.
2—One day he left home for the city.
3—He took the train.
4—He arrived in the city.
5—He went up the street.

This runs on and on. The suggestion for the action is there, but the specific action is lacking. This is more helpful than the other style, but it is too crude. An editor wants to see more than this, and he wants the action to have life. Sometimes he gets too much, as when an author says:

> 14—Room—This is a drawing room with lots of pictures on the wall and a piano and a center table with some chairs and an arm chair. There is a carpet on the floor and on this a fur rug. Billie, a young girl about seventeen years old, is seen sitting in one of the chairs when this scene commences. She is the same girl that we saw a picture of in Jack's room when he was there. She starts up as though she heard the door bell ring. Then she smiles and begins to powder her nose. Then her mother comes in and tells her Jack is here. She stands up and puts the powder rag away. Then Jack comes in and goes over to Billie and shakes hands. Then the mother smiles to show she approves of Jack and goes back to the kitchen. Then Jack looks around to make sure she is gone. Then he kisses her. Then Jack and Billie sit down and begin to talk.

That is all there is of that scene, and it is plenty. Compare that action with this:

> 14—Room—Billie on—hears bell ring—furtively powders her nose. Mother ushers Jack in—he greets her—Mother beams approval and exits—Jack looks after her—kisses Billie—they sit and chat.

This gives the director all he needs and suggests the full business of the scene. Thinking it over, it would seem that it is better to study good action than to laugh at poorly prepared stuff, but please remember that not all model scripts are good action.

Get the Idea.

When you sit down to your machine to write a story just remember that you are undertaking to entertain several million people. You would not go before an audience of fifty with an illy prepared speech. Why dash off your message to millions?

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 153.

What would you regard as an extreme practical distance from screen to back row of seats? Why?

Must Be Recoated.

Allen Jenkins, Roanoke, Va., asks:

> Is it possible to repaint (bronze) a gold fibre screen? If so, will you advise what method is pursued for a screen 9½ x 12½ feet. I have a gold fibre screen which is wiped and dusted each week, but seems dull. Use great care in cleaning it. The texture of the screen is in good condition and I would like to dispose of it if the surface can be put in good shape.

No, I would not advise you to attempt to refinish the screen surface. Presumably it is guaranteed for five years, and if it is not standing up it is up to the manufacturers to make that surface good. If they refuse to do it, then the only thing you can do is to send it to the manufacturers and pay them for recoating it. If you try it yourself I don't think the result will prove satisfactory.

Not a Nickel for Repairs.

New Mexico sends check for Handbook and question booklets and says:

> We are using a Simplex machine, which has given constant service for a year, during which time we have not expended one nickel for repairs, and on fairly good film it is noiseless. The mechanism is perfect. I am, however, unable to get a light that suits me, and have had the matter up with manufacturers of optical equipment, who have failed thus far to solve the problem to my satisfaction, therefore I am appealing to you. I am at present using a Gundlach-Manhattan projection lens of 4 inch E. F. Have a 3½-inch lens with which I have never been able to get a picture in focus all over. If the middle is sharp the edges are out, and vice versa. I have, however, discarded the shorter focal length lenses and am now out of the notion of using them. My present trouble is a little blue in the lower right-hand corner of the picture. With the condensers set as they are at present I can entirely remove it by pinching the spot down so that it merely touches the corners of the aperture plate, but this causes the corners of the picture to grow dark. I have had several sets of condensers, of which the following have proven best. A meniscus lens with the back surface having a curvature of one diopter, or 39.39 inches, and the front surface having a curvature of 6¾ diopters, a focal length of 5.8 inches. Subtracting the minus from the plus, we get 5¾ diopters as the focus, or 6.8 inches. With this lens I use a bi-convex in front, each side of which is 2¾ diopters, or 14.13 inches, making a total focal length of 5½ diopters, or 7.15 inches. I use a Simplex aperture shield, and with this equipment in place, the cone on the Type O lamphouse is in contact with the shield. The arc also burns within 3 inches of the meniscus lens. I get a great deal of light with this arrangement, but the little blue which I cannot eliminate. I have the following lenses which I have tried and found to be inferior. One bi-convex of 3 diopters each side, or 6½ inch focus; one plano 4¾ diopters, or 8.25 inches; one plano 5 diopters, or 7.85 inches. I have tried these in every known combination, and have been unable to eliminate the little speck of blue. We use a Hallberg motor generator and have a model booth.

As to the blue spot, have you tried moving your lamphouse further back? I think very likely that is your trouble, though why the spot should be in the lower right-hand corner instead of the center I really cannot say, unless your lens system is out of line, see Pages 113 to 146 of Handbook. Suppose you try moving the lamphouse and report results. If you cannot get it any further back, make it loose and set it back temporarily. You must understand, my brother, that the distance of the lamphouse from the aperture cuts a big figure. See Plate 4, Figure 45, Page 116, of your Handbook. Incidentally, I would suggest to operators that they draw out Figure 45 to full life size, on the wall of the operating room, if space can be found. Then by drawing a line parallel to the lower horizontal rule at the top edges of the condenser lens, they can use a straight edge and instantly find out the precise diameter of the light ray at any distance back of the aperture with the condenser lens in any given position.

For the information of the great mass of operators, I would say that diopter is a term opticians use when they speak of lens curvatures. I don't understand the application of the diopter very well myself, though maybe you can dope its meaning out from the figures given.

At Last.

At last the editor of this department has finally made up his mind as to precisely what is wanted, and what is practical to obtain, or very nearly obtain, in the way of a lens system for the projector. It sums up as follows: First: A condenser of standard E.F., preferably a meniscus-bi-convex, which will produce a spot 1½ inches in diameter, with the arc 3½ inches from the rear lens, and a distance of, say, 16 inches from the face of the front condenser to the film, with an aperture lens, which will parallel the light ray beyond the aperture. I have finally come to the conclusion that all this is practical, and have sat down carefully right square in the middle of the adoption of this particular thing, and it's going to take some mighty heavy artillery to budge me one iota from that position, the only disturbing element being the necessarily variable crater diameter.

Heretofore I have carefully refrained from expressing any fixed opinion as to what ought to be done, but have gradually been gathering together a mass of data on many things in connection with this matter, until the data thus secured has become sufficiently positive on all points to convince me that the scheme is at least approximately practical.

With this sort of arrangement only one focal length of condensers would be used; lamphouse would be placed a certain set distance from the aperture; the arc would be the minimum distance from the lens (this is the only point open to question. Some might advocate less than 3½ inches, but I don't believe it is practical under all conditions) and we would be enabled to use objectives of smaller diameter, thus bringing about the ideal condition from any and every point of view. The only added light loss, or cost, would be the cost of installation of the third lens and the small amount of energy absorbed by and reflected by it.

And there you are. I have pitched my tent, thrown up fortifications, trained machine guns, and am prepared to defend my position. Now get out your hammers, and get busy, remembering only that I am a little uncertain as to what we can do with the crater-diameter element.

McCook, Nebraska.

F. C. Smith, McCook, Neb., says:

> Am sending you a little device of my own manufacture; also want to ask a question or two. Have been operating for eight years, and would like to become a member of the I. A., joining some local near here. Omaha, however, seems to think I am out of their territory, and Denver refers me to some one in San Francisco, therefore, you see, I am up a tree. Maybe you can straighten me out. The little device enclosed is a guide roller for the top of the Power's Six A gate. The ones furnished with the machine do not stand up very well, so I got busy and made these; also a pair of grey cast iron. Have used one pair of each on my machines for more than two years, and they are as true and nice as the day I put them on. Your light ray dope was certainly very fine. Am also sending a couple of slides of my own make. If anyone cares to know how to make slides, I will be glad to start them right. The slides I have made are as easy as making a Velox Print.

I don't like to call you a pervaricator, Brother Smith, but I am darned if I ever found the making of such excellent slides as you send to be "easy," though, perhaps, it is due to my ignorance; in fact, I presume it is. The gate roller is very well made indeed. It consists of a copper supporting holder, upon which is mounted a gate idler somewhat differently made from the regular Power's. Instead of the shaft extending through the supporting ears, two set screws go through and engage a corresponding indentation in the end of the shaft proper. This shaft carries two rollers made of what seems to be red insulating used in electrical work—fibre board. These are separated by a hollow copper shaft, and there is the usual steel spring, with a collar and set screw, at one end.

As to the territory you are in, I would suggest, Brother Smith, that you write the I. A. headquarters about that, addressing The International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employes, 107 West 46th St., New York City, and mark the letter for the attention of Mr. Higgins or Mr. Leomaster.

Automobile Outfit.

R. L. Kittel, Hartville, Mo., writes:

I will now give the information about my auto electric light plant. Note you have had nothing like it in the department, hence it may benefit some of your readers. I use an Overland car, the engine fly wheel of which is used as a belt wheel. I set my dynamo beside the auto, about 7 feet from it, on a frame of 2 x 4 timbers floored with inch boards, which holds the dynamo in perfect line. Have used the outfit for six months, and have had no trouble with it, except one five minute stop to tighten the belt. No stop caused from engine heating, or anything like the trouble the usual plants give. The engine is a 30 h. p., but I have it speeded down to about 10 h. p., or less, so it runs with ease. I use the governor from a 10 h. p. steam engine. It rests on floor of auto just in front of the front seat. It is connected to the butterfly valve of the carburetor, and regulates the speed perfectly. I use a light spring on the lever connecting same, it being about 3 feet long. Enclosed find explanatory sketch of top view of whole outfit. The light spring on lever is only to take out slack of lever workings. The lever is fastened on lower end of governor stem by two nuts, a hole being punched in end of lever to receive same, or hole could be drilled in butterfly lever. I made a wood block and shoved in shaft-hole of flywheel to carry a belt pulley for the governor. This pulley must be small, its diameter being according to size of governor. A smaller governor may be better, as I had to make the weights of the governor smaller and lighter to give more action. The main shaft of auto is, of course, disconnected, so that the gearing is not running. This saves the wearing of the gears. It runs very smoothly. I cut a hole in side of auto to run top belt through, and removed the dust pan to make room for lower belt. The outfit can be arranged so as to make a quick change for running auto on road again, but I have not moved it as yet, so have not perfected the quick change, though I will this summer. Am preparing to rig up another outfit like this, but will use Buick, No. 1 Model, 2 cylinder, chain drive, and on this the dynamo will set under the back seat. This will make the best quick change outfit, as the only alteration necessary will be to disconnect the chain and put on the belt for the road, and vice versa. The Overland auto is an old model of the planetary transmission type.

Sorry I kept you waiting so long, but I wanted to give the outfit a thorough test first, and then the difficulty was to explain it fully on paper. My children are now successfully operating the outfit at Weaubleau, Mo., without me. I am running a 6 h. p. plant here at Hartville, consisting of a 2 cycle Caille engine and 3 K. W. 110 volt Westinghouse dynamo., and it's a dandy outfit, too, but of this I will have to write in the next letter, if you think it of any benefit.

Now I come with a question. Yesterday started the show with plenty of carbon to finish, and after running one film, the lower carbon was too short to finish, and I let the upper carbon down long enough to complete the show. The polarity seemed to have changed and burned the lower carbon too fast instead of the upper one. The only thing i noticed different was the dynamo being somewhat wet, but I did not think it would change the polarity. When I set the upper carbon down, the polarity became correct again and the upper carbon burned instead of the lower one. There is no hurry for the answer, as it gives sufficient light to run show if it should occur again.

Glad to have your description, Friend Kittel, and am sorry its publication was so long delayed. For using auto power for permanent location the plan looks all right, and your governor scheme certainly is ingenious and worthy of study by those using automobile power for such purposes. I don't quite understand what you mean by "speeding down to ten horse power." You may mean that you so set your governor that the engine develops only ten horse power, but is that the best way to do it? Maybe so, because it probably would eliminate considerable friction and heating. As to what caused the effect you name, I don't know. Certainly, if you have correctly set the matter forth, it could not be change of polarity, because I think that could not possibly happen with the generator running and generating current. Can anyone offer a solution of this matter?

Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

The editor is in receipt of an invitation to attend the first meeting and become a charter member of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. The call for this meeting is sent out by C. Francis Jenkins. The meeting was to be in the Oak Room, Raleigh Hotel, Washington, D. C., July 24th, 25th, and 26th. The call reads as follows:

> Every industry has its society of engineers, an association of men who are responsible for the form of structure of the mechanisms used in their trade, and it is an axiom that their meetings are productible of inestimable good to the whole industry. The time is ripe for the establishment of a society of Motion Picture Engineers, as is evidenced by the lack of fixed standards in the industry, the direct cause of the loss of more than a hundred million dollars last year alone. The society will stand in practically the same relation to the motion picture industry that the Society of Automobile Engineers does to the automobile business, or the Society of Electrical Engineers does to the electrical trade, etc., and whose respective recommendations are so carefully considered before promulgation that they are now universally accepted as authoritative. The organization of the Society of Automobile Engineers brought order out of chaos in the automobile trade, and it is reasonable to suppose that the establishment of fixed standards in motion picture mechanisms will do as much for the motion picture industry. Will you kindly advise if the organization of a Society of Motion Picture Engineers has your approval, and whether we may expect you at the organization meeting.

I deeply regret that I was not able to attend this meeting as I had planned a trip up through Montreal, and Quebec to Point Gaspe, returning via Nova Scotia, via the Go-devil route, of course, with my daughter on the chicken roost.

There certainly ought to be some such organization, though whether it can best be handled in this way, or through a committee of the proposed-to-be re-organized Board of Trade is open to question. Personally, I am inclined to believe the society offers the better means. As Brother Jenkins sets forth, the lack of fixed standards is the direct cause of the loss of a tremendous sum of money each year. Whether it will reach $100,000,000 or not I cannot say, but there is reason to suppose the figures are within the facts.

To have the proper moral effect it will be necessary that the society be made up of representatives of all classes of the industry, particularly including all manufacturers of apparatus.

If you ask me what is it that needs standardizing, my reply would be to ask what does not need it? But the securing of the adoption of a standard is very muchly something else again. However, as Brother Jenkins has pointed out, the Society of Electrical Engineers and the Society of Automobile Engineers brought order out of chaos and forced the adoption of standards which have saved incalculably large sums of money, besides giving to the purchaser a far, far better machine and greatly improved service. What has been done in those industries surely can be done in the motion picture industry, therefore this department extends to the proposed Society of Motion Picture Engineers, or any other body which bids fair to accomplish the desired result, the right hand of welcome.

Shutter Wrong.

George Homer, Benson, Minn., writes:

> The following may sound very easy to you but is quite difficult and important to me. I have travel ghost which I have been trying very hard to eliminate. It seems to me my machine must be tight somewhere, though I cannot find out at what point. Have a brand new Power's Six B, which has only been used for little more than a month. When framing rod is up the streaks are down, and when the framing rod is down it is just the opposite. It has a specially made lens.

Apparently your trouble lies in the fact that your shutter blade is too narrow, or you have the shutter set at the wrong distance from the lens—or both. Anyhow it is practically certain that the shutter blade is too narrow for the light ray at the point where the shutter is set. Presuming that you have a copy of the third edition of the Handbook, as you certainly ought to have, I would refer you to Figure 63a, page 145, and the text matter on page 146. I would also suggest that you cut the light ray in front of the objective lens with a piece of metal or cardboard at different distances from the lens. Unless you have a very short focal length lens you will find the point where you don't see the edge of the card moving across the screen at all, but the screen just simply gets dark all over at once, or two shadows come together like the blades of a pair of shears. If you do find this point, that is where your shutter should be set, or as near that point as you are able to get it, and very likely if you can reach this point with the shutter you will find that the travel ghost will disappear. It is possible, however, that due to mechanical limitations of the machine, you will be unable to set your shutter at this point, in which case you will have to use a wider main shutter blade. If the machine is tight and there is a grind it will probably be found to be in the toggle gear, in which case I would recommend you to Instruction No. 22, page 499 of the Handbook; also Instruction No. 23, same page.

Nitrogen Lamps for Projection.

J. M. London, Travis Theater Company, Traverse City, Michigan, says:

> Can you give us any information with regard to the use of nitrogen lamps instead of the electric arc for the projection of pictures? We are at present using A. C. and getting good results, but can get D. C. from the same company. They don't care to go to the expense of running the line if there is a fair prospect of the nitrogen lamps replacing the arc in the course of six months or so.

No, I don't think there is any chance at all of the nitrogen lamp replacing the electric arc for the projection of pictures, at least for a good while to come. This may be qualified, however, by the statement that the nitrogen lamp may be found commercially practicable for use in small towns where a brilliant illumination is not required, and where economy in current consumption is absolutely imperative. Up-to-date my observation of the nitrogen lamp for projection has been that it takes practically as much skill to operate it as it does to operate the electric arc, and the result is not anywhere near equal, though the current consumption is only 600 watts. Of course no one can say what may develop, but I don't believe your light company need worry about the nitrogen lamp for quite some considerable time.

He Comes Again.

S. M. Crocker, Louisburg, N. C., says:

> Here I come again for help. Am using two Powers' Six A's, with a 102 foot throw, and a 12 foot picture; 15½ inches from aperture to front condenser, and have a ghost in the center of the picture. Have a 6½ and 7½ inch condenser combination, with the 7½ next the arc. Am using 60 amperes through a Fort Wayne. Would the meniscus-bi-convex lens help me? If so, would you tell me what size to get? Have been using Speer carbons for some time, and they are excellent. I have been on the job, "behind the gun" for seven years, and the Speer is the best yet. Wish we could have the pleasure of listening to your talks on projection, as I know we would all be benefited. If you ever come down this way, please don't forget the good, old North State. As a whole, we have pretty good projection around here, though there is still room for improvement. In closing I will extend my best wishes to yourself and the department.

In one of the coming issues you will find the itinerary of the southern and western trip I will make next winter; also you will note that towns off the regular route will be able to secure the lecture on certain terms, though that, of course, would not apply to a place where it would only be possible to get half a dozen or so managers and operators together.

As to your ghost, why, your condenser is too close to the mechanism. I would refer you to Table 1, Page 141 of the Handbook, copy of which I presume you have, or if you haven't, you ought to have. Supposing your lens to be 1⅝ inch in diameter and the back focus 3½ inches. Looking down the left-hand column, we find 1⅝, and then move out to the right until we come to 3.53, which is very close to 3½ inches. Looking up at the top we see there should be 21 inches between the apex of the front condenser and the aperture with two 7½ inch condensers. I don't, of course, know the diameter of your objective, but it is a pretty safe bet you ought to have two 7½ inch condensers with a considerable distance between the apex of the front condenser and the aperture. That is all I can tell you until I know the back focus at which your objective works and its exact diameter.

Take-Up Tension.

I would like to caution operators with regard to the take-up tension of some of the new model projectors. Take the Powers Six for example: Its take-up tension arrangement is a great improvement over the old style, but operators should be very careful not to set the tension too tight, because with the large-diameter friction wheel, and the consequent large friction service, if you jam the spring up tight there will most likely be serious injury done to the film; the sprocket holes may even be cracked at their corners. The same thing applies to some other new types of take-up tension, and is a matter which is of considerable importance. When adjusted right the take-ups work very good indeed, supplying very satisfactory tension, but like all other things, they are susceptible of abuse. Watch your take-up tension, no matter what type of take-up you have, but this is particularly true of the newer ones.

New Film Mender.

M. H. Granholt, Long Beach, Cal., is the inventor of a film splicing device that he is placing on the market, working model of which he has sent for our inspection.

This little device is simple, comparatively inexpensive, and will aid very greatly in the making of a really good splice, in that it compels the proper matching of the sprocket holes, and supplies even and ample pressure to the splice. It also supplies a perfectly clean cut in trimming the film. The device is about 12 inches long by 3 inches wide, the mechanism being mounted on a hard wood board. It should, I think, be a very acceptable, low-priced addition to the operating room equipment.

Worth Twice Its Price.

Raymond Brown, St. Louis, Mo., says:

> Received copy of Handbook a few days ago; also both the first and second set of questions, and just cannot help telling you how much I appreciate them. The Handbook is a marvel. It is worth twice its price. I am a constant reader of the department, and find it is the best thing going. Attached find a sketch which is both illustrative and self-explanatory. It > ought to be placed above every rewind table as a future warning. I hope the drawing will prove of benefit.

This cartoon is excellent, Brother Brown, but I would like to warn both yourself and Friend Martin that in making drawings for reproduction black ink only should be used, because, while red reproduces black, still some of the colors sent in by Martin won't reproduce at all. Friend Brown also sends an answer to Question 145, which will be considered in due time. We are, of course, glad to know that you are pleased with the Handbook and the department.

Organizer Wanted.

Indiana, writes:

> We enjoy the projection department here very much indeed. Would like to ask what would be the chance to get an organizer of the I. A. T. S. E. in this locality. There is a local here, but that is about all you can say. Not a man in it is working, and there are seven picture houses here. Two of them were, until recently, employing union men, but not now. The men don't seem to realize that it is to their interest to work for the interest of the manager. Now how could the operators of this city get together and have a real union? If you are ever over in this neighborhood just let us know, and we will try to show you a good time.

Well, Indiana, it is a pretty hard question you are asking. I am, however, referring your case to the I. A. T. S. E., though it is hard to say what action they will take, and I would myself have to know more about the situation in order to comment on it intelligently. Operators who make no effort to study their business and deliver results on the screen are not entitled to much consideration, no matter whether they are union or non-union men. As I have told you time and again, I believe firmly in organization and good salaries, but I believe just as firmly that the operator should concentrate his every effort in putting the best possible picture on the screen. That is about all I could say as to your rather peculiar situation at this time.

Very Foolish.

Recently a Seats-free-if-you-buy-a-drink-Coney-Island-Saloon-Hotel-show had a film fire. By eye witnesses I was told that the observation ports were not closed at all, and that the smoke poured out in huge volumes. Later I went down, visited the operating room and asked the operator whether the fire shutters were not closed during the fire, to which he replied: "They were closed. I dropped them myself." One rubber at that room was enough to show that the gentleman was, in all human probability, taking decided liberties with the truth. One lens port shutter and one observation port shutter were held up by a heavy cord, without any fuses at all, and this cord passed around a metal stud in the ceiling, so I doubt if it could have been dropped at all without cutting the cord. The other observation port shutter was just plainly and frankly tied up with a piece of heavy cord running from the top of the shutter to, as I remember it, a nail driven into the wall about 2 inches from the top of the shutter.

Now, I well know that in some of these places where the motion picture is prostituted to the selling of intoxicating liquors, projection is a farce. The machine, at the time I was there, was running probably 40 feet of film a minute. The light was very weak, and the picture on the screen could only be called such by courtesy. There was no pretence of projection, and it is, as the operator in this case said, very discouraging to the operator to be compelled to work under such conditions. However, I take the position that even under such utterly wretched projection conditions as this, it is very foolish for the operator not to at least do right those things which he can do right. Of course, there could be but little danger of panic in a place of that kind, which is practically entirely open on two sides, but nevertheless the tying up of shutters in direct violation of law is bad practice, and certainly does not speak well for the operator in charge, no matter under what conditions he may be working.

Quite True.

I have a card upon which appears the following:

"It takes less time to do a thing right than it does to explain why you did it wrong."

There was never a statement made which bore a stronger imprint of truth than does the foregoing, and it may very well be applied to the operating room. In how many thousands and thousands of instances every day operators do a thing the wrong way because the wrong way is a little easier, failing to realize the fact that it is the doing of these myriad of little things wrong which marks him indelibly as being in the class of workmen we call mediocre. Look about you, my brothers! Do you really and honestly believe that the men who get to the top by a process of promotion get there through pull? Do you believe, for instance, that the presidents, general managers, managers and superintendents of our great mercantile institutions, most of whom have risen from the lowest ranks in the organization, and who now draw large salaries, got their positions and held them through "pull"? Well, if you do, my brother, you don't know much about these things. True, there are a comparatively small percentage of men who reach high positions through extraordinary opportunity, but the man who rose from the ranks by the process of promotion rose because he applied himself to his daily tasks, did things in the very best possible way he knew how to do them, and studied both the practical and the technical end of the business. The "other fellow" who entered at the same time and on equal basis with the superintendent, and who has risen no higher than perhaps a clerkship, but who sits back and growls and yowls, explaining to all and sundry how the superintendent got his promotion through "pull," is still a clerk because he had to explain too often why he did a thing wrong when the doing of it right would not only have taken perhaps less time than to explain things, but also would have helped land him in the superintendent class.

Operators are now placed in charge of valuable equipment, and photoplays which cost huge sums of money. They are called upon to reproduce the work of the finest artists in the world, yet many of them can see nothing in their profession except the mere turning of a crank, the patching of a film, and the striking of an arc. They sneer at study; they do things wrong, and if at last the wrong is detected, try to explain something which cannot be explained except through and by the one word "lazy." I have always said, and I still do say the profession of operating is slowly but surely rising to a higher plane, both in workmanship and remuneration. It would, however, rise very much more swiftly if the great body of operators would acquire a proper respect for their own profession and do things right, not sometimes but all the time—not only the big things but the little things—because, after all, it is the great myriad of little things that form the big things of life.

The Reason for the Rule.

Lowell, Mass., writes:

> There were six moving picture theaters in this city until one, the Voyons, was forced to close by the local union. Everyone felt sorry for these people. It appears that two men from Boston bought the house, one a Mr. Hill, a member of the I. A. T. S. E. of Boston, undertook to do the operating. I have visited this theater quite often, and Mr. Hill was certainly delivering the goods on the screen. He always had a well illuminated, flickerless picture. The union then took a hand and said that an operator from the Lowell local, and not the one from Boston must be employed. Mr. Hill offered to join the local, but was refused because he was an owner. There was considerable trouble, and the house finally closed.

This action on the part of the union is one which probably causes more ill-feeling than any other one thing an organization is called upon to do. Now I am not going to discuss the right or the wrong of the action, but I am going to tell you the point of view of the local. The Lowell local, or any other local, has the right to refuse members, with or without reason, or to refuse transfer cards of members belonging to other locals. The point lies right here: the local holds that its members, being residents of the city and dependent upon motion picture operating for their living, have the first right to any positions there may be in that city. It certainly does not seem right for a man, for instance, from Jonesville to come into Brownville and take a job when there are Brownville operators idle, or when his coming displaces a Brownville man, who will perhaps have to break up his home and go elsewhere to seek employment. The keeping of local work for local men is a proposition I agree with, but with the proviso that home men be COMPETENT OPERATORS, who not only are CAPABLE of delivering the goods, but DO deliver them, so far as the limitations of equipment will permit. I am moved to publish the foregoing letter, and set this matter forth, by the many letters of protest which have reached me on this particular matter during the past year. The average man who does not stop to study the whole proposition very naturally jumps to the conclusion that such a rule as this is arbitrary, unjust and utterly impossible. As a matter of fact, however, it is nothing of the kind, and I thoroughly agree that so long as there are COMPETENT operators in Lowell, who can and will produce equally as good work as the Boston man, they are entiled to the job. For an owner to operate his own machine in a town like Lowell where there are several theaters, sets up a condition which tends to be unfair to the other shows, since in such a case he occupies the dual position of an operator and an owner, and has an advantage over his brother exhibitor equal to the saving he effects through running his own machine. This, however, does not apply to very small towns where there is only patronage sufficient to support one theater.

Light Trouble.

M. J. Rother, Hastings, Minn., says:

> Am using a Power's Five, most of the time with calcium light. Have a Gundlach lens with a 6½ rear and 4½ condenser in front. The objective is 5 inches E. F. My trouble is as follows: The left side of the picture seems to be foggy when the balance of the picture is sharp and distinct, and when I focus to make the left side clear, the balance gets slightly foggy, and the left side seems to be about the same. When I have no film in the machine the screen seems to have a dark shadow, starting on the left side and extending about one-third of the distance across the screen from top to bottom. This occurs or any throw or any size picture. Can you help me?

If you have stated the matter correctly, it seems fairly clear that you have interference with the light somewhere. I would recommend that you first carefully line up your lens system, as per Figure 41, Page 112, third edition of the Handbook, copy of which you should by all means have, particularly in view of the fact that there is a very complete article on "Projection by Limelight" at the end of the book First, however, examine and see that the gate, or tension springs are not setting too far over and interfering with the light. The aperture in the gate and the opening in the aperture plate should be square with each other, and the tension spring should not extend over the opening in the aperture plate. I think you will find the seat of your trouble in one of these two things, or possibly a combination of both, though it is also possible that one of the lens combinations of your objective is not setting square in the barrel, and I would suggest that you borrow another objective first and try it out. If the result is any better with the other lens, then you can look for at least a part of your trouble in your objective.

Inefficient Examination.

Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla., writes:

> At last the examination of operators we have waited so long for has been pulled off. There were sixteen questions asked and they were all on fire risk. As a result, we had an argument. One of the questions asked was: "Is there any possibility of the film catching fire while in process of rewinding?" Some answered yes, and others no. Will you please give us an answer to this question. Can a film be set on fire, while rewinding at considerable speed, by holding the film reel still, thus sliding the film? Some think it can.

No, Tampa, it would, I think, be utterly impossible to set a film on fire that way. I have never heard of such a thing being done. The slippage is not sufficient to generate enough heat to fire the celluloid. There is, however, the possibility of a film being set on fire in rewinding. This may occur in a great many different ways. For instance, possibly the operator has dropped a hot carbon butt on the floor, something happens to the rewinder and some film drops down or is run off on the floor—improbable but not impossible—and strikes that hot carbon butt. It is also possible the operator may be indulging in a quiet little smoke and a spark from the tobacco comes into contact with the film; but that is not, I think, what you want. So far as setting the film on fire through and by the actual process of rewinding I should say no; such a thing would be beyond the range of probability, and mighty near beyond the range of possibility as well.

Evidently your examiners don't realize that knowledge of the optical system of the projector is fully as important as knowledge pertaining to fire risk; also it is rank nonsense to undertake an examination by means of a set series of questions. Such an examination raises in the mind the question as to the competency of the examiner himself. The examiner who is really competent will gauge his next question according to the answer given to the last one.

Cinematography in Warm Climates.

When the motion picture protographer goes from the temperate zone to the tropics he will find himself confronted with new problems, which result through the unhealthy climate, the uncertain light values, and the intense heat.

A cinematographer made a trip to the Canal Zone during the rainy season. When he removed the film from the cans it was soft, and within an hour of placing it in the box of the camera it was as wet as wet could be, while the following morning it was completely covered with mildew.

Moisture not only deteriorates the speed of film in warm climates, but soon destroys the latent image if not developed immediately.

How may this be avoided? One cinematographer, working in the heart of Africa, deemed it advisable to carry the film stock in a cooling case, built along the lines of the vacuum flask, and guarded against the exterior becoming hot by covering same with cool banana leaves. His film chest was made like a metal refrigerator of double walls of sheet zinc with layers of heat insulating felt packed between the walls.

Before setting out on your journey, store the film in air-tight cans and place adhesive plaster all round the edges of the lids.

If you take my advice you will not burden yourself with more film than you actually need, as it deteriorates rapidly. If you can arrange to have small consignments despatched as required, so much the better.

Once you have arrived at your destination, select a dry and cool place for the film boxes, which are kept in a better condition if placed in an ash can or some other air-tight receptacle, not overlooking to include a dish of fused calcium chloride.

Calcium chloride (fused) has a strong affinity for moisture and takes it up rapidly from moist air. It absorbs it so rapidly that it will soon dissolve in the moisture it takes up, making a corrosive liquid very disastrous to metal. It should be surrounded with some absorbent material to prevent its spreading unless it is closely watched.

Re-load the camera only just before you plan to "shoot."

You may experience considerable difficulty in turning the crank, for the heat is apt to heat the brass and make it too hot to be operated with the bare hands. Protect the camera from the direct sun as much as possible.

The developing is best done on the spot, with as little delay as possible.

A camera man working in the Sudan discovered that sunrise was the ideal time for developing, since the air is not too warm, and the water, which has been standing in canvas buckets since the heat of the previous day, is nice and cool.

This operator utilized an oblong-built straw hut, 17 feet by 11 feet, for his dark-room. The inner covering, to keep out the light, was a red and black Turkey cloth, slightly smaller in size. No ventilation was provided, although there were openings both at the top and the end. These were to accommodate the wooden frames; over which were placed ruby glass, ground-glass, and thin wire netting. He made his own developing frame out of native timber, shaped like a 3 foot 6 inch drum, and painted with paraffin wax. He also needed two troughs, one for the developer and the other for hypo, and made these of wood, joining the sections together with pitch. He allowed for a space of an inch between the film and the trough interior when at work. Each trough had two wings, so that the developer and hypo would be caught on falling from the film and be conveyed back into the trough well. To hold the axle carrying the drum he equipped both of the troughs with slotted side arms.

The developing materials used were Burroughs, Wellcome & Co. "tabloid" pyro soda and a little bromide of potassium. He used eight cartons to develop two hundred feet of film, and dissolved them in a bucket half filled with water.

Water is often hard to get and of poor quality. I have used river water that looked like coffee by stirring an ounce of alum in a barrel of it and allowing it to settle over night, using the clear water at the top by decanting it off with a short length of hose. Many times the residual sludge in the bottom would be four inches deep. At a pinch sea water may be used for washing if a final rinse of about five minutes be given in fresh water.

For the worker on a small scale, pin racks and trays that nest compactly are probably best on account of ease of transportation.

One man showed me a neat outfit he had made for himself that consisted of skeleton drums which came apart for packing with nesting metal troughs, nickel plated inside.

The entire outfit of a dozen 100-foot drums and three troughs and a lot of black felt which he used for extemporizing dark rooms from hotel rooms and native huts packed into a fair sized trunk!

He dried his films on the same drum on which they were developed, a thing which is difficult to do satisfactorily on pin frames.

The Correspondence Club.

The following names have been sent in by readers of the column who want to correspond with others who are interested in cinematography. It would probably be of greater value to the members of the club if each would specify just what subject interests him most.

There are a number of the readers of this department who are doing work along special lines and a letter chum who is interested in the same subject is a great source of inspiration.

Effect of Humidity on Photographic Films.

After a plate has been exposed in a telescope for some time, it gradually loses some of its sensitiveness. This action is the subject of a communication to the Astro Physical Journal, in which the cause of decrease of sensitiveness is laid to the charge of humidity. Experiments were made to determine the effect of varied degrees of humidity on the sensitiveness and developing factor of a Seed 23 to a Seed 30 plate. Experimenting within the range of 0.5 to 85 per cent. of humidity and allowing the emulsion film to come into equilibrium with the air, it was found that both sensitiveness and development factor decreased about 25 per cent. when the humidity was increased from 0.5 to 85 per cent.

This result seems very conclusive and shows the restraining action of a change of moisture on the sensitiveness of the film. It would follow, therefore, that all photographic materials used in photometric work should be brought into equilibrium with the atmosphere in which they are used.

Eastman Factory to Be Enlarged.

The Eastman Kodak Company has purchased eighty-five acres of land adjoining its plant, fronting on the Ridge road, for $107,000. The company's property now extends from the high bank of the river to the westward for about one and one-half miles.

Arrangements have been made to connect all the plants at Kodak Park with subways, which will carry a double track railroad and a roadway, so that every part of the plant can be reached without going on the public highway. Another purchase of land was made to fill out the frontage in Lake avenue. The plant now covers more than a square mile of land.

Music for the Picture

Musical Setting for Husband and Wife.

Released Sept. 4 by the World Film Corporation.
(Prepared by S. M. Berg. By special arrangement with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (Marked T) or a described action (Marked D). For instance: 3¼ T "Sadie, a dressmaker's—" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 40¾ D "When Knight reads letter" is a description of action.

Richard Baker, a bank cashier, through his wife Doris's extravagance, becomes involved. Mrs. Schmidt, wife of a bank director, desires social prominence, but is slighted by Doris. Schmidt, enraged, seeks to ruin Baker, who, little by little, is drifting from his wife. Alliston, a millionaire, and Knight, the bank examiner, both love Doris. She consents to elope with Alliston, but Schmidt's detectives, believing him to be Baker running away, stop them. Doris, learning her husband's sacrifices for her, is awakened to her true love. Alliston and Knight, for Doris's sake, make up Richard's shortage, and all ends happily.

The character of this picture is dramatic. Care should be taken in keeping the music subdued so as not to overplay.

The THEME selected is "Somewhere-Sometime"—Clough-Leighter.

Organ Playing for Moving Pictures (Continued).

By S. M. Berg and Norman Stuckey.

THE pianist about to become an organist will be confronted at first with the touch of the organ which is different from that of a piano and he will notice that the keys sink deeper. A correct and easy position of the fingers over five consecutive scale notes is the basis of fingering for the organ. It is necessary to lift the fingers high and press down firmly with decision.

You cannot make the organ sound by hitting the keys hard as on a piano. Expression must be developed and can be acquired by the use of suitable combinations and phrasing, much of which is done with the Swell Pedal. Repetition is quicker on an organ than a piano; in fact, the response is instantaneous. It should also be remembered that every note of the organ is ready to speak at the slightest touch, which fact is a stumbling block to many careless pianists. Many beginners on the organ feel that the speaking voice is slow. That is, the sound seems to come after the striking of the note. This is easily explained for the organ is sometimes placed at a considerable distance from the console and though the response is instantaneous a fraction of time has passed before the sound is carried back to the performer.

Absolute accuracy must be attained in playing the organ, and a true legato touch should be mastered. This is possible by the intelligent use of the fingers, care, and exactness in everything you do. A distinction should be made between a legato touch and a staccato touch. Both are not easy on an organ, especially to the pianist who is anxious to "play" in a few lessons. The true legato touch will come in time and only by thorough and conscientious study and practice. Pay attention to the position of the hand. Independent movements of the hands and feet are necessary. American pianists have a bad habit of what is called "ragtime pedalling" and beating time with their feet. Foot action for the organ is absolutely necessary but entirely independent of the hands.

Sir John Staniner's exercises for manual touch will be found very helpful and should be practised before any pieces are attempted on the organ. A few scales, practised with the Open Diapason (the loudest stop), will enable the student to gain confidence with the manual touch. Play exercises on the Great Organ, then play them on the Swell Organ, taking particular care to make each note clear and distinct. Be careful about turning under; see that you do it with ease. Always take the opportunity to change fingers on a repeated note. Strive for a refined tone; clearness is essential, and jumpy playing will not be tolerated by an intelligent audience.

The two part and three part inventions of Bach in addition to the two and three part Preludes and Fugues are excellent for forming a good style of touch, fingering and phrasing. In practising pedal exercises, don't balance your body on the edge of the bench. Sit in the middle of the seat and play from the ankle. The pianist will be inclined to glance at the pedals, but this habit must be avoided. Learn the positions of your pedals by sense of touch the same as piano. It is absolutely necessary to do this, as one cannot rely on sound for in many pieces the pedal work is obscured by your manual work, and only clear and even pedal technic can be recognized by your audience. It is therefore necessary to spend time and effort in developing a clear and smooth pedal technic. Do not kick at the pedals. Practice slowly and firmly. Try easy piano pieces until you gain courage. It is not necessary to stick at the pedals too long at a time. Vary your practising with manual and pedal work as well as piano technic, but let your practising be slow and deliberate and care taken to develop a clean and accurate style.

Effects and Phrasing.

Now that the student is familiar with the manuals and pedal keyboard and can touch the various notes without looking at them he should try an accompaniment to a simple waltz. Practice at first with the left hand alone, the second and third counts, the first being tacet. Then add your pedal; count one, which will be the pedal note and two, three the accompaniment with the left hand.

Practice slowly, counting one, two, three. Do not look at the pedals.

Practice until you can play this exercise smoothly and clean. There will be a tendency to strike your first count with the left hand on the manual. This difficulty can be mastered by accenting the first count with your left foot on the pedals. The pedal notes are the foundation notes in organ playing. When you master this accompaniment, bring in the melody, preferably chords or a single note at first, using the right hand on the Great Organ, taking particular care that your combination of stops is not too loud for your accompaniment.

Count slowly and play carefully, not slighting any notes. Use extreme care to have the second and third counts clear and your pedal notes clean and staccato. Do not blur your bass or develop careless pedal technic. A staccato bass is one of the secrets of successful organ playing for moving pictures. It makes your playing different than church playing, as many church pieces are mostly sustained notes. Not all bass notes should be made staccato, but the majority should be, and only notes in the middle or end of a strain should be held for any length of time or in pieces of a slow character demanding whole or half notes.

If you will examine the bass part of a waltz you will notice that few whole notes and few half notes make up the strain. They should be practiced slowly and carefully, as these are essential numbers for depicting the action on the screen. It is advisable to practice Bach daily as well as various technical exercises.

When playing an organ for pictures confine full organ and loud effects to marches, coronations, pageants, battles, fires, floods, etc. There seems to be a tendency on the part of many beginners to make their instrument roar and thunder. This habit should be avoided. Strive for a soft, refined tone. Use full organ or loud stops when working up a climax. Then an abrupt pause is sometimes effective. Reach the hearts of your hearers by clean, melodious playing. Do not offend them by poorly played and poorly selected pieces played on unsuitable combinations. A fault with many organists is that of holding down notes, or chords while changing stops. Combination pistons obviate this to a certain extent, but many organists insist on making an abrupt pause in the middle of a piece. Start the strain with the necessary combination and use it till the end of that strain. In playing an organ for moving pictures many changes of combinations are necessary to avoid monotony. Rhythm is highly important in playing an organ for moving pictures, and if the beginner has difficulty in this direction counting while practicing will be of great aid.

The beginner must be content with simple pieces at first. Do not be in a hurry to play anything beyond you. Select music that can be mastered with a little practice and never attempt a piece until you are absolutely sure of being able to render it in the proper manner. Pay attention to the small things, for these make the big things possible.

Another Youth at the Front.

Writing Scenarios Between Whiles Down in the Rio Grande.

HOWARD IRVING YOUNG, one of the foremost of the younger group of scenario writers, who gave up that work to answer the call to arms and go with the Seventh regiment, N. Y. N. G., to the Mexican border, has sent word to the Metro officials that he is completing two strong, original scenarios in Camp McAllen, Texas, which will be forwarded within a few weeks. Mr. Young was engaged in writing the scenarios, together with Fred de Gresac, for the Bushman-Bayne serial of fourteen episodes, when he was called to the front.

Alexander Duane and Howard Irving Young of the Metro, Private Co. B, 7th Regiment, N. Y. N. G., at McAllen, Tex.

Mr. Young is a sturdy young fellow and has stood the vicissitudes of camp life well. He writes that he is handling a shovel more than a gun, and that he finds little time away from drill and his regular duties to devote to his writing. He found it impossible to continue work on the Bushman-Bayne serial and Paul Price, a former Baltimore newspaper reporter, was engaged to take up where Mr. Young left off. Mr. Young says the regiment has built many frame buildings of a more or less substantial nature, and that this augurs that they will remain there for some time to come.

There is plenty of entertainment around the camp, Mr. Young writes, but he misses motion pictures and Broadway and 42nd street. When in New York Mr. Young was a busy young fellow outside of his regular work. He was recently elected president of the Photodramatists, Inc., and he is secretary of the Green Room Club. He is also a popular member of the Screen Club, and always figures prominently in their social affairs.

With Mr. Young in the ranks of the Seventh is "Silent Alexander" Duane, a member of the Metro publicity staff, who was off with the regiment at the first call. "Alex" is enjoying good health and is anxious to get into Mexico.

Photographer Cowling Working in Clouds.

HERFORD T. COWLING, chief photographer of the United States Reclaimation Service, writes The Moving Picture World from Lake Peak, New Mexico, over 12,000 feet above sea level. "I am making a new series of scenic films for Uncle Sam which will far surpass the ones put out by me for the Department of the Interior last year. Since June 1 I have traveled 12,000 miles and according to present plans will be out until the middle of November. My Moving Picture World follows me all over the country and besides being a great source of pleasure, I find it indispensable in keeping up to date."

Herford T. Cowling.

Much of Mr. Cowling's work for the government has been released to the trade by Gaumont on the Mutual program and it has been of uniformly fine quality. Among other glowing endorsements is that of C. M. White, speaking as a representative of the Gaumont company.

"I have seen practically all of the United States scenic film used by lecturers," said Mr. White, "and I can frankly state that I have never seen any photography that surpasses the work of Mr. Cowling. Not only are his light effects exceptional, but he has exercised the news instinct of a magazine writer and filmed his subjects in a manner that brings out their strong and interesting characteristics to the best advantage."

The esteem with which Mr. Cowling is regarded by his fellow craftsmen was manifested at the last annual meeting of the Federal Photographic Society when he was elected president. Thomas S. Smyley, of the Smithsonian Institution, is honorary life president of the society.

CONSOLIDATED FILM CORPORATION GIVES LUNCHEON.

Representatives of various moving picture trade publications have reason to look back with pleasure on their introduction to the new serial from the pen of Albert Payson Terhune. On Tuesday, Aug. 15, previous to an exhibition of the first two episodes of "The Crimson Stain Mystery" in the projection room of the Metro Pictures Corporation, a luncheon was given to the press by the members of the Consolidated Film Corporation, at Murray's, West 42d street. This luncheon, by the way, turned out to be a sumptuous repast. Symbolic of the occasion the table decorations and favors consisted of crimson dahlias mingled with asparagus fern, while a "Crimson Stain Mystery" cocktail headed the menu card. The affair was an exceedingly pleasant one with the period between twelve M. and two P. M. given over to eating and pleasant sociability, including a few timely discussions and friendly exchanges of ideas. Those fortunate enough to be present were Adam Hull Shirk, Morning Telegraph; H. F. Randall, New York Review; E. P. Smaney, Dramatic Mirror; Patrick Kearney, Evening Mail; Harold Arnston, Exhibitor's Herald; Miss Marie F. Lennards, Billboard; S. G. Sladdin and Arthur Brilant, Consolidated Film Corporation; F. C. Kennedy, Motography; Harry Ennis, Clipper; "Wid" Gunning, Wid's; Arthur James, Metro; Fred Schader, Variety; and Margaret I. MacDonald, Moving Picture World.

REPORTS FROM THE FIELD.

A SOURCE of keen satisfaction to be derived from having something to do with a page like this is found in the jolly good letters that come in from others who are no less alive to the problems and difficulties the editor is facing. I wish it were possible to publish in full every communication received, but for various reasons such a practice cannot be followed. Occasionally, however, I am strongly tempted to yield this space entirely to the publication of liberal extracts from the excellent letters and printed leaflets sent to me so kindly by active workers in other States. Perhaps the far-reaching scope of this department can be best exemplified by so doing. Here are two typical specimens, one from the head resident of Friendly House, a social settlement in Davenport, Iowa, whose friendly letter is doubly welcome because I happen to be a resident of Union Settlement here now, at one time of Hull House, Chicago; the other from a high schcool teacher in Pasadena, California, also president of the Visual Education Association of that State—to whom I am glad to extend my own high school hand for a friendly grasp. Have chairs, gentlemen; let's indulge in a round-table.

Writes the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Harry E. Downer):

> Your department in the Moving Picture World is each week the first one to be sought. Often there is little time for the always excellent contents of other pages. Have been greatly interested in your efforts to put life into a seemingly defunct or perhaps entirely supposititious subject, and I believe you can do it. It looks as if you might be the right man to raise the dead or bring verity into a dream that has a name.
>
> Last winter we inaugurated a scheme of Pleasant Sunday Afternoons. We had a program of music and some reels of motion pictures furnished by the Engineering Extension Department of the Iowa State College at Ames. We wished to attract the older people and made an admission charge of 5 cents for adults, 25 cents for children unattended and 10 cents for families af any size. Inasmuch as we charge the children 1 cent on Saturdays we felt that we could restrict their coming Sunday. We were on a circuit and used shipments of film sent from one station to another, following the plan which you propose to utilize.
> Have greedily followed every item in the Moving Picture World that looked toward the use of motion pictures in education. The promise of the plan is so fine and the possibilities so great, but the results are disappointing so far. The difficulties of safe and inexpensive projection are disappearing, but there remains the greater difficulty, the conservatism of teachers, their satisfaction with present methods, their timidity to enter an untried field, their inability to find anything in Herbart or Comenius or Pestalozzi about cinematography to guide them, the lack of authoritative approval by school conventions. I know them well—these teachers—for I have been one most of my life. We are a curious lot. That is the reason why I told you at the beginning that the educational motion picture is either dead or never lived; because the teachers whose business it is to educate, who control the system of public education, who write curricula and supervise the daily progress from "opening exercises, 9.00 to 9.10" to "special assistance, 4.00 to 4.30," have never shown interest in the teaching power of motion pictures, and until they do, there can be no education through cinematography.
> What I am hoping you can do, or someone else that sees the point and has the ear of picture people, is the persuasion of teachers to enter upon the work of preparing a visual cirriculum which shall name definitely the pictures desired to illuminate the branches where such help to the printed text is possible. The teachers are the only people competent to do this work. They can give to the producers explicit expression of their school room needs. They can open to the producers a market steadier and more profitable than any they have known. The picture producers cannot create this market unless they can influence every gathering of teachers to talk of motion pictures and decide upon needs never before acknowledged.
> I began a curriculum two years ago. Get along swimmingly through the kindergarten and primary grades, and then grew too busy to go on alone. Asked help from friends in grade school work, in high school and university, and got absolutely no help at all. Perhaps you can do better.

The foregoing is all so very good that I could not keep it to myself, although its publication might be construed as a violation of these instructions from our Friendly House comrade: "Please consider this a little summer day chat, nothing for publication. If you see any point to it I will make you a present of it. Take it as a gift to be used without credit line." He kindly sent along a copy of a leaflet that was circulated during the last convention of the Iowa State Teachers' Association. I am sure his excellent propaganda in behalf of educational pictures would be appreciated by all who read this page, but for the present space can be spared for only the stimulating words printed in large type on the front page: IF IT TAKES SCHOOL PEOPLE TEN YEARS TO DO ANYTHING, LET'S BEGIN. In regard to his proposal to set on foot the careful outlining of a visual curriculum, Mr. Downer writes me: "It seemed to set some of the folks to thinking it over. The executive committee are considering the matter. At any rate there are nine more years."

It may hearten the folks in Iowa to know that I have made inquiries of some of the large producing concerns and they assure me that such a general outline list of desirable films would be welcomed by them, although they of course could not guarantee that every film suggested by the educators will be made—unless at least the cost of production and reasonable profits can be first assured.

Now from the far Western quarter above referred to comes a whole sheaf of fine ideas and generous words. The writer is Mr. Carl H. Carson.

> For the last five or six years I have been cataloging the films regularly released in America and abroad which might by any chance be used for actual school work. These have all been arranged into ten divisions, each of which has been sub-divided so as to cover grammar school, high school and college courses. As a result of this work, I know what has been available since 1907.
> We are indeed glad to know that you are planning for not only new prints, but prints on non-inflammable stock. The non-inflammable stock will take the last argument from those opposed to the moving picture work in our educational institutions. There are many schools in California that already have machines or are just about to get them. There will be a great many more within another year. Your plan should meet with favor from all.
> We all feel, however, that a very important part of the work and, in fact, the most important, is the selection of materials which can actually be correlated with classroom work and organized into courses which can be arranged in advance for the year. I think I am safe in saying that such courses could be put into at least eighty per cent. of the schools in this section of the country anyway, and probably into ninety per cent. The first need of the schools is systematized, organized and regular work. Until that comes, the progress must be limited. However, I see in your scheme a solution to both problems.

Mr. Carson also favored me with copies of leaflets relating to the work of the Visual Education Association of California, particularly its campaign for legislation to establish a State Bureau of Visual Education. He adds:

> We hope to have another report much more complete in a month or two to be used in our next legislative campaign this winter, as well as in the N. E. A. work. I will send you one as soon as it is out and in return would appreciate any particular material that you may have which you think might be well to include. Of course, we will include a description of the plans which you are starting.

I shall be glad to insert in this department a resume of these leaflets as soon as may be convenient after the arrival of the forthcoming report.

Developments in Iowa and in California will be watched with interest. Who can send in direct from the field similar accounts of activities or propaganda in other States? Is there, for example, anything developing along the line of visual education in Louisiana, or in Michigan? Send me a brief account of any proposals or actual operations in your State. How many schools now have machines that take standard gauge film? Can you cite any instances of the strictly pedagogical use of films as distinct from mere diversion? Even though you may have tried only a very simple experiment, others would be glad to know what methods you employed and what results followed. H. L.

WHEN MINISTERS DISAGREE.

To attempt to decide when ministers disagree is no easy task. It is not, however, a matter to be dismissed as impossible, neither is it a decision that is required, but rather a solution of the problem which causes the ministers to differ in their opinions. Of course, the matter under discussion is the moving picture, and there are always those with strong opinions, valuable or otherwise, who insist upon being heard. It is well known that in a conference, convention or similar gathering of clergymen, men of extreme views can always secure a hearing, and, in the majority of instances, a vote in their favor. The professional reformer is always sure of a hearty support; a vote of any other kind would be so strongly misinterpreted that such a gathering is not going to run the risk of such a misunderstanding and will vote a weak positive rather than a strong negative. When, therefore, a Church assembled recently in its annual councils, voted against the general uses of moving pictures, the vote was without strength or value in that it supported a criticism rather than a principle, binding upon no one. Many ministers present were warm supporters of the moving picture; it will therefore not prove a very difficult problem to reach some sort of a profitable decision where these ministers disagree.

Individual ministers as a rule are admitting the value of the moving pictures and many are using them, so that when it comes to a final analysis it is the abuse of the moving pictures which they mean to condemn rather than the use of them, and the disagreement is where to draw the line. Here the reformers and ultra-conservative get in their hair-raising and hair-splitting arguments and these prevail with goodly minded men in a sentimental rather than in a practical way.

Many of those who voted with the majority are themselves either users or favorers of the moving picture and their vote simply means that they think the pictures safe in their own hands and doubtful in the hands of many a someone else. A religious council is not always practical; indeed, it does not always intend to be so, it expects to be interpreted; it makes rules and expects them to be applied; it tries to enforce by stringency; its business is pious rather than of common sense; it expects the latter to be supplied in application on use; it cannot legislate either for all people or purposes; hence its seeming harsh decisions.

In the field at large the ministers are using the pictures; they like them; they teach with them and from them, they recognize and welcome their power, but they object against their indiscriminate use; they object against their abuse; they object to their broad freedom, especially in behalf of the young.

It would seem from this that ministers do not disagree so widely. Their actions must be interpreted. Under all favorable circumstances they are the best friends of the pictures; under unfavorable circumstances they are the bitter enemies of the pictures; they too often demand a standard that the picture world at large cannot give; nevertheless, given a fair standard, a clean field, in the hands of wise exhibitors who use and not abuse with no conflicting conditions, but with the idea of the greatest good for the greatest numbers, the ministers as a whole are the friends of the pictures.

FALLING BEHIND.

The topical pictures are standards in the educational lists; they are among the most important of our educational curriculum; in the past they have done a great work; they have placed the work of the moving pictures in the front ranks among the instructors of all classes of people; they have blazed the way for other things; they are an absolute necessity; they must be continued at their best.

Unforunately during the last few months they have been falling behind in their value, they are treated as being able to maintain their standard on their past reputation. The first great fault in the fact that they are being subject to the axe—or scissors—not that they are being beheaded, but rather that they are being curtailed, or, more truthfully, they are brutally chopped off. As the people's standard picture newspaper they have been the leading power in every picture house and theater. This "chopping off" must stop or their attractive power will be lost. We have been terribly disappointed many times recently to see important subjects suddenly end, without running out even to an abrupt finish. The interest in a scene has been secured, attention riveted and expectant, when lo! it was ended. Where is the fault? Did the cameraman suddenly get tired and think he had taken enough, or did the film censor sacrifice subject for inches? It appears as though the chopping process is to blame. The reel must contain all the subject taken, yet come within the required length, hence the chopping process and a disappointed public, if not too often a disgusted one. The too frequent picturing of fires and railway accidents is another drawback. All fires are alike and there is great similarity in railway accidents. The cameraman need not be rushed to all these events, they are as tiring as the Indians and cowboys of a generation ago and there are plenty of news without every fire and accident that happens. Please give us the old standard again, with the full length to do every incident justice.

Another falling behind is in the abbreviation of the educational subjects. These are too valuable to be given anything but a good and sufficient place in every program. The practice of using them as an attraction and then limiting their value will not in the end pay. The twenty-minute reel has been cut to fifteen or ten minutes, resulting too often in a half reel when the writer knows that the other half has been suppressed. This is abusing the services of an old friend who will be wanted again in the future, and is as bad in principle as in practice. Many of the best houses reported that much strength had been given to their program by the educational picture. Why then slight an old friend? Rather give him more place. He will never disgrace you or go back on you, and no one will ever slight you for being found in his company. The educational picture is your best friend and helper.
